Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated 1st February 1916.

Babu Daya Kishan Seth, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for Respondent No. 1.

LACHHMAN PRASAD v. BALDEO PRASAD.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for sale on a mortgage and two deeds of further charge executed by one Jadunath Singh in favour of the plaintiff-respondent Baldeo Prasad. The defendant-appellant Lachhman Prasad was impleaded as a subsequent transferee of the rights of Jadunath Singh. He, however, claims priority in respect of a previous mortgage of 15th January 1897 in favour of one Chaudhri Fatch Ali, which he redeemed. The learned Subordinate Judge has disallowed his claim on the ground that 29 bighas 16 biswas covered by this mortgage never passed into the possession of Chaudhri Fatch Ali under the prior deed, and the correctness of this finding is one of the two issues which have been contested in appeal.

The other and main issue is whether the plaintiff obtained any title in virtue of the deed of 5th March 1900 in his favour. It is common ground between the parties that the plaintiff's mortgagor, Jadunath Singh, obtained the property in suit under a deed of gift from his maternal grandfather Subba Singh, comprising in all a share of 4 annas 8 pies. The 29 bighas 16 biswas which are the subject of the plaintiff's mortgage form part of 44 bighas 12 biswas 6 biswansis of sir land out of the share of Subba Singh, of which the donee was not to obtain possession until after the deaths of Subba Singh and his wife. The question at issue between the parties is, whether Jadunath Singh obtained under the deed of gift a vested interest in this property which was capable of transfer or merely an expectancy of succession; a transfer of which was forbidden under section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act.

The deed of gift has been admitted by the appellant Lachhman Prasad in the previous suit, the plaint in which is Exhibit 20 on this record. The learned Subordinate Judge based his finding on this admission and on the provisions of the deed as stated in the judgment in that case, Exhibit 23. The actual deed was filed in another record and was not put in. As both parties are fighting as to the nature of the interest admittedly acquired under this deed, we considered that it was impossible for us to decide the issue satisfactorily without seeing the actual deed, and we accordingly directed the respondent to get it back from the Court in which it was filed and file it with an affidavit in order to enable us to pronounce judgment on the issue. The appellant who has been disposed throughout to stand on technical objections has not admitted the deed. But there can be no question that this is the deed in dispute and we accept the affidavit filed by the respondent read with the admission of Lachhman Prasad in the previous suit, Exhibit 20, as sufficient proof of it for the purposes of this case. It is well established that where a deed is not in suit but is merely filed for a collateral purpose, it need not be proved with the same formalities as when it is sought to enforce its provisions in a suit. Although, however, the appellant objected to the production of the deed, he at the same time contends that if properly construed it is in his favour. The terms of the deed, so far as they affect this case, are as follows:—

"And inasmuch as out of this deed of gift 25 plots of sir land amounting to 44 bighas 12 biswas 6 biswansis are excepted after my death and that of my wife he (the donee) shall take possession of these plots also."

The mortgage in favour of the respondent was executed after the death of Subba Singh but in the lifetime of his widow, Musammatt Munna Bibi. The contention of the appellant is that the effect of this clause was to confer on the latter a widow's estate under Hindu Law with the power to represent the estate and the limited power of alienation which such an estate confers, and that the donee acquired no interest in these plots until her death. We can find nothing in the deed to indicate any such intention. On the contrary the donee was to take the land on the same footing as the rest of the share, though his possession was to be postponed till the widow's death. Inasmuch as this part of the instrument was not to take effect till after the testator's death it must, in our opinion, be regarded as a Will so far as these plots of sir land are concerned, and under this testamentary disposition Jadunath Singh was given a vested interest in the land subject only to a life-interest in favour of the widow. In this view of the deed section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act has no application. From the date of the testator's death Jadunath Singh had a subsisting interest in the land which was capable of being transferred. The positions of the executant and his widow under the deed are not parallel. The executant was the owner of the land prior to the deed and retained the power of alienation unless he deprived himself of it under the terms of the deed. The widow's rights on the other hand were derived solely from the deed and were limited by its terms.

The case of Shiam Sundur v. Dilganjan Singh (1) relied on by the appellant is clearly distinguishable. There the person in possession held an ordinary widow's estate and the transferor neither had nor professed to have anything more than a mere expectancy of succession.

The appellant himself has understood the deed in the same sense and indeed has obtained possession of these very plots on the very ground which he now repudiates, namely, that Musammat Munna Bibi had only a life interest. He purchased from Jadunath Singh on 19th January 1901 a 2-annas 6 1/4-pies share in the gifted property but did not obtain actual possession of 24 bighas 4 biswas, the proportionate area of the reserved sir land, because Musammat Munna Bibi was at that time alive and in possession of it. After her death, however, he sued Jadunath Singh for possession and obtained a decree. It is needless to say that if the mortgage to the plaintiff was invalid in respect of this land, the sale-deed in favour of the defendant was equally invalid and indeed one of the issues was whether this land passed under the sale-deed. The plaint in the suit is Exhibit 20 on the record and the judgment is Exhibit 23.

Under these circumstances it is unnecessary for the respondent to fall back on section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, though if it were necessary to do so, we should be prepared to hold that Jadunath Singh did in good faith purport to transfer the full proprietary right. It is argued that the transferee could not in good faith have believed that Jadunath Singh was authorised to transfer the proprietary right, because he could have obtained a copy of the deed of gift which was registered. This argument comes with a very bad grace from the appellant, who himself read the deed as conveying such a right, and obtained a decree on the basis of that interpretation.

On the question of priority we think that the 24 bighas 4 biswas must be deemed to have been included in the mortgage in favour of Chaudhri Fateh Ali which the appellant redeemed and that he is, therefore, entitled to priority in respect of that mortgage. But as Lachhman Prasad has purchased the whole of the property mortgaged with Chaudhri Fateh Ali, he is entitled to claim priority only to the extent of the mortgage money payable by that portion of the said property which was subsequently re-mortgaged with the plaintiff. The Counsel for the parties agree that the 24 bighas 4 biswas of the sir land in question may be deemed to be worth about one-third of the value of the entire share mortgaged. Lachhman Prasad will, therefore, be declared entitled to claim priority in respect of one-third of Rs. 5,000.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed only in so far that the sale of 24 bighas 4 biswas of the sir land in dispute out of 29 bighas 16 biswas mortgaged will be subject to a prior right of Lachhman Prasad to the extent of one-third of Rs. 5,000 in respect of the mortgage made by Jadunath Singh in favour of Chaudhri Fateh Ali, dated the 15th January 1897, which he redeemed. The parties will in the circumstances bear their own costs of this appeal.

Appeal partly allowed.

Minor not properly represented in suit—Decree, validity of—Execution sale—Suit by minor to set aside sale—Limitation applicable—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 12, 144.

Where a minor defendant is not properly represented in a suit, a decree passed against him is a nullity, and the Court has no power to sell the minor's property in execution of the decree. Where such sale takes place, the minor can recover the property from the auction-purchaser even if he is a stranger, and the Article applicable to such a suit by the minor is Article 144 and not Article 12 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. [p. 400, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 12th December 1916.

Mr. Ganpat Rai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Niaz Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In 1903 Zulfikar Khan, father of defendant No. 1, obtained an ex parte decree against Ghulam Kadir, and in execution of that decree the house now in suit was put to auction and knocked down for Rs. 505 to the father of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and defendant No. 4, who got possession in April 1905. Ghulam Kadir was a minor and not properly represented in the suit. He has now attained his majority and sues to recover possession.

The lower Courts have held that the suit is within limitation and have decreed the claim, holding that as the minor was not properly represented the decree is null and void. The auction-purchasers appeal.

The lower Courts have considered Articles 91, 95 and 96 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, and setting them aside as inapplicable have applied Article 144. If that Article applies the suit is within time, having been brought within 12 years from the date of the auction. But the question of Article 12 being applicable seems to have been overlooked entirely. If Article 12 applies the period of limitation is only one year from date of confirmation of sale, and plaintiff gets only one year from the date of his attaining his majority. That he was over 19 at date of institution of suit is not denied; so the suit is time-barred if Article 12 applies.

On behalf of the auction-purchasers it is also urged that apart from limitation, a purchase by a person not a party to the suit in execution of a decree cannot be upset, and here reliance is placed on Krishna (Narendra) Chandra Mandal v. Jogendra Narain Roy (1). In that judgment I find that the distinction between a purchaser who is a party to the suit and a purchaser who is a stranger is clearly defined. So too in the Privy Council ruling in Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (2). But all that the latter ruling lays down is that when a sale has taken place in execution of a decree which is in force at the time, it cannot be upset in the case of the purchaser being a stranger to the suit merely because the decree is afterwards reversed by an Appellate Court. But the question here is whether there was any valid decree in force at the time of the sale. If there was, then the purchaser was not bound to enquire into the correctness of the order for execution, any more than into the correctness of the judgment on which the execution proceeded: [See Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh (3).]

For the plaintiff-respondent it is urged that when the minor is not properly represented, a decree against him is a nullity and the Court has no jurisdiction to sell and he can recover the property sold even from a stranger. In Narsingh Narain v. Jaki Mistry (4), where a married woman was appointed as the guardian of the minor contrary to the provisions of section 457 of the old Civil Procedure Code, the learned Judges (Mukerjee and Tennon, JJ.) held that the proceedings were a nullity so far as the minor was concerned. In Dinabandhu Nandi v. Mashudu Khatun (5), where the minors were not represented, the learned Judges (Mukerjee and Holm-wood, J.J.) held that the decree as against them was "absolutely null and void"

In the face of these two rulings I find it hard to suppose that in Narendra Chandra Mandal v. Jogendra Narain (1), in which the judgment was delivered by Mukerjee, J., anything different was intended. In fact I note that on page 472 it is laid down: "The position consequently was that the infants were not properly before the Court and are in no way bound by the decrees of the 15th December 1905. The sale held under these circumstances did not pass the right, title and interest of the infants. It is consequently indisputable that every one of the purchasers at the execution sale held on 4th February 1907 has failed to acquire the right, title and interest of the infants-defendants in the mortgaged properties. Such purchasers may have imagined that the infants were bound by the decree and may have paid the purchase money on the assumption that they were acquiring the interest of all the mortgagors. But that clearly cannot affect the position of the infants, who are bound neither by the decree nor by the sale consequent thereon." And, higher up on the same page: "It is plain that the two infants-defendants have not been affected in any way by the sale held on the 4th February 1907, because there was at the time no valid and operative decree in force against them."

But joined with the infant defendants was an adult defendant, and so it became necessary for the learned Judges to go on and distinguish between the case of purchasers who were strangers to the suit and purchases made by the decree-holders. I gather that the protection given to the stranger purchasers was limited to the adult defendant's share. So I am of opinion that this judgment does not help the appellants in the present case.

It seems to me that there was no valid decree, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to sell, and that the appellant is not protected by the fact that he was not a party to the suit but a stranger. I do not consider Article 12 applicable to such a case. I think the plaintiff is entitled to ignore the sale. I may here quote Uttam Singh v. Barkat Ali (6), though the Article there discussed is 41, and not 12. I think Article 144 is the Article applicable, and I hold that the suit is within time.

As to the suggestion that the appellants should recover their purchase-money, this is a new suggestion, not raised in the lower Courts. I certainly do not think the plaintiff can be compelled to reimburse him, and as to the decree-holder I note that he was not made a respondent in the lower Appellate Court.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Babus Rup Narain and Ram Ohandra, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for partition, brought by the plaintiff-respondent who claims to be the son of the defendant-appellant. He sued for the partition of a half share out of what he described to be the ancestral property of the family, asserting that his mother, who was defendant No. 2, was entitled only to maintenance. The suit was resisted by the defendant-appellant on various grounds. He denied that the plaintiff was his son or that the property in dispute was his ancestral property. His version was that he was married to the sister of defendant No. 2, that instead of her defendant No. 2 was sent with him after the marriage by fraud, that the fraud was discovered when the defendant No. 2 reached his house and that it was further found that she was pregnant. It was also stated that the defendant-appellant and his mother lodged her in a separate house and gave her maintenance to avoid a public scandal and that she gave birth to the present plaintiff five months after her arrival. It was moreover contended that the defendant-appellant was a Kayasth of the Mathur sub-division and could not have been lawfully married to defendant No. 2, who belonged by birth to a Srivastava family and that the defendant-appellant was a minor on the date of his marriage and on the date on which the plaintiff-respondent was born and was impotent and unable to beget a child. Defendant No. 2 supported the claim of the plaintiff-respondent, except to this extent that she claimed a one-third share in the disputed property.

The learned Subordinate Judge found that defendant No. 2 was lawfully married to the defendant-appellant and that the plaintiff-respondent was their legitimate son. He accordingly decreed the claim for the partition of a one third share in the disputed property, which he found to be the ancestral or joint family property of the plaintiff-respondent and the defendant-appellant.

The grounds of appeal traverse the entire ground taken in the Court below, but the only points to which the learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant has addressed himself are (1) that defendant No. 2 was pregnant at the time of her marriage—her son, the plaintiff-respondent, having been born five months later; and (2) that there could not have been a lawful marriage between her and the defendant-appellant according to law and custom. He does not contest the finding that the defendant-appellant was married to defendant No. 2 and concedes that he is unable to substantiate the plea of fraud set up in the Court below.

There is no satisfactory evidence to show that defendant No. 2 was pregnant at the time of her marriage or that the plaintiff was born 5 months after it. The statement of defendant No. 1 on this point is entirely unreliable. He says that he was married in the month of Asarh 1954 Sambat, i.e., between the 15th June 1897 and the 14th July 1897. But in the application made by him to the Commissioner of the Fyzabad Division on the 2nd June 1897 (Exhibit 19), wherein he asked that his estate might be released from the Court of Wards on the ground that he was already 21 years old, he distinctly admitted that he had been married prior to that date. This application was sent by post and both from the postal seal on the envelope showing that the application reached Fyzabad on the 8th June 1897 and the date borne by the application, there can be no room for doubt that defendant No. 1 was married some time before the 2nd June 1897. Defendant No. 2 and the witnesses produced by the plaintiff depose that the marriage of defendant No. 1 with defendant No. 2 took place in Baisakh 1954 Sambat, which lasted from the 18th April 1897 to the 16th May 1897. Musammāt Mahadei (P. W. No. 2), the elder sister of defendant No. 2, for instance, states that the marriage of defendant No. 2 with defendant No. 1 took place in the beginning of Baisakh. Musammāt Ramdei (P. W. No. 11), the sister of the mother of the plaintiff, says the same. They are corroborated by Mata Prasad, (P. W. No. 5), the brother of defendant No. 2, and Munnu (P. W. No. 7), who was one of the priests who officiated at the marriage ceremony. The evidence produced by defendant No. 1 to the contrary is unreliable. The defendant-appellant has also failed to establish that the plaintiff was born in the month of Katik 1954 Sambat or five months after the marriage and that defendant No. 2 was pregnant at the time she was married. Musammāt Gurdei (D. W. No. 7) has been produced to supply direct evidence of the fact that defendant No. 2 was pregnant at the time of her marriage; but she is a rent-free tenant and ryot of the defendant-appellant and one of her sons is in his service, and her statement cannot, therefore, be trusted. The defendant-appellant alleges that when defendant No. 2 was discovered to be pregnant she was made to live in a separate house and given maintenance; but in his statement before Mr. Ajudhia Pershad, Deputy Magistrate, in a case under section 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, he admitted that defendant No. 2 lived with him for 20 or 22 years. His allegation that the plaintiff was born in Katik is not borne out by any reliable evidence. Defendant No. 2 deposes that he was born in Phagun and her statement is corroborated by the horoscopes produced (Exhibits 17 and 18). Munnu (P. W. No. 7) has given evidence in support of what he called the ishtkal or short horoscope prepared by him when the plaintiff was born. Mahadeo Prasad (P. W. No. 13) deposes that he prepared a full horoscope of the plaintiff in Sanskrit and Urdu in 1903 and that the teva or ishtkal showing the time of birth was given to him by the defendant-appellant, who had sent for him to prepare his and his son's horoscopes. The defendant-appellant has taken objection to the admission of these horoscopes in evidence, but so far as the date of birth and the parentage are concerned these horoscopes represent what was stated to the witnesses who prepared the horoscopes before the present dispute had arisen, and they can be used both as corroborative or rebutting evidence and for the purpose of refreshing the memory.

It has also been pointed out that the time of birth mentioned in the teva or ishtkal prepared by Munnu is 24 gharis after dawn, and that prepared by Mahadeo Prasad is 48 minutes after midday or 16 gharis 6 pals from sunrise. This variation may be due to the nature of the information supplied by the defendant-appellant at the time when the bigger horoscope was prepared and is rather a proof of its genuineness than of its having been concocted during the progress of the suit. Defendant No. 2 tells us that the plaintiff was born about two hours after midday. She deposes that her simant or seventh month of pregnancy ceremony was performed in Pus and that the plaintiff was born in Phagun. She is corroborated by her sister, Musammāt Mahadei, who was examined by Commissioner, and by her brother Mata Prasad (P. W. No. 5). Behari Lal (P. W. No. 6), who attended the barha ceremony of the plaintiff which took place on the 12th day after his birth, and Musammāt Maharaja (P. W. No. 8), and Musammāt Ramdei (P. W. No. 11), who were present in the house of the defendant-appellant at the time of the birth of the plaintiff, bear testimony to the birth of the plaintiff in Phagun, 11 months after the marriage of defendant No. 2 with the defendant-appellant. Musammāt Maharaja is the niece of the mother of the defendant-appellant. Lalta Prasad (D. W. No. 5), who has been examined on behalf of the defendant-appellant, admits that Musammāt Maharaja used to live with Musammāt Raghuraj Kuar, the mother of the defendant-appellant, in Keolapur. Both Musammāt Maharaja and Musammāt Ramdei depose that the statement that defendant No. 2 was pregnant when she came to the house of the defendant-appellant after her marriage is untrue.

The tonsure or mundan ceremony of the plaintiff took place in the third year of his birth. It was attended by Mata Pershad, Bihari Lal, Musammāt Maharaja, Musammāt Ramdei and other relations. The estate of the defendant-appellant was then in charge of the Court of Wards. The account books of the Court of Wards show that on the 3rd October 1901 the defendant-appellant took Rs. 200 from the Court of Wards, saying that he required the same on account of the tonsure ceremony of his son (Exhibit 20). The defendant-appellant tries to explain this entry by stating that he required the money for the purchase of a horse and that he referred to the tonsure ceremony of his son as a pretence for taking it. But the account-books show that another item of Rs. 50 was taken on the 27th May 1901 for the purchase of a horse. The learned Subordinate Judge was thoroughly justified in the face of the above facts in discrediting the evidence adduced by the defendant-appellant.

It is argued on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the marriage of defendant No. 2 was celebrated in a more or less private manner, that even some of the nearest relations of the bride were not invited and that after her marriage she did not visit the house of her parents for 8 or 9 years and was granted by her husband a separate residence and an allowance for her maintenance. It is admitted that Raja Bahadur, the husband of Musammât Naraindei, a sister of defendant No. 2, attended the marriage. There might have been good reasons, not ascertainable at this distance of time, why the other relations were not able to join the marriage. Mata Prasad states that defendant No. 2 visited his house on the occasion of the marriage of Musammât Gaura, his younger sister, and thereafter on other occasions too. There is nothing to show that the defendant-appellant lived separately from defendant No. 2 till about 10 years prior to the suit, when possibly on account of some quarrel or other cause he made a separate provision for her maintenance, giving her later on an allowance of Rs. 10 per mensem in addition to the sir land assigned to her.

Had defendant No. 2 been found pregnant a day after she was brought to the house of the defendant-appellant and a son born to her five months later, it is hardly likely that the defendant-appellant would have described that boy as his son when he obtained Rs. 200 from the Court of Wards for the expenses of his tonsure ceremony. It is still more unlikely, when disputes arose between the plaintiff and the defendant-appellant in consequence of the former having given evidence for

Abdul Ghafur Khan in his suit against the latter, that the defendant-appellant should have described the plaintiff as his son in his deposition before the arbitrator to whom the said suit was referred for decision (Exhibit 14). The evidence of Nawab Ali, an old Pleader of Bara Banki, shows that the defendant-appellant had entrusted the plaintiff to his guardianship for 3 or 4 years in order that the plaintiff might stay at Bara Banki and receive his education there. The defendant-appellant used to supply the expenses of his education and maintenance, while he was studying in the High School at Bara Banki. Nawab Ali states that the defendant-appellant told him that the plaintiff was his son and used to send the pay of the cook and the kahar who attended him and the expenses of his maintenance to Abdul Ghafur Khan, clerk. The suit filed by Abdul Ghafur Khan related to money which he claimed to have expended in excess of what he had received from the defendant-appellant and was decreed by the arbitrator to whom it was referred (Exhibit 15). The defendant-appellant did not then repudiate his liability as the father of the plaintiff. In a suit filed by the defendant-appellant against Sumer Singh for damages for malicious prosecution it was expressly admitted by the defendant-appellant that the plaintiff was his son, born of lawful wedlock (Exhibit 16). These admissions, read with the other evidence adduced in the case, strengthen the presumption raised by section 112 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) in favour of the legitimacy of the plaintiff, and the fact that defendant No. 2 was receiving a separate allowance from ten years prior to the suit is insufficient to rebut it.

It was contended in the Court below on behalf of the defendant-appellant that he was born impotent and was incapable of begetting issue. But as the learned Subordinate Judge has pointed out, no evidence of any value has been produced by him on that point and the learned Counsel who appears for him has made no attempt to support that contention here. There is also no satisfactory proof that it was impossible for the defendant-appellant to have access to defendant No. 2 at the time when the plaintiff could have been begotten. Defendant No. 2 swears that after the birth of the plaintiff another daughter was born of her who died shortly afterwards and though that fact is denied by the defendant-appellant, it is hardly likely that her statement on that point could be incorrect. From the time the plaintiff gave evidence for Abdul Ghafur Khan in support of his suit against the defendant-appellant the plaintiff and the defendant-appellant have been at loggerheads. The story told by the defendant-appellant is inconsistent with his previous conduct during that litigation and prior to it and cannot be accepted.

The next point for consideration is whether the defendant-appellant could have been lawfully married to the mother of the plaintiff. The grandfather of the defendant-appellant was a person named Naubat Rai, who was a Mathur Kayasth. On the death of his first wife he took into his keeping the widow of a Srivastava Kayasth and had a son, Bachchu Lal, born of her. He possessed certain landed property and was anxious that his property should devolve on Bachchu Lal after his death. But he was conscious that the mother of Bachchu Lal stood in no better position than that of a concubine and that Bachchu Lal was his illegitimate son. At the first Regular Settlement Naubat Rai tried to have it recorded in the wajib-ul-arz that where a person had no children by his lawfully married wife, the son born of a woman not lawfully married would get possession of the entire property left by his father, but the other co-sharers of the village objected. Eventually an order was passed that the wishes of Naubat Rai should be recorded so far as his interest in the village was concerned, and this was actually done (Exhibit A-8). It is noticeable, however, that Bachchu Lal was then admitted by Naubat Rai to have been born of a woman who was not lawfully married and who was of a different family. There is also evidence to show that that woman was a Srivastava Kayasth by birth, that Bachchu Lal got married in a Srivastava family and that his daughter was similarly married to Behari Lal (P. W. No. 6), who was a Srivastava Kayasth. It is clear, therefore, that although Bachchu Lal was of illegitimate birth, he was treated and accepted by Srivastava Kayasths as a member of their community; and as pointed out in Daryai Singh v. Narpat Singh (1) and Ram Kumari, In the matter of (2), the assimilation of such a person into a particular caste renders his marriage with a girl of such a caste open to no objection. The Kayasth community is divided into 12 sub-castes; but Bachchu Lal, the father of the defendant-appellant, was not of pure descent. His mother was a Srivastava and his father was a Mathur. Ordinarily a Kayasth of one sub-division does not marry in another sub-division, but no such restriction is recognised by the Hindu Law. Assuming, however, that there is such a custom, the evidence about which is not very clear, it cannot apply to persons born of mixed descent. They are treated as belonging to the sub-division which accepts and assimilates them, and the marriage of the defendant-appellant with defendant No. 2 cannot, therefore, be treated as invalid.

It is not disputed that Bachchu Lal was lawfully married, and if Bachchu Lal was lawfully married to a Srivastava girl, though he was illegitimate, as the evidence shows he was so married, the marriage of the defendant-appellant with the mother of the plaintiff cannot be regarded as invalid.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

RATANLAL CHOONILAL PANALAL—

APPELLANT

THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER FOR THE CITY OF BOMBAY AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS.

City of Bombay Improvement Act (IV Bom. of 1898), ss. 31, 41, 42, 45—City of Bombay Municipal Act (III Bom. of 1898), ss. 297, 300, 301—Compulsory expropriation and impropriation of owners of land adjoining streets—Owner, whether bound to pay for compulsory impropriation—"Street to be formed," meaning of—Vendor and purchaser—Unpaid purchase-money—Interest, when begins to run.

The main object of the City of Bombay Improvement Act, 1898, by which the Bombay Improvement Trust was constituted, was to set up with sufficient powers a street-making authority, and when its function as such was expired, to have the street which had been re-constructed or made by the Trust thereupon handed back to the Corporation. [p. 412 col. 2.]

Section 41 and section 45 of the Act are correlative. They both refer to that site which is used as a street and for the purposes thereof and to no other. The "street to be formed" which vests in the Trust under section 41 of the Act is identical with the formed street which re-vests in the Corporation under section 45. [p. 413, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, the "regular line of a street" was altered and the owner of adjacent land was required to set forward his building on part of the old street:

Held, (1) that the strip of old street which was never formed into the new street had never vested in the Improvement Trust; that it remained the property of the Municipal Corporation; and that when such owner of adjacent land was ordered by the Commissioner to set forward his building upon it, it became his property in virtue of section 301 (3) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act; [p. 413, col. 2.]

(2) that as the Act made no provision for payment by such owner, no price was payable by him for the projection on which he was required or allowed to build [p. 413, col. 2.]

In the case of a sale or acquisition of land, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, interest on the unpaid price runs from the date when the new owner enters into possession. [p. 414, cols. 1 & 2.]

Consolidated appeals from two decrees of the Bombay High Court (Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Batchelor, J.), dated the 16th April 1916, confirming those of the same Court in its original jurisdiction.

FACTS of the case will sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment. The appellant, when he applied to re-build his premises, had been required to set back in one place and set forward in another: it was admitted he was entitled to compensation for the set-back, but as he refused to pay anything for the set-forward, the Bombay Improvement Trust withheld payment of the compensation for the set-back, the amount of which had been provisionally agreed. Appellant sued to recover this compensation. This suit is hereafter alluded to as "the first suit." In "the second suit" the Trust sought to eject appellant from the set-forward land, on which he had built. They claimed that the said land had vested in them under section 41 of the Improvement Trust Act, Davar, J., decreed both suits. As to the second, referring to the set-forward land he held:—

"This piece of land by virtue of a notification under section 41 of the Improvement Trust Act and by reason of the provisions thereof became vested in the Improvement Trust in the year 1905, and from that day to this it has remained so vested in the Trust. It has never been handed back to the Municipality and has not been re-vested in that body. The plaintiffs, therefore, are the legal owners of this piece of land. They have never given the defendant or his mother any permission, leave or license to build on their land. The Municipality were under a misapprehension when they sanctioned and ordered the defendant to set forward his building on this land. The defendant's Engineers made no enquiries into the title of this land, but they shared in the mistake of the Municipality. The Improvement Trust are not bound by anything that the Municipality has done in this matter and their rights in the land and in the ownership thereof are not in the slightest degree affected by any action on the part of the Municipal authorities.

The next question to consider is, whether the plaintiffs are estopped from now reclaiming possession of this piece of land. Mr. Setalwad said that the plaintiffs had stood by and allowed the defendant to build without correcting his misimpression, and, therefore, they could not now eject him from the land. It seems to me that no question whatever of estoppel against the plaintiffs arises in this suit. The Improvement Trust left the questions of set-forwards and set-backs to be enforced by the Municipality, as building plans went to the Municipal Authorities and not to the Improvement Trust. The defendant never suggested, during the whole time that his building was under construction, that he was not bound to pay for the set forward land. He led the Municipal Commissioner to believe that he was going to pay for the set forward land. The Improvement Trust took it for granted that the set-forward was enforced by the Municipality in the ordinary way and on the usual terms. There was, therefore, no reason to stop the defendant from building or to correct any misimpressions. The Municipal Commissioner has gone so far as to offer by an arrangement with the Improvement Trust to give the defendant a good title to this land if he paid for it. Far from there being any question of estoppel against the plaintiffs, it seems to me that if this had been a suit to enforce payment for the set-forward land, it would have been a difficult position for the defendant to maintain that he was not estopped from denying his liability to pay for the same. The defendant asked to be permitted to build on the set-forward land; that permission was given to him and a formal order for set forward was made as desired by him. He took possession of that land, and built his house five storeys high thereon and during the whole time he kept up the pretence that he was going to pay for such land. Five years afterwards, for the first time he disputed his liability to pay. Throughout all this time he had been masquerading under false pretences. He carried on long correspondence through his Solicitors, which on his side is by no means distinguished by candour or straightforwardness. Correspondence such as was carried on, on the defendant's behalf, does not help or advance his cause.

The defendant's conduct throughout has been conspicuously unscrupulous and transparently dishonest. Though the defendant is a minor, he is very near the full age limit, and is apparently able to decide for himself. The well-meant efforts of Mr. Setalwad, which I am glad to acknowledge here with appreciation, failed to move him or his mother and next friend to reconsider their position and to adopt a reasonable and honest attitude. He persisted throughout in maintaining the position which his Solicitors took up in their letter of the 7th of September 1911. Every effort to save money and obtain an unfair advantage has been made by the defendant throughout the trial of this case. After all these long years at the hearing for the first time he attempted to dispute the area of the set-forward land. He called an Engineer in support of this contention. The less said about the evidence of that witness the better. Mr. Sanjana, who had actually measured the land in conjunction with the Municipal Officer, Harkissandas, and had initialled the measurements in token of their correctness, was called by the defendant, but Mr. Setalwad deliberately refrained from asking him any questions on this point. The attempt was abandoned, because it was both hopeless and dishonest. This is the man who asks the Court to exercise its equitable jurisdiction in his favour and compel the bare trustee, as he calls the Improvement Trust Board, to convey to him what the beneficiaries, as he calls the Municipality, gave him. In other words, having obtained other people's land by false pretences, he asks the Court to help him to retain the same. He asks, in the alternative and in the event of all the devices on his part failing to be allowed, to retain the land on payment. I refuse to give him any such relief. The Municipal Commissioner has treated this man with conspicuous fairness. He has always offered to accept reasonable payment for the land and procure for him a good title. The defendant has deliberately chosen to fight the case to the last, with the knowledge that the Court regarded his conduct as dishonest and he had no answer to the charge except that he had been advised that the law allowed him to take up the position he had done. He has taken his chances and he must take the consequences. His last prayer that he may be granted compensation in the event of his being ejected, is a prayer which in its effrontery is only equalled by the consistent dishonesty of the conduct throughout of Mr. Ratanlal Chhunilal Panalal. In my opinion he is not entitled to any consideration or help from the Court. He is found to be in possession of the plaintiffs' land without their leave or license and without a title thereto. Under the circumstances of the present case, the plaintiffs have, in my opinion, acted quite properly in filing this suit and are justified in re-claiming possession of their land."

With regard to the suit brought by appellant to recover compensation for the set back land, Davar, J., observed:—

"I have pronounced decree in favour of the plaintiff Ratanlal in the first suit. The amount decreed in his favour will not carry any interest. The moneys were always at his disposal. He could have taken those moneys at any time if he had chosen to act with common honesty. His refusal to pay for the set-forward land and his efforts to retain possession of that land without paying for it have necessitated the whole of this litigation. Although I give him 'a decree in the first suit, that decree will not carry interest on the amount decreed nor will it carry any costs. I have carefully considered the question of costs in the first suit. Having regard to the plaintiff's conduct throughout, I seriously considered whether I ought not to make him pay the defendant's costs of the first suit even though he obtains his decree. On a fuller consideration, however, I have come to the conclusion that the proper order in the first case is to leave both parties to bear their own costs. The defendant Ratanlal in the second case will pay the plaintiffs' costs of that suit. Such costs to include all costs occasioned by third party notice. The defendant must also pay the costs of the defendant in the first suit (the Municipal Commissioner) occasioned by third party notice in the second suit."

Davar, J.'s decision was upheld on appeal by the Appellate Bench of the Bombay High Court (Basil Scott, C. J., and Batchelor, J.). Hence the present appeals.

Messrs. P. O. Lawrence, K. C., and E. B. Raikes, for the Appellants, submitted that there was no power to make appellant pay for the set-forward land. That land was compulsorily vested in him and it would be strange that he should have to pay for it. The provisions as to compensation are to be found in the Bombay Municipal Act, (Bombay Act III of 1888) sections 289 (1), (2) and (3), 297, 298 (1) and (3), 300, and 301 (2) and (3). If the Corporation require us to set forward, it has to pay compensation for any damage thereby caused to us, but there is no provision for payment by the owner for land which he is compelled to occupy.

We say the land was ours already: we were entitled usque ad medium filum at any rate, and directly public rights ended the land vested in us absolutely. The notice which the Municipality gave us, intimating under section 346 of the Bombay Municipal Act their disapproval of our plans for re-building, and giving us permission to re-build only if we set forward, operated under section 301 (3) to convey the land to us: or rather the surface right which is all the Corporation ever had.

[LORD SHAW.—No "terms and conditions" are set forth. If they wanted to make them they should have inserted them].

Whether or not the land is ours, the Trust cannot maintain this suit. They have no title themselves: at all events no title which will support an action for ejectment. They claim to have got the land under section 41 of Bombay Act IV of 1898. They say it did not re-vest in the Corporation under section 45 (2), because on account of their own alteration of the line of the street the whole width of Lohar Chawl was not taken and the set-forward land was not included in the new street. We say that they had no right under section 41 to acquire public land unless they were going to make it into a street: but in any case they were only bare trustees.

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—If they take too much land does not the surplus re-vest with the other?]

The superficial interest anyhow re-vested.

[LORD SHAW.—Under the notification the land was acquired only for the purposes of the street scheme.]

The Trust was merely a street-making authority, the land only vested in them in that capacity. Before we began to build they altered the scheme and their interest in the surface, which was all they ever had, ceased. A vesting claim must be construed according to the purpose for which the vesting is to take place, and operates during the time for which the land is required for that purpose and no longer.

re build by the Municipal Commissioner. The two bodies—the Trust and the Corporation—worked hand in glove: they combined to make us build under penalties. The Trust had no power to make us build up to the new line. The machinery was supplied by the Municipal Commissioner. We were authorised to build by him, and whether he authorised us on his own behalf or as agent of the Trust is immaterial. It may be that an irregular procedure was adopted in giving us the order to re build: but neither the Trust nor the Corporation can be heard to say that: they are estopped. It is not true that the Corporation assented to the building under a mistake as to the ownership of the land: but even if they did it is immaterial.

The land on which we set forward was our own land, subject only to a vesting of the surface for street purposes in the Corporation: it cannot, therefore, be inferred that there was a right in the Corporation or in the Trust to claim payment. If it be looked upon as a case of one requiring their permission to build on this land, they could have made the payment a condition of such permission under section 301 (3): this was never done. It would be strange law if there were compulsory vesting plus an obligation to pay.

In the first suit we want interest, which we have been refused merely because we declined to pay what was not due for something else. We were entitled to interest as part of the compensation. It is not competent to respondents to object that only the Small Cause Court could deal with the question of compensation. They did not appeal and the suit is now res judicata.

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—It is not really a question of jurisdiction, but whether in the circumstances there was a right of action.]

The Hon'ble Mr. F. Russell, K. C., and Mr. Sheldon, for the Respondents.—This is the first time it has been suggested that the Corporation were aware, when they authorised the building on the set-forward land, that such land was vested in the Trust. It is also the first time it has been suggested that the strip of set-forward land belonged to appellant.

As to the first suit we do not take any point as to jurisdiction, but we contend he is not entitled to interest. Interest can only be recovered in one of three ways: 1. By the law merchant; 2. by Statute; 3. as damages. Section 301 of Bombay Act III of 1888 gives no right to damages.

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—Does not "compensation" imply either payment down, or payment later with interest?]

All they are entitled to is compensation for the value of the land: the Statute does not say, "and damages for delay in paying." Sub-section (4) of section 301 gives the owner power to go to the Small Cause Court to get the compensation assessed. When the transaction is in the nature of a sale and purchase, arbitrators may have power to award interest, but if there has been a long delay between the date when the money was payable and the proceedings, interest will not be awarded unless that delay is due to the fault of the persons sought to be charged: Caledonian Ry. v. Carmichael (3).

There was no sum ascertained until the judgment of the trial Judge: no debt, till the sum was awarded or an offer assented to. It was their own fault they did not get their money long ago.

[Mr. P. O. Lawrence.—The House of Lords has settled that interest is only payable from the date when possession is taken. (Vide also section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.)]

As to the second suit, there was no compulsory appropriation. Section 300 of Act III of 1888 gives no power to anyone to make people build. It only applies when the initial request comes from the owner. The Municipal Commissioners cannot force a man to carry his building up to the "regular line of the street" unless he is re-building. Appellant was permitted, not required, to build upon the set-forward land. In substance what was done was done at his request and for his benefit. If he had said: "I want to build upon the street and I won't pay for it," the Corporation could have imposed a payment as a condition to their consent. We say the

As to title, the strip of land became vested in the Improvement Trust under section 41 of Act IV of 1908 as part of their property, being land which under section 31 they thought was required for the scheme. Under section 45 (2) the land constituting Princess Street re-vested in the Corporation, leaving this strip vested in the Trust, which is a permanent body with power to hold lands. Nothing has ever taken away this strip from the Trust.

[LORD SHAW.—The policy of the Statute is to transfer to the Trust the soil of the street, and when the street is made to re-vest it in the Municipality. It would be inconvenient to have these little strips all over Bombay belonging neither to the inhabitants nor to the Municipality.]

There is no clashing of jurisdictions. The duty of the Municipality is to maintain the street. The whole thing is worked out in section 63, where powers to hold land are given not to the Corporation, but to the Board, vide also section 64.

[MR. AMERU ALI.—It is suggested that the Trust only holds land for a specific purpose. The Statute says, "for the purposes of the Act.]"

Those purposes are numerous. The strip vested in the Trust under the Act, and the Act does not say it vested only for a particular purpose.

[LORD SHAW.—But section 41 is limited. This strip has never been included in a street.]

When the notification was issued the strip was part of a street "to be formed." The words "the part required" do not mean de facto required: when the street is formed the Corporation gets the formed street and nothing else: the rest remains vested in the Trust.

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—I suggest that sections 41 and 45 stand together. It is not contemplated there shall be any extra strip: you are to have only the land actually required for the street. I don't see how the Trust can be heard to say that this is land which they have taken under section 41, but which does not go to the Corporation under section 45.]

It was land which the Trust thought they would want—vide section 31.

[SIR W. PHILLIMORE.—That does not affect section 41. A short method is provided of acquiring, by a mere notice, certain lands, but you get that land only if it is really wanted.]

The method is confined to land which you require as part of the street: if you don't require it as that, you may get possession but you don't get property.]

Section 31 provides the scheme. "Included" in section 41 means included in the scheme— included in the site of a street to be formed at the date of the notice. Everything turns on the bona fide inclusion of the site in the original scheme. Section 41 deals with a street to be formed: section 45 with a street actually formed: they are not correlative.

There is no general rule that a vesting clause vests property only sub modo: it is a question of the construction of the particular Act. In Rolls v. St. George Southwork Vestry (1), the words construed were "streets, being highways." Here the Act vests the land in the Corporation absolutely. Section 289 may leave the matter doubtful, but section 290 is clear.

[Mr. P. O. Lawrence, referred to Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. G. I. P. Railway Co. (4).]

That case was decided on totally different grounds. What Lord Haldane said on the point as to vesting is ambiguous and anyhow was only obiter dictum.

Mr. Sheldon, followed: The City of Bombay Improvement Board was constituted in 1898 for purposes set out in the preamble of Act IV of 1898. They are accountable as a public body for this strip of land: if they let it go to the Municipal Corporation they would be surcharged by the Auditor-General.

Mr. P. O. Lawrence replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD SHAW.—These are consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, dated the 16th April 1916, confirming decrees which are dated the 15th October 1914 in two suits which were instituted in its original jurisdiction.

of the City of Bombay, against the appellant, is for a declaration of the plaintiffs' property in a certain piece of land, and for the ejectment therefrom of the defendant, the present appellant, and for delivery forthwith by him of possession thereof. The land has been built over. The issue raised is serious, affecting as it may do many other frontage sites in Bombay.

The position of the block of property (of which the piece just mentioned forms a part) is as follows. It is a corner site having one frontage to the east—Kalbadevi Road, the other frontage to the north—to Princess Street, in the City of Bombay. Princess Street is made on the site of what was formerly Lohar Chawl Street. The piece of land from which the appellant is sought to be ejected faces Princess Street. The primary question for the consideration of the Board is,—who owns that piece of land?

The plaintiff, Ratanlal Choonilal Panalal, is the proprietor of the corner block of ground. In the year 1906 his mother and natural guardian, he being then an infant of 9 years of age, wished to develop the property by erecting certain new buildings thereon. Steps were accordingly taken to give the notices required in the circumstances to the Corporation. No question arises as to the regularity of these proceedings. Building lines had been drawn up for the streets of Bombay by the Municipal Authorities under statutory powers, and in the course of disposing of the application to put down the new buildings on the corner block in question orders or requirements were issued that these lines should be conformed to.

With regard to the east frontage, namely, that to Kalbadevi Road, the order required that the line of new buildings to be erected should be set back. This was done. This involved the sacrifice to the owner of 28'41 square yards of site. It is admitted by the respondents that the Corporation must pay for this ground under the Bombay Act No. III of 1888.

With regard to the frontage to Princess Street formerly Lohar Chawl Street, it was required of the plaintiff not that he should set back his building line, but that that line should be carried forward. This also was done and the buildings were erected, according, in all respects, to the requirements made and to plans which were submitted to and sanctioned by both the authorities, namely, the Corporation and the Improvement Trust. Details of these points need not be given: the real facts are admitted.

The attitude of the Corporation appears to be that the one of these transactions is a legitimate set-off in law against the other. In this, they are supported by the Bombay Improvement Trust, which puts forward the claim that it, under its Act of constitution, is the owner of that projecting piece of ground facing Princess Street, which had to be so to speak absorbed into the block so as to comply with the throwing forward of the building line. This would seem to be an answer to the plea of set-off, as the debt due by the Corporation could not be compensated in respect of a claim by the Improvement Trust. But these two authorities are hand and glove, and this not improperly. It is in the public interest that they should work together, if this can be done in conformity with the various Statutes. The mode of co-operation adopted in the present case was somewhat unusual. The Corporation, claiming as owner, made a demand to be paid a price for the site fronting Princess Street over which the appellant had been forced to throw his building forward so as to conform with the required buildingline. At first there was an inclination to consider that demand; but differences, delays, and further enquiry ensued, and finally the plaintiff refused this demand. Thereupon the Trust instituted their suit, craving inter alia ejectment of the plaintiff. This, if decreed, would of course mean the total destruction of a large and important section of the plaintiff's buildings, all erected according to plan and by the sanction and with the knowledge of the Corporation and Trust as stated.

This situation involves an investigation as to the important and fundamental question already stated, namely, who owns this piece of ground? Unless the Improvement Trust can establish its ownership of the site of the projection in question, namely, that facing Princess Street, it cannot, of course, have any title to eject the plaintiff therefrom.

By the City of Bombay Improvement Act, IV of 1898, the respondents as a Board of Trustees were constituted. Among its powers are those of making street schemes, and by section 1 it is provided that the street scheme "shall within the limits of the area comprised in the scheme provide for (a) the acquisition of any land which will in the opinion of the Board be necessary for or affected by the execution of the scheme; (b) relaying out all or any land including the construction of buildings and the formation and alteration of streets."

It is admitted that Lohar Chawl Street was in 1905 vested in the Corporation. The Trust state in their plaint that on the 17th January 1905 they intimated to the Corporation that that street so vested in it was required by the plaintiff to form part of Princess Street, a street which was then about to be formed by the Trust under a scheme to be carried out by it as provided for by the City of Bombay Improvement Act. The meaning of this is that, to begin with, the Trust took over Lohar Chawl Street just as it found it.

This was two years before the appellant began to build. In point of fact, he began in February 1907; and he began upon lines prescribed by the Corporation, and known and approved by the Trust as so prescribed. His building line did de facto project over the old line of Lohar Chawl Street and come forward to a new line arranged by the authorities as that upon which Princess Street was to run.

How had this change from the old frontage of Lohar Chawl Street to a new frontage for Princess Street occurred? It had occurred for the simplest of all reasons, namely, that between 1905 and 1907 the Trust, in working out its scheme of reconstruction, discovered that it would be more advantageous to run the line of Princess Street so as to carry it forward at certain portions, of which the bit of site in question is one, and to carry it back at other portions. The Trust accordingly communicated that new Princess Street line to the Corporation, sending a plan showing exactly the new and forward regular building line. To that line the Corporation officers duly worked, and to that line the appellant was ordered, most properly, to conform. And, most properly, he did so. In obedience to this requirement the buildings were erected, and they conformed exactly with the forward frontage demanded. As Mr. Delves, the Trust's deputy land manager, testifies—

"The Trust officers knew that the defendant's building was being constructed on this set-forward land. . . . The Trust took no objection to the construction of the defendant's building while the building work was going on. . . . The Trust never claimed nor thought of claiming the set-forward land back from the defendant till the Municipality asked us to do so."

It was in these circumstances that the suit for ejectment of the plaintiff was brought by the Trust, upon the averment that in 1907 his mother "unlawfully entered into and took possession thereof." This is how the matter stands in fact. How it stands in law depends upon the claim which the Trust puts forward and asks to be judicially declared, that the piece of land "is the property of and vested in it." This claim in law will now be examined.

As stated, the history of the buildings has been that they have been erected to conform to requirement, upon the new and forward Princess Street line and not upon the old Lohar Chawl Street line. The question is, what is the fate of the property between these two lines? The Trust maintains that when it gave its original intimation to acquire up to the Lohar Chawl Street line the effect of that was to vest in the Trust all the ground so embraced, that is to say, not only the ground on which Princess Street was in fact formed, but also the strips on which it was not formed. The Municipality for the purposes of this litigation appears to acquiesce in this view, and the learned Judges in the Courts below agree. In the opinion of the Board this is a mistake.

The effect of the mistake would be to produce in the City of Bombay an extraordinary situation. Many properties fronting ordinary streets belonging to the Corporation would find themselves frontaging property belonging to the Trust by virtue, it is contended, of the mere intimation that the Trust required the old street for making the new. But when the new street came to be constructed, it would be within the power of the Trust to throw the new and actual building line forward with the result that not only would it become the owner of the street as ultimately formed, but it would also become de facto the owner of all the strips between the line of the old street and the line of the new. All the frontagers so situated in Bombay would consequently and de jure be put into the position of owning hinterland instead of frontage land and be subject to the disadvantages for commercial and other purposes of all that this implies. It was contended by the learned Counsel for the respondents that legally and logically the Trust being the owner of these strips it could do with them what it liked with the assent of the Corporation, that is to say, it could let them or build upon them as its own property, thus "blinding" all the old frontagers' sites and buildings.

It is accordingly necessary to see what actually is the true extent of the powers of the Trust on this topic. These are contained in the City of Bombay Municipal Act No. III of 1882, which gave certain powers to the Corporation, which powers were by section 42 of Act IV of 1898 declared to "apply to streets or parts thereof which may become vested in the Board under this Act during such period as the same shall respectively remain so vested and for the purposes of this Act." The language of this section reflects pretty clearly the main object of the Statute, which was to set up with sufficient powers a street-making authority, and, when its function as such was expired, to have the street which had been re-constructed or made by the Trust thereupon handed back to the Corporation.

By section 41 it was provided as follows:—

"Whenever under any improvement or street scheme the whole or any part of an existing public street or other land vested in the Corporation is included in the site of any part of a street to be formed, altered, widened, diverted, raised, re-arranged, or re-constructed by the Board, the Board shall give notice to the Commissioner that the whole, or a part as the case may be, of such existing street or other land (hereinafter called the 'part required') is required by them as part of a street to be dealt with as aforesaid, and the part required shall thereupon, subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) of section 45, be vested in the Board; provided that nothing in this section contained shall be deemed to affect the rights or powers of any Municipal Authority under Chapters IX and X respectively of the Municipal Act in or over any Municipal drain or water-work."

By section 45 (2) it was provided that "the Commissioner shall on being satisfied that any street formed by the Board has been duly levelled, paved," etc., and drained and lighted, and, in short, thoroughly completed and the work of the Trust as a street making authority finished, then "such street shall thereupon vest or re vest, as the case may be, in the Corporation, and the Corporation shall thenceforward maintain, keep in repair, light, and cleanse such street."

Not a word is said in these sections to indicate either (1) that the building line of the street must, once indicated, remain by reason of that original indication, and not be open to change or putting forward should experience suggest this to be for the best; nor (2) is anything said to indicate that the street taken over "to be formed" is anything different in dimensions from the street to be handed back when formed.

Upon the first point the Bombay Act No. III, and no doubt the practice of the Municipality thereunder confute it. The section referred to is as follows:—

"297.—(1.) The Commissioner may—

(a.) Prescribe a line on each side of any public street; .

(b.) From time to time, but subject in each case to his receiving the authority of the Corporation in that behalf, prescribe a fresh line in substitution for any line so prescribed, or for any part thereof.

* * * * *

"(2.) The line for the time being prescribed shall be called 'the regular line of the street.'"

It cannot be suggested that the Trust were, as compared with the Municipality, prohibited from "prescribing a fresh line."

As to the second point, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that these two sections, the one as to taking over a street "to be formed," and the other as to handing the formed street back are correlative to each other. The section does not mean merely "intended to be formed" when a notice is made, but it refers to that ground and no other which is used as a street and for the purposes thereof, and that no transfer from the Municipality is effected to the Trust of anything else. If, therefore, a line originally indicated is changed, the line of the street to be formed is changed and the whole transaction is modified in this sensible and practical manner. It is only in this way that the word "re-vest" in the Corporation becomes intelligible. What is to re-vest in the Municipality is just that which when formed as a street had been the subject of that interim divestiture to the Trust as the street forming authority. And the whole theory of the Trust's case, namely, that in virtue of a notice taking over from the Municipality a certain street of Bombay to be formed as a new street by the Trust, thereby vested the whole of the old street in it, although a strip of the old street never was formed as a new street, falls to the ground.

The Trust's action was—in conjunction with that of the officers of the Municipality—much more reasonable, namely, that when the line of the new street was made the frontager was required to put forward his building to conform to it. And this, in the opinion of the Board, was not only reasonable in practice but was correct in law and in accordance with a sound construction of the Statutes.

What then happened to the strip of old street which was never "formed" into the new street? The answer is that nothing happened to it. It remained under the jurisdiction, and in all respects as before the property of the Municipality. To it as such accordingly, when the frontager was required to put forward his buildings over it, the third sub section of section 301 of the Municipal Act of 1888 expressly applies. It is as follows:—

"(3). If the additional land which will be included in the premises of any person required or permitted under the last preceding section to set forward a building belongs to the Corporation, the order or permission of the Commissioner to set forward the building shall be a sufficient conveyance to the said owner of the said land; and the terms and conditions of the conveyance shall be set forth in the said order or permission."

The result is plain: the projection, that is to say, the site between the old street line and the new, ex adverso, of the appellant's property, became his in ownership. It is his now. The title of the Trust to it fails, and with it fails the suit, whether for declaration or ejectment.

There remains to be dealt with the suit by the appellant for the price of the ground taken from him as the result of the compulsory throwing back of his line of building facing Kalbadevi Road and the absorption into that road by the Municipality of a portion of appellant's ground. Payment for this has been decreed and the decree in this respect will stand.

But two further questions arise in regard to that suit, viz., as to costs and as to interest on the price.

Costs were refused on account of the view entertained in the Courts below as to the conduct of the appellant in refusing to set off against that price a price for the Princess Street projection. The question of whether a price is exigible for that projection does not arise directly as matter of suit; but it is necessary to express an opinion upon it because a determination upon it will govern the questions both of costs and of interest.

In the opinion of the Board while the Act makes provision for the compulsory expropriation of an owner, it makes no provision whatever for a payment by the owner in respect of what may be termed compulsory impropropriation. Some reasons occur for the view that it might have been so, and some occur for an opposite view. These were for the Legislature. What the Legislature has done, and all that it has done upon that subject, is contained in section 301 (2) of the Municipal Act. It is as follows:—

"(2). If, in consequence of any order to set forward a building made by the Commissioner, . . . the owner of such building sustains any loss or damage, compensation shall be paid to him by the Commissioner for such loss or damage."

RATANLAL CHOONILAL PANALAL v. MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER, BOMBAY.

Such loss or damage may be easily figured: the compulsory projection may involve most serious cost; the whole foundations of the old building may be rendered useless, and the costs of new may be heavy; alterations of plans, levels, elevations, and the like might all be involved in particular cases, and, in short, the Legislature has recognised, not a price to be paid by the owner for compulsory impropration, but damages to the owner if such can be qualified in consequence thereof. Their Lordships in these circumstances cannot look upon the suggested right in the Trust or the Municipality to receive a compulsory price for the Princess Street proprietors to be justified by the Statute. Accordingly, the alleged right or duty of set-off fails.

In these circumstances the plaintiff and his advisers were, of course, entirely warranted in refusing to concede the set-off claimed. It was not, in the opinion of the Board, justified by law. This renders it unnecessary to deal in detail with certain derogatory observations, more particularly by Davar, J., culminating in his assertion that the appellant's conduct "has been conspicuously unscrupulous and transparently dishonest." When it is remembered that in all the most important of these transactions the appellant was an infant of 9 years of age, the suggestion of such precocity in wickedness in Bombay seems sufficiently answered. But it may suffice to say that, hard to bear as these accusations must have been, they do not appear to their Lordships to have been in any respect warranted by the facts or by the law of either case. In the opinion of the Board the position taken up by the appellant in these suits has been completely justified, and was throughout in accordance with law. Costs will accordingly follow the event.

On the point of interest, on the price payable by the Municipality, two matters were agreed at the Bar. In the first place, the rate of interest, should it be allowed, was arranged at 6 per cent. In the second place, it was agreed that the Municipality has been in possession of the ground since the 30th June 1909.

The Board is of opinion that the right to interest depends upon the following broad and clear consideration. Unless there be something in the contract of parties which necessarily imports the opposite, the date when one party enters into possession of the property of another is the proper date from which interest on the unpaid price should run. On the one hand, the new owner has possession, use, and fruits; on the other, the former owner, parting with these, has interest on the price. This is sound in principle, and authority fully warrants it. See especially Sir W. Grant's judgment in Fludyer v. Cocker (5), and also see Greenock Harbour Trustees v. G. & S. W. Railway (6), in which the judgment of Lord Cowan in Re Stirling and Dunfermline Railway Company (7) is adopted. Also Birch v. Joy (8) in the judgment of Lord St. Leonards at page 590.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals be allowed, and that in the first suit the decrees appealed from be varied, and that a decree passed in favour of the appellant for the sum of Rs. 5,682 brought out in the judgment of date the 15th October 1914, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the 30th June 1909 until payment; and that further in the second suit the judgment and decree be recalled, and that that suit stand dismissed; the appellant to have his costs in both suits, here and in the Courts below.

Appeals allowed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 cl. (5)—Execution of decree—Application against minor judgment-debtor without application for appointment of guardian, whether step-in-aid of execution—Application in accordance with law.

An application for execution of a decree made against a minor judgment-debtor represented by his mother, without any application to the Court for an order appointing the mother guardian ad litem of the minor, is in accordance with law and operates to save limitation.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Saran.

Messrs. Syed Hasan Imam, Rajendra Prasad and Ambika Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Tribhuannath Sahay, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant is aggrieved by an order of the Subordinate Judge of Saran disallowing his objection to the execution of a decree. That objection was made on the ground that the decree was now extinct under the Law of Limitation, no step-in aid of execution having been taken in accordance with law within three years prior to the present application. It is conceded that an application was made to execute the decree in 1916. But it is urged that this application was not in accordance with law by reason of the fact that the judgment-debtor was then a minor, and the application was made as against the minor represented by his mother without any application to the Court for an order appointing the mother as guardian ad litem. We are of opinion that the application must be held to have been a step-in-aid of execution taken in accordance with law, for it was open to the decree-holder either to include in his application for execution an application for a formal order appointing a guardian or to make that application as a separate application. The first step-in-aid of execution was obviously to pursue the property of the minor, stating that he was a minor and naming the person who would be his natural guardian. The appointment of the guardian by the Court would not be the first step but the second step-in-aid of execution. Therefore, clearly the application itself was a first step made in execution of the decree and was in accordance with law. Even if it were not so, I should be loath to hold otherwise than was held in Gopal Chunder Mannu v. Gosain Das Kalay (1) by the Full Bench, Kalka Dube v. Bisheshar Patak (2) and Hari v. Narayan (3). A decree does not become time-barred by reason of a trivial defect in the form in which the former application was made. I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9—Possession, suit for—Constructive possession, whether sufficient—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Revision—Erroneous decision of law, whether ground for interference—Remedy, other, open to aggrieved party, effect of.

In suits under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act the ordinary rule of possession going with title should be followed in deciding whether a person has been dispossessed within six months of the date of the suit. In order to bring this section into operation it is not necessary that the possession which is lost should be the actual physical occupation of the property. Constructive possession which goes with title would suffice for the purposes of the section. [p. 416, col. 2.]

It is not the practice of the High Court to interfere in revision when another remedy is open to the aggrieved party, and when no great injustice or inconvenience would follow from the refusal to interfere. [p. 417, col. 1.]

Application for revision of the decree of the Sub-Judge, Jubbulpur, dated the 29th November 1917.

Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. J. C. Ghosh, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—This is an application to revise a decree passed by the Sub-Judge, Jubbulpur, under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, directing the defendant Lachman to put the plaintiff in possession of a certain kotha in the town of Jubbulpur and ordering that the plaintiff's costs should be paid by all the four defendants.

For the purposes of this application the facts may thus be stated. The applicants are Lachman and another defendant, the remaining defendants having been joined as non-applicants. The kotha in question belongs to one Sakharan, who let it along with two others to the plaintiff Sheodin Ram for four years by a registered lease dated the 3rd May 1913. The plaintiff sublet the kotha to Behari and Nathu on the 23rd May 1914 for one year. The sub-lessees held on after the expiry of the term and Behari died of plague in January 1917. Many of the residents of Jubbulpur had left the town owing to plague. Among them were the plaintiff and Nathu, who met at Gadawara sometime in February where Nathu informed the plaintiff that Behari's property had been removed and that he himself no longer required the kotha. On the 15th March 1917 the defendant Gulam took possession and let the kotha to the defendants Nanhulal and Baldeo Prasad, who thereupon put the defendant Lachhu into possession.

The Sub Judge has held that although the plaintiff admittedly did not return to Jubbulpur between the final abandonment of the kotha by Nathu and the 15th March 1917, he was still in possession for the purposes of section 9, Specific Relief Act, and had, therefore, a right to sue under that section.

In this Court it is urged on the authority of Dinkarsha v. Anantsha (1) that the possession which must be lost to bring that section into operation must be an actual physical occupation of the property and that the mere constructive possession which goes with title cannot suffice.

The facts in the case cited are distinguishable from those now under consideration, in that there a tenant with a subsisting right of tenancy was in actual physical possession, when the ouster complained of by the landlord took place. The decision goes no further than to lay down that in such circumstances the landlord cannot sue in his own name. To accept the view contended for by the applicants would be tantamount to holding that no suit could be brought under section 9 by any one. The plaintiff was admittedly entitled to have physical possession of the kotha as soon as it was finally abandoned by Nathu, and in the circumstances I consider that the ordinary rule by which possession is taken to go with title should be followed.

I am further very doubtful whether an erroneous finding upon the question of what constitutes dispossession can properly be regarded as an exercise of jurisdiction with which the Judge was not vested by law. The Sub-Judge had jurisdiction to try the case and he decreed the claim in the view that the plaintiff was in possession and was dispossessed by the entry of the defendants. If the Judge was in error, the error was not one of jurisdiction but of law. It is true that this Court interfered in its decision above cited, but the point whether it had the power to do so was apparently not raised. In Fadu Jhala v. Gour Mohun Jhala (2) O'Kinealy, J., held that the decision complained of was not subject to revision. There the Munsif had dismissed a suit brought for possession of a right to fish in a certain khal the soil of which did not belong to the plaintiff, holding that such a suit did not fall within the purview of section 9. A similar view was taken by Sharfuddin and Coxe, JJ., in Shyama Churn Ghosh v. Mahomed Ali (3). Authority in the opposite direction may be found in Collector of Vizagapatam v. Abdul Karim Sahib (4) and Brajabala Devi v. Gurudas Mundle (5), but in neither of those cases was any reference made to the decision of the Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (6).

(2) 19 C. 544 at p. 561; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 806 (F. B.).

DURGA PRASAD v. RAM CHARAN.

There is, moreover, another principle on which I consider this Court should decline to interfere. It is open to the applicants to bring a suit to establish their title, and it is not the practice of this Court to interfere in revision where another remedy is open to the approved party and where no great injustice or inconvenience would follow from the refusal to act. This principle has been acted upon by all the High Courts. See for example Ram Kishen Das v. Jai Kishen Das (7), Chidambaram Chetty v. Nagappa Chetty (8) and Kashinath Sakharan Kulkarni v. Nana (9). The same principle was applied by this Court in Balram Misar v. Bairagi Mali (10), in which a suit under section 9, Specific Relief Act, had been wrongly dismissed.

From the defence filed it does not appear that any of the defendants has any show of title or that the entry upon the kotha was effected otherwise than by way of pure trespass. Having regard to all the circumstances, I decline to interfere in revision. The application is dismissed and the applicants will pay the non-applicant-plaintiff's costs in this Court. I allow Rs. 16 for the hearing.

Application dismissed.

Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), s 3 (10)—Grove-holder not paying rent, whether tenant—Ejectment—Notice to eject, validity of.

A person to whom land is granted for the purpose of planting a grove without any contract to pay rent is not a tenant within the meaning of the Oudh Rent Act. He is a grove-holder and is entitled to hold possession so long as the land retains the character of a grove. The mere fact that the land is liable to resumption or assessment of rent, if brought under cultivation after the grove ceases to exist, does not make the grove-holder a tenant so as to render him liable to ejectment by notice at will so long as the grove exists. [p. 418, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 6th June 1917, upholding the order of the Munsif, Shahabad, dated the 25th July 1916.

Mr. A. P. Sen and Babu Har Gobind Das, for the Appellants.

Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT—The dispute in this case relates to plot No. 539/1 khassra measuring 7 biswas, which is occupied by a grove planted by the plaintiff. The defendants are the proprietors of the land on which the grove stands. They took proceedings against the plaintiff in the Revenue Court for his ejectment from the said land, treating him as a tenant paying rent. The plaintiff contested the notice of ejectment but was unsuccessful. The finding of the Board of Revenue, which directed his ejectment, was that there were some very young trees in No. 589/1 and that the said land was not held rent-free under a grove-tenure (Exhibit A-7).

The present suit was filed by the plaintiff for a declaration that he was the grove-holder of the said plot and had a right to maintain his possession as such and that the defendants were not entitled to eject him from the same. His allegation was that the grove in question was planted by him 16 or 17 years ago with the permission of Dargahi Lal, the father of the defendants, that he built a pacca well over the land and that no rent was ever paid by him to the plaintiffs. In other words, he denied that he was a tenant of the defendants and set up his right to maintain the grove so long as the grove existed. The defendants pleaded that the land in dispute was cultivated by the plaintiff at a rental of 8 annas per annum, that there were 8 trees on the said land, some of which were planted by the plaintiff 3 or 4 years ago without the consent or permission of the defendants, and the rest had sprung up spontaneously, that the well, standing in the land, was constructed by the plaintiff without the consent or permission of the defendants during the pendency of the ejectment proceeding, and that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court. They further stated that in the survey which took place in 1302 Fasli the number of the plot in dispute was changed from 589, 1 to 389/2.

The Courts below held that the land in dispute was given by Dargahi Lal, the father of the defendants, to the plaintiff for planting a grove about 16 or 17 years ago, that the trees standing thereon were planted by the plaintiff and that no rent was paid by him for its occupation. In regard to the question of jurisdiction, the opinion of the Court of first instance was that the plaintiff was not a tenant but a grove-holder and as such he was not liable to ejectment by notice, but before the lower Appellate Court that question was not pressed.

A tenant is defined in the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1885) as a person liable to pay rent. A person to whom land is granted for the purpose of planting a grove without any contract to pay rent is not a tenant within the meaning of that Act. He is a grove-holder and is entitled to hold possession so long as the land retains the character of a grove [Mehdi Ali Khan v. Gurdin (1)]. He is really a licensee and no rent can be assessed on the land contrary to the original license or grant, much less can the land be resumed, so long as the grove exists.

As pointed out in Raghubar v. Raja Rampal Singh (2), the Revenue Courts have exclusive jurisdiction to decide, where a tenancy is admitted, what the nature of the tenancy is; but when the existence of the relation of landlord and tenant is denied, they have no exclusive jurisdiction to decide as to the existence of such relation. The mere fact that the land is liable to resumption or assessment of rent, if brought under cultivation after the grove ceases to exist, does not make the grove-holder a tenant so as to render him liable to ejectment by notice at will so long as the grove exists. On the findings arrived at in this case, which are conclusive, the proceedings taken in ejectment against the plaintiff in the Revenue Court were without jurisdiction.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

erected within the abadi of the village on a part of the sath.

The buildings in suit have been erected partly by Kheman who built those to the right of the plan and partly by Lekhu who built those to the left. The first Court decreed the claim. Lekhu and his mother Musammāt Lachhmi appealed. Kheman did not appeal. The District Judge dismissed the appeal, holding that whether the site in dispute was part of the sath or only an annex or entry to it was immaterial since the buildings either lessened the area of the sath or narrowed the entrance to it and damage was done which could not be remedied by partition.

Lekhu and his mother appeal to this Court, and the first question to consider is whether in such a case it is necessary for plaintiff to prove any special damage.

In the case of obstruction of a highway, open to all the world, it is beyond dispute that any individual must prove special damage, and for the appellants it is contended that the same is the rule when the obstruction takes the form of a building on a part of the shamilat deh, whether within the abadi or not. Here reliance is placed on Ram v. Pir Bakhsh (1) and Majji v. Teja Singh (2). The principle laid down is that where the trespasser has not taken more than the share which would fall to him on partition and the plaintiff has failed to prove any special damage, the Courts will not give a decree.

But the learned Counsel for the respondents urges that the rule of special damage applies only to obstructions of highways, and not to encroachments on pieces of village shamilat.

He relies on Fatehyab Khan v. Muhammad Yusuf (3). But that was not a case of village shamilat at all, but a case of a courtyard common only to a few individuals, in other words, it was a case of "interference with a private easement." Counsel then relies on Achhar Singh v. Badhawa Singh (4), which certainly is in his favour, but the learned Judge who delivered this judgment seems to have overlooked the fact that the two rulings on which he relies, viz., Ghan Singh v. Sadda Singh (5) and Chuhar Singh v. Dhaunkal Singh (6), are cases in which the whole remaining proprietary body of the village sued those who had made the obstruction. In such a case the whole body have obviously no need to prove "special damage." For special damage means damage experienced by one or more persons in particular, and when all the persons damaged join in the claim they can all sue even though no one person may be damaged more than the rest. So too in the case of a highway open to all the world, if all the world could be joined in the claim against the obstructor, there would be no need to prove special damage. But when one only of the persons aggrieved brings the suit he must prove that he in particular has been damaged.

Here we can find no special damage, for the plaintiff has his house well to the north of the obstruction, and the sath or that part of the sath which is just adjoining his own house is quite large enough for all purposes. His way to other parts of the village has not been cut off; it has been narrowed no doubt, but so has everybody else's way. Nor has it been shown to us that the defendant has taken more than his own share of what would fall to him on partition.

We accept the appeal and reversing the decision of the lower Courts so far as the present appellants are concerned, we dismiss the suit as against them but we leave them to bear their own costs in all Courts, as they certainly have trespassed on the common land. The decree will, of course, stand as against defendants other than the appellants.

Where a landlord sues to eject a tenant from a house in the abadi of an agricultural village, he must establish his right to eject the latter by showing that the latter has ceased to retain any interest in the village entitling him to retain the site. [p. 421, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 23rd January 1918, confirming that of the Munsif, Gonda, dated the 20th December 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, Babu Ishwari Prasad and Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Appellant.

Babu Puttoo Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for the ejection of the defendant from the site of a kachcha house and a cattle shed in the village of Kuncha, Kasimpur with permission to remove the materials. The plaintiff, the Taluqdar of Singha Chanda, is the proprietor of the entire village while the defendant-appellant was a tenant in the village. The plaintiff's allegation was that the defendant was allowed to occupy the house in the capacity of the plaintiff's tenant, that the defendant has now been ejected from his entire holding, that he was asked by the plaintiff to vacate the site of the house and remove the materials but did not do so, and that he was liable to ejection. The defendant replied that he and his predecessors had occupied the house and cattle-shed for several generations, that it was not appurtenant to the tenancy, and that while it was true that he had been ejected from his cultivatory holding he still held some grove-land in the village and some further land as sub-tenant for all these reasons he was not liable to ejection.

On the case coming into Court neither party produced any evidence. The learned Munsif, following the law as laid down by Sir George Knox in the well-known case of Shohrat Singh v. Jhagru (1), held that there is in cases like this, where a tenant is found in occupation of a house in the abadi of an agricultural village, the village site being the landlord's property, a presumption that he holds the site as appurtenant to his tenancy and has no right to retain it against the wish of the landlord on ceasing to be a tenant in the village. The learned Munsif placed on defendant the burden of proving that he still retained any interest in the village sufficient to enable him to resist ejection and, as no evidence was produced, decided against him. The learned Munsif accordingly decreed the suit allowing three months' time for removal of the materials. This decision was upheld in appeal by the learned District Judge.

In second appeal the defendant contends, as he contended in the Court below, first, that the decision in Shohrat Singh v. Jhagru (1) is wrong and should not be followed, but that the plaintiff should be required to prove by definite evidence that the site was originally occupied as appurtenant to the holding, second, that it certainly lay on the plaintiff to show that the defendant had become liable to ejection by ceasing to have any status in the village and that the Courts below were wrong in placing the burden of proof on this point on the defendant.

He asked us that issues might be remitted on both these matters.

On the first issue we see no reason to differ from the law as laid down in Shohrat Singh v. Jhagru (1) by a Judge whose knowledge of the conditions of agricultural life in these provinces is probably unequalled. On the contrary we think that this ruling represents the generally accepted law alike in Agra and in Oudh, and the reason that the case-law on the subject is so scanty is mainly that the law is so well understood that it has rarely occurred to any one to dispute it. We have been treated to a disquisition on the origin of Zemindari rights and it has been pressed on us that Zemindars were in most cases originally mere farmers of revenue. Historically this may be true, but in the present day there is no question that the Zemindar's position is that of proprietor subject only to his liability to pay Government revenue, and that his proprietorship extends just as fully to the village site as to any other portion of the village area. No person can occupy any part of the village site except by his permission or acquiescence, and such permission is normally only given either to a tenant or to a person having some definite position or duty in the village; and in the case of a tenant it is an implied condition of the permission that the right of occupation is co-extensive with the continuance of the tenancy. The presumption made by Sir George Knox is simply the presumption of section 114 of the Evidence Act, that the usual course of conduct has been followed in a particular instance. In this view of the law, even if the tenant be regarded as a licensee section 60 of the Easements Act, which has been pleaded before us, ceases to have any application. The licensee was a limited licensee and ceases to be in force in accordance with section 62 (c) as soon as the licensee ceases to be a tenant.

(1) 30 Ind. Cas. 782, 13 A. L. J. 745.

Shohrat Singh v. Jhagru (1) - has been followed by Sir Edward Chamier, another Judge of exceptional experience, in Musamat Phul Bibi v. Zahur Ali (2). It has also been followed by the senior member of this Bench in Second Civil Appeal No. 259 of 1917 decided on 3rd January 1918 [Ghirrao v. Sardar Karam Singh (3)]. A very similar view was taken by Stanley, C. J., and Burkitt J., in an earlier case, Nazir Hasan v. Shihba (4). The learned Judges say: "It is admitted, and appears to be undoubtedly the rule in these provinces, that a tenant is given a room or house in the abadi to live in during the existence of 'his tenancy.' In the particular case before them their Lordships dismissed the suit on the ground that either the defendants had acquired title by adverse possession or they held the house or room in dispute as appurtenant to their tenancy, which at the time of the suit was still subsisting. This ruling was subsequently followed in Dubri Lal v. Dholu Rai (5). In Net Ram v. Tej Ram (6) a piece of land in the abadi used for cattle and for storing manure was held to be an appurtenance to the tenancy. In none of these cases was the plaintiff required to prove the fact by direct evidence. To require him to do so would be obviously in most cases to throw on him an impossible burden.

On the second issue we think that the appellant is right. It was for the plaintiff to establish his right to eject the defendant by showing that the latter had ceased to retain any interest in the village entitling him to retain the site of his house. Mere cultivation as sub-tenant would not we think be such an interest, but a groveholder is a quasi-tenant who is by custom ordinarily not liable to eviction so long as the land he occupies retains the character of a grove. As the plaintiff was misled by the form in which the issue was framed we remit an issue under Order XLI, rule 25,—

Does the defendant retain any grove land in the village and, if so, of whom does he hold it and on what terms?

On receipt of the findings which should be submitted within six weeks, ten days will be allowed for objections.

Issue remitted.

LINDSAY, J. C., AND KANHAIYA LAL, A. J. C., (September 13, 1918).—By an order of a Bench of this Court dated the 4th of June last, an issue was remitted to the Court of the District Judge, the object being to ascertain whether or not the defendant-appellant here retained any grove-land in the village and whether, if he did so, he was liable to be ejected from his house. The suit as brought was a suit for the ejectment of the defendant-appellant from his house in the village on the ground that he had been ejected from his holding and had no longer any connection with the village. The learned Judge after remand received evidence on both sides and came to the conclusion that the defendant-appellant failed to prove that he still had in his possession any grove-land in the village. The case came up before us a few days ago and, as then appeared that the learned District Judge had misread one of the entries in the village papers, we thought it desirable to allow the defendant-appellant an opportunity of putting in another piece of documentary evidence in order to explain the entry which had been misconstrued. Mr. Dewhurst, seeing the figures 1306 in one of the entries, seems to have been of opinion that these related to the date of the defendant-appellant's occupation of the particular plot described, whereas it appeared to us that the No. 1306 refers back to an earlier number in the Settlement Khasra. We have now had a copy of the entry relating to No. 1306 of the Settlement Khasra placed before us. The result of the documentary evidence on the record appears to us to be this. At the time of the last Settlement this defendant-appellant was in possession of a holding in this village. It is admitted that he has been ejected by a notice which was issued for the year 1324 Fasli. It is admitted that when the notice of ejectment was issued it did not relate to a plot No. 1373/3. According to the Khasra of the year 1323 Fasli, the defendant-appellant is still in possession of this plot which is shown as a grove; and it is further to be noticed that this number seems to have been a part of the agricultural holding as it stood at the time of the last Settlement. It seems to us, therefore, that the situation is this, namely, that the defendant-appellant has converted a portion of his holding into a grove and that the landlord, when he took ejectment proceedings against the appellant, either negligently or designedly abstained from issuing a notice of ejectment with regard to this plot now described as a grove and the result, therefore, is that the defendant-appellant is shown by the evidence on the record to be in possession of a grove-plot. If he is in there either through the negligence of the Taluqdar to eject him or because the Taluqdar has not thought fit to eject him, then it seems to us that the Taluqdar is not in a position to say that this man Ram Harakh has lost all connection with the village and is, therefore, liable to be turned out of his house. The result, therefore, is that we hold that it is not shown that the defendant-appellant ceased to have any connection with the village, and consequently he is not liable to be turned out of his house.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the plaintiff's claim with costs to the defendant appellant in all three Courts.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 9—Decree for possession of land and crops—Crops cut and removed by defendant—Damages, suit for, maintainability of.

Plaintiff obtained a decree under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act for the possession of a piece of land and the crops growing thereon, but before the decree could be executed the defendant cut and removed the crops. Thereupon the plaintiff brought a suit to recover the value of the crops.

Held, that the defendant could not by cutting and removing the crops annul the effect of the possessory decree, and that, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to the value of the crops, although the question of title had not been decided in the previous suit [p. 423, col. 1.]

stances. The plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants, alleging that he was in separate possession of certain land situate in a Mahal in which both he and the defendants were co sharers, that there was a crop growing on this land which belonged to him and that he had been dispossessed by the defendants. He claimed possession of the land with the crops growing. His suit was under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The Court, finding that the plaintiff was in possession, granted him a decree under that section granting him possession of both the crops and land. Before the decree could be executed, the defendants took possession of the crops and cut and removed them. Thereupon the plaintiff brought the suit out of which this and the connected appeal arise. In this he claimed that he was entitled to damages for the crops. It seems to us to make no difference whether he called it damages or asked for the price of the crops which had been taken and removed, as he alleged. The Court of first instance granted the plaintiff a decree, giving him Rs. 386 instead of Rs. 700 odd which he claimed. The first Court was of opinion that it could not go behind the possessory decree given in the previous litigation, and this applied both to the crops and the land. Both parties appealed; the plaintiff contended that he should have got the amount claimed in respect of the crops, and the defendant that he should not get a decree at all and raising, inter alia, the question of title to the land. The lower Appellate Court remanded the case to the Court of first instance, being of opinion that the defendant was entitled to have the question of title tried. We think that this view was entirely wrong. We are clearly of opinion that the defendants could not by cutting and removing the crops annul the effect of the possessory decree. If the defendants are entitled to the land, they should assert that right by proper legal proceedings. It appears that some of the defendants actually did so but did not press their claim. The plaintiff sooner than prolong the litigation is ready to waive his right to have his appeal against the amount decreed him disposed of by the Court below. We have read from the judgment of the Court of first instance the manner in which it arrived at the conclusion as to the value of the crops and we are inclined to think that the first Court took a very moderate view of the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled. We allow the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs in all Courts.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 83, applicability of—Hundi, presentation of, for payment—Retention of hundi by drawee for more than twenty-four hours, effect of.

Section 83 of the Negotiable Instruments Act does not apply where a hundi is presented, not for the purpose of acceptance, but for the purpose of payment. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 14th March 1914, reversing that of the Munsif, Sandila, dated the 27th October 1913.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of a suit brought upon a Hundi which was drawn on the 29th of December 1912. The facts of the case may be shortly stated as follows. One Sheo Prasad, who is the agent of a Cawnpore firm named Ganeshi Lal Ramai Lal, drew a Hundi for Rs. 1, 00 on the date above mentioned in favour of a firm named Rup Chand-Bal Kishan which carries on business at place called Kachehauna in the Hardoi district. On this same date Rup Chand-Bal Kishan endorsed the Hundi to the plaintiff firm in this case, that is to say, the firm of Tulshi Ram Badri Prasad. It appears that at the time the Hundi was endorsed to the plaintiffs, the endorsers owed the plaintiff firm a sum of Rs. 852. The balance making up the total of Rs. 1,000 was paid to the defendants by the plaintiffs on the 31st of December. The Hundi was taken to Cawnpore on the 29th of December and made over to the agents of the plaintiff firm in Cawnpore, these agents being the proprietors of a firm named Ganga Prasad-Auseri Lal. The document was endorsed to this firm as agents for the purpose of presentation. A presentation was made accordingly and on the findings of the Court below it must be taken that successive presentations for payment were made until finally payment was refused on or about the 10th of January 1913. On the first date on which presentation was made for payment, a note was made by the drawee to the effect that the Hundi had been presented, "dekhi." Immediately after the dishonour of the bill the agents of the plaintiffs communicated with the plaintiffs at Kachchauna. They at once made a demand for the money from the defendant firm. They were put off for several days and finally on the 13th of January 1913 the payment was refused, and this suit was eventually brought on the 18th January 1913. The first Court decreed the claim, holding that the defendants were in the circumstances just set out liable to the plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiffs' claim, apparently on the ground that the plaintiffs did not give the defendants reasonable notice of dishonour. The learned Judge applied the provisions of section 83 of the Negotiable Instruments Act to the case. The section lays down that if the holder of a bill of exchange allows the drawee more than 24 hours, exclusive of public holidays, to consider whether he will accept the same, all previous parties not consenting to such an allowance are thereby discharged from liability to such holder. The learned Judge did not perceive apparently that section 83 could have no application to the facts of this case, for the presentation of the Hundi was not for the purpose of acceptance but for the purpose of payment and consequently the decision, so far as it purports to be based on the provisions of this section, must be taken to be erroneous. On the other hand the facts are that there was a final refusal on or about the 10th of January and there cannot be the slightest doubt that the notice of this dishonour was conveyed to the defendants with all reasonable promptitude. This being so, the defendants are clearly liable and the claim must succeed. I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The appellants will get their costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Plaintiff Bank sued to recover the sum of Rs. 18,853-12-0 from the defendants, alleging that defendant No. 3, a Company, opened a current account with the plaintiff on the 6th July 1908, agreeing to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 7-8-0 per cent per annum from the date of the account up to the 4th October 1909 and thereafter at the rate of Rs. 8-4-0 per cent per annum, that defendant No. 2 executed two promissory notes for Rs. 30,000 and Rs. 20,000 respectively in favour of the plaintiff by way of security for the overdraft allowed to defendant No. 3, and that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in conjunction with one G executed a surety bond in favour of the plaintiff by which they agreed to act as sureties for the amount found due to the plaintiff from defendant No. 3 from time to time. The suit having been decreed, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed separate appeals in the Chief Court. Defendant No. 2 paid full ad valorem Court-fee and presented his appeal first, while defendant No. 1 stamped his memorandum of appeal with a Court-fee of Rs. 2 only on the ground that the full Court-fee had already been paid by defendant No. 2. It was contended, inter alia, that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had executed the pro-notes as officers of defendant No. 3 and were not, therefore, personally liable on

First appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ambala, dated the 27th October 1913, decreeing the claim.

Bhagat Govind Das and Lala Dhanpat Rai, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., Mehta Bahadur Chand and Messrs. C. Bevan Petman and K. Santanam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case is the Marwar Bank, Limited, with its head office at Hissar and a branch at Ambala City, and the defendants are:—

1. Lala Bashesar Nath, son of Rai Damodar Das, Extra Assistant Commissioner, resident of Delhi City, Kashmiri Gate.

2. Lala Panna Lal, proprietor of the factory known as Upper India Glass Works, Ambala City; and

3. The Luxmi Company, Limited, head office, Ambala City.

Plaintiff Bank sues to recover Rs. 18,853-12-0 from the defendants on the following allegations, as set forth in the plaint:—

1. Defendant No. 3, noted in the heading, opened a current account with the plaintiff at Ambala on the 6th July 1908, and in the course of the account the plaintiff duly carried on dealings with the said defendant. Copy of the detailed account, which is duly verified, is attached to the petition of plaint.

2. Defendant No. 3, above named, agreed to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 7-8-0 per cent. per annum from the date of the account up to the 14th October 1909, and thereafter at the rate of Rs. 8-4-0 per cent. per annum.

3. On the 16th August 1903 and the 28th December 1903, defendant No. 2 executed two promissory notes for Rs. 30,000 and

Rs. 20,000 respectively in favour of the plaintiff by way of surety for the overdraft allowed to defendant No. 3. On the 28th December 1908 defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Lala Ganga Ram executed a surety bond in favour of the plaintiff, under which both the said defendants and Lala Ganga Ram agreed to act as sureties for the amount found due to the plaintiff, from defendant No. 3 from time to time. The original promissory notes and the surety bond are attached to the petition of plaint.

4. Defendant No. 3 has failed to pay the whole of the amount due by him in spite of repeated demands and has now gone into liquidation.

5. By virtue of both the promissory notes above mentioned defendant No. 2, and by virtue of surety bond, dated the 28th December 1908, above referred to, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are personally liable jointly and severally for the amount due from defendant No. 3.

6. Of the sureties mentioned in paragraph 3 Lala Ganga Ram has paid the amount of Rs. 9,384-5-6 and the plaintiff now wishes to enforce his claim for the balance against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 jointly and severally as sureties for the liability of defendants No. 3.

7. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have been repeatedly asked to pay the amount in question, but they have failed to do so.

8. The total amount in question, inclusive of interest due from the defendants after deducting the amount received from Lala Ganga Ram, is Rs. 18,853-12-0.

9. The cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on the 20th March 1911, when he made a demand for the amount in question from the defendants and they did not pay the same. Copies of notice, sent under registered covers, are attached to the petition of plaint.

The plaintiff, therefore, prays that (a) a decree for Rs. 18,853-12-0 may be passed with costs of the suit in his favour against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. He also prays that the Court may pass an order for award of interest at the rate of Rs. 8-4-0 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit up to the date of realization of the whole of the amount.

(b). The Court may pass an order that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are personally liable jointly and severally for the amount to be decreed by the Court against the defendants as prayed in clause (a).

(c) Any other relief to which the plaintiff may be considered entitled in view of the facts of the case may be granted to him against the defendants.

Defendant No. 1 in his written statement raised certain objections which are not material for the purposes of the present appeal, and upon the merits of the claim pleaded as follows:—

1. The account produced by the plaintiff is not correct. Besides this the sum of Rs. 9,585, hundis which Luxmi Company, defendant No. 3, sold to the plaintiff, was not given credit for.

2. The ordinary rate of interest between the plaintiff and defendant No. 3 was Rs. 7-8-0 per cent. The defendant has no knowledge of anything beyond that.

3. Defendant No. 1 has no knowledge of the promissory note, dated the 10th August 1908, for Rs. 30,000. An agreement was made to open a separate account with the Laxmi Company, defendant No. 3. A letter, dated the 28th December 1908, in regard to a separate debt amounting to Rs. 20,000 by current account relating to the Bombay branch was written by the said Company under the signature of defendant No. 2 and Lala Ganga Ram as Directors and defendant No. 1 as officer of the Company, so that the promissory note, dated the 28th December 1908, for Rs. 20,000 made over to the plaintiff with the above letter may cover the future dealings of the Company and the Bank. This amount had no concern with the permanent loan of Rs. 30,000. The defendant signed the letter in the capacity of Managing Agent of the Bombay branch. He never held the office of a Director of the Bank. The letter does not make him liable to pay the sum as surety or in any other capacity. The document was not a security bond. It has no concern with the promissory note, dated the 16th August 1908, beyond the promissory note, dated the 28th December 1908, for Rs. 20,000. The letter was written according to the practice of Banks, so that the promissory note, dated 28th

December 1908, for Rs. 20,000 be treated as continuing security for the current dealings carried on by means of that promissory note.

4. The amount raised as per separate account and covered by promissory note, dated the 28th December 1908, had been re-paid to the plaintiff. If there was another permanent loan due to the plaintiff from defendant No. 3, he (plaintiff) made negligence in realizing it before.

6. If Lala Ganga Ram had paid any amount to the plaintiff, his act is not binding upon defendants Nos. 1 and 2. Besides the plaintiff has no right to realise the money from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 jointly and severally.

7. The defendants had been telling the plaintiff to recover the amount due to him from defendant No. 3. Defendant No. 1 is not liable for the same.

8. The amount claimed is not just. It was the duty of the plaintiff to give credit for the amount received from the Laxmi Company towards the satisfaction of the current separate account which was opened by means of a promissory note for Rs. 20,000.

12. Paragraph XII of the plaint is denied. The plaintiff is not entitled to get any relief, nor is he entitled to get any future interest.

14. The amount of hundis sold and given to the plaintiff by the Laxmi Company ought to have been given credit for in the amount claimed.

15. The plaintiff can in no way sue defendants Nos. 1 and 2 unless he fails to realize the debt from defendant No. 3.

16. The plaintiff has shown gross negligence in recovering his dues from the Laxmi Company. When the Laxmi Company executed a mortgage-deed in favour of the plaintiff and sent the same to him he refused to take it. If the said agreement created any personal liability against defendant No. 1, it has been extinguished on account of the acts of the plaintiff.

19. The plaintiff's claim should be dismissed with costs. The defendant is entitled to get his costs.

The defendant Company admitted having opened a current account with the plaintiff as alleged, but pleaded that plaintiff should have given credit for a sum of Rs. 9,385

PANNA LAL V. MARWAR BANK, LTD.

(apparently a mistake for Rs. 9,585) on account of hundis which were left with the plaintiff; that the defendant Company did not agree to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 8-4-0 per cent. but only at the rate of Rs. 7-8-0 per cent. per annum; that many payments made to the plaintiff Bank are omitted from the accounts in addition to the aforesaid sum of Rs. 9,385; that the defendant Company executed and offered to the plaintiff Bank a deed of hypothecation of certain debts amounting to Rs. 31,115 in settlement of plaintiff's claim; that the amount claimed in paragraph 8 of the plaint is incorrect; that no demand was ever made from the defendant Company and that on the contrary the defendant Company paid about Rs. 6,000 after the date specified in paragraph 9 of the plaint; and that the defendant Company was in liquidation and could not be sued without due sanction.

Defendant No. 2, Lala Panna Lal, in his written statement admitted that the defendant Company had dealings with the plaintiff Bank and that interest was to be paid at the rate of Rs. 7-8-0 per cent. per annum, but he urged that he executed the promissory notes of the 16th of August and 28th December 1908 not as a surety but merely as an officer of the defendant Company and that he was not personally liable thereon; that the document, dated the 28th December 1908, which was executed by himself, defendant No. 1 and Lala Ganga Ram, was not a security bond nor did it create any personal liability on the part of the executants; that the said document was executed by the defendant Company under the signatures of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Lala Ganga Ram as its Directors and that it was made over to the plaintiff Bank upon the understanding that it should be considered as covering future current dealings between the Bank and the defendant Company and that he had no concern with the debt amounting to Rs. 30,000; that he, defendant No. 2, was not personally liable upon any of the documents executed by him; that he had not been repeatedly asked to pay the debt but had received one notice only from the plaintiff Bank's Pleader; that whatever cause of action the plaintiff Bank had, was against the defendant Company alone, and; that it could, if necessary, recover from that Company whatever may be due after adjustment of accounts; that plaintiff was bound to give credit for the sum of Rs. 9,385 which plaintiff Bank received on account of hundis from defendant Company; that the defendant Company never denied the plaintiff's debt but on the contrary paid about Rs. 6,000 to the plaintiff Bank after the 20th March 1911; that if the document dated 28th December 1908 be held to be a security bond, defendant No. 2 would be liable to pay only such sum as was raised by the defendant Company from the plaintiff Bank after the date of the execution of the said document; and that in any event the plaintiff Bank must recover first from the defendant Company and can only sue defendant No. 2 for such amount as may be due after realizations had been made from the defendant Company.

On the pleadings ten issues were drawn by the Court, but of these only eight need to be considered upon this appeal. These eight are as follows:—

1. Is the amount of Rs. 18,853 due from the Laxmi Company?
2. Whether there was any subsequent agreement to raise the interest from $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. to $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent.?
3. Whether the defendants are estopped from contesting the enhanced rate of interest on account of their having admitted the same as correct by accepting the statements of account as correct?
4. Whether certain hundis which were sent by the Laxmi Company to the plaintiff were dishonoured by the drawees and was the Laxmi Company informed?
5. If so, are the defendants entitled to have the amount of these hundis credited to their account, and if so, to what amount?
6. Whether the promissory notes and document, dated 28th December 1908, sued upon make the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 personally liable as sureties, and if so, to what extent?
7. If issue No. 6 is proved in favour of plaintiff, are the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 entitled to have the decree made conditional on the plaintiff's first realizing the amount thereof from defendant No.

PANNA LAL v. MARWAR BANK, LTD.

3 before proceeding against defendants Nos. 1 and 2?—

9. Has the plaintiff not shown due diligence in the recovery of his money from the Laxmi Company, and are the sureties, therefore, discharged?

The District Judge's findings upon these issues are as follows:—

Issue No. 1.—That the accounts of the plaintiff Bank are correct and that the amount claimed is the balance due to the plaintiff Bank upon the allegations made in the plaint.

Issue No. 2.—That it is proved that the rate of interest was raised on the 15th October 1909 to $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. with the concurrence of the defendant Company.

Issues Nos. 4 and 5.—That the kundis were dishonoured by the drawees after the Bank had made every reasonable effort to realize on them, that the defendant Company was informed of the fact and that the defendants were not entitled to have the kundis credited to their account.

Issue No. 6.—That defendant No. 2 was personally liable on the promissory notes Exhibit P-52 and Exhibit P-53, that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were also personally liable on the agreement Exhibit P-54 to the extent of Rs. 50,000 therein specified.

Issue No. 7.—That defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not entitled to have the decree made conditional on plaintiff's first realizing from defendant No. 3, inasmuch as under section 128 of the Contract Act the liability of the sureties was co-extensive with that of the principal debtor in the absence of any provision in the contract to the contrary.

Issue No. 9.—That the plaintiff Bank were entitled to refuse to accept a mortgage-deed which the defendant Company tendered to them on the 16th December 1910, inasmuch as if the plaintiff Bank had accepted the mortgage, they would thereby have entered into a fresh contract with the principal debtor and the sureties would have been released under section 134 of the Contract Act.

The learned Judge accordingly granted the plaintiff a decree for the amount claimed with costs and interest at $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. up to the date of realization.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have appealed to this Court separately, the appeal of defendant No. 2 being presented on the 27th of November 1913 and that of defendant No. 1 on the 5th of January 1914. The amount of Court-fee on the first appeal, Rs. 745, has been paid by defendant No. 2, and defendant No. 1 has stamped his memorandum of appeal with a Court-fee of Rs. 2 only, on the ground that the full Court-fee has been paid already by defendant No. 2. Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondent Bank urged as a preliminary objection that the full Court-fee should be paid on both the appeals, and after hearing Mr. Petman on this point we accept the contention. Defendants were entitled no doubt, had they so desired, to file a joint appeal, but as they have elected to present two entirely distinct and separate appeals, we can find no provision of law which would exempt the memorandum filed at the later date from bearing the full amount of Court-fee. We accordingly directed that the deficiency should be made good within a week from the 20th of March 1918 and Mr. Santanam on behalf of defendant No. 1 undertook that this should be done. Upon this undertaking we proceeded to hear the arguments.

On behalf of the appellant it has been urged:—

(1) that defendant No. 2 executed the promissory notes P-52 and P-53 and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 executed the document P-54, merely as officers of the Laxmi Company and that neither of them is liable personally on those documents;

(2) that in any event P-54 is merely a contract of indemnity and that consequently until plaintiff has exhausted his remedies against the principal debtor, the Laxmi Company, the suit against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is premature;

(3) that if it be held that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are liable on the said documents, they are liable merely as sureties and only to the extent of Rs. 20,000, inasmuch as that was the amount due on the promissory note referred to in the first paragraph of Exhibit P-54, the reference to Rs. 50,000 in the same paragraph being an error;

PANNA LAL V. MARWAR BANK, LTD.

(4) that the liability on P-54 is in any case not joint and several and the plaintiff by accepting payment of Rs. 9,384-5-6 from Lala Ganga Ram has thereby released Ganga Ram's sureties;

(5) that the variation in the terms of the contract as to the amount of interest payable by the defendant Company, having been made without the consent of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, releases them from all liability in respect of the contract, inasmuch as it amounts to granting time to the defendant Company; and that in any event defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are not liable to pay interest at the enhanced rate of $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent;

(6) that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence in not realizing the amount of Rs. 9,585 due on the hundis which had been deposited with the plaintiff as security for the loan, and that consequently that amount must be deducted from any amount found to be due to plaintiff from the defendants;

(7) that the plaintiff was not justified in refusing to accept the hypothecation deed, dated 19th December 1910 (Exhibit P. W. 1-I, page 67 of the printed paper-book), which had been offered to the plaintiff by the defendant Company; and

(8) that interest from the date of suit to the date of realization, if allowed at all, should have been allowed at the ordinary Court rate of 6 per cent. per annum and not at the rate of $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Elaborate arguments in support of these various contentions were addressed to us by Messrs. Petman, Gobind Das and Santhanam, and they were discussed and criticised in detail by Mr. Moti Sagar in reply. We now proceed to deal with them seriatim, though the first three can conveniently be discussed together.

The Laxmi Company, Limited, appears to have started in Ambala in 1907 for the purpose of doing business there and in Bombay and Delhi as "Bankers, Cotton Merchants and General Commission Agents," and upon the Board of Directors were (inter alia) Lala Panna Lal, Lala Ganga Ram and Lala Ram Saran Das. Lala Panna Lal is defendant No. 2 in this case; and according to Mr. Petman, Lala Bashesar Nath, defendant No. 1, was an "alternate Director" with his uncle, Lala Ram Saran Das, and it is for this reason that his name is coupled with that of his uncle at the foot of the balance sheet printed at pages 7 and 8 of the paper-book. Both Lala Bashesar Nath and the respondent Bank were agreed upon this point at the hearing of the appeal before us. Lala Panna Lal, Lala Ganga Ram and Lala Ram Saran Das were also Directors of the respondent Bank.

In May 1908 the Laxmi Company opened a floating account with the respondent Bank's City Branch with a credit of Rs. 1,000 (see page 82), but it seems to have been early realized that the Company needed money to develop its business, and it is not surprising, in view of the composition of the directorate of the two concerns, to find that in July 1908 the Cantonment Branch of the respondent Bank advanced Rs. 28,000 to the Company (see page 46). This loan was understood to be one of Rs. 30,000, (Rs. 2,000 being taken in advance as interest), but at first it was covered by no security. On the 16th August 1908, however, this defect was remedied by Lala Panna Lal executing a pro-note (page 52) for Rs. 30,000 in favour of the Bank. It seems that the Company stood in need of further assistance from the Bank, and apparently approached the Bank for that purpose, for on the 13th September 1908 at a meeting of the Bank's Managing Committee, consisting of Rai Bahadur Lala Ganga Ram, C. I. E., Lala Ganga Ram, Lala Panna Lal and Lala Kidar Nath, a resolution was passed to the following effect:—

"Resolved that a standing loan up to Rs. 50,000 be given to the Laxmi Company on the personal guarantee of the three Directors:—

- (1) Lala Panna Lal,
- (2) Lala Ganga Ram,
- (3) Lala Ram Saran Das,

on the following terms:—

(A) Rs. 30,000 will be a standing loan carrying interest at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum all the year round. The Laxmi Company may draw Rs. 20,000 by usance hundis not exceeding Rs. 5,000 each and there should be an interval of a week between each and every drawing. These hundis will be accepted by the Bank on presentation, and if the Laxmi Committee wants to have these hundis paid on due date, it will give at least two weeks' notice to the Bank without sending remittance, or— The Laxmi Company may draw to the extent of Rs. 20,000 by giving one month's previous notice by demand drafts.

"(B) The Directors of the Laxmi Company should give an indemnity bond undertaking to satisfy all claims of the Bank in the event of the Company failing to meet its liabilities."

On the 28th December 1908 Lala Panna Lal executed a second pro-note (Exhibit P 53) for the sum of Rs. 20,000 for value received for amounts overdrawn with interest thereon, at the rate of seven and a half per cent. per annum from this date to date of payment in full.

Both the pro-note Exhibit P 52 and the pro-note Exhibit P 53 were signed by Lala Panna Lal as "Managing Director, Laxmi Company, Limited, Ambala City," and "it is common ground that the consideration for the two pro-notes was the money advanced to the Laxmi Company and that Lala Panna Lal had no personal account of his own with the respondent Bank. On the same date that Exhibit P-53 was executed, a document (Exhibit P 54, page 45) was executed in favour of the respondent Bank by Basheshar Nath, Panna Lal and Ganga Ram, whose signatures, are bracketed together with the word "Directors" against them. This document runs as follows:—

"The Manager,
The Marwar Bank, Limited,
Ambala City.

DEAR SIR,

In consideration of your allowing the Laxmi Company, Limited, to overdraw sums, not exceeding in the aggregate Rs. 50,000 (fifty thousand only), on the security of Laxmi Company, Limited, demand pro-note in your favour of date we hereby pledge for the re-payment on demand of the said overdraft together with interest thereon and of any other sum or sums of money which may be or become due to you from the Laxmi Company, Limited, on any account whatsoever during the continuance of this pro-note.

And we hereby declare and agree that the overdraft allowed and intended to be secured by this agreement shall be taken to have been allowed by you entirely upon the faith of and relying upon the declaration signed by us at the foot hereof, which declaration solemnly we declare to be true in every respect.

It is hereby further agreed and declared that these presents shall remain and be a continuing security to you for the balance of the said account for the time being to the extent aforesaid, notwithstanding that at any time or times the balance of the said account may be in your favour, it being expressly intended that these presents shall be a security for the balance of the said account due by the Laxmi Company, Limited, to you while the said account shall continue open.

"Signed at Ambala City this 28th day of December in the year one thousand nine hundred and eight.

We are,

Yours faithfully,
Basheshar Nath }
Panna Lal } Directors."
Ganga Ram }

Such then in brief are the facts as they existed at the time when the three documents Exhibits P-52, 53 and 54 were executed, and in endeavouring to interpret these documents, we consider we are entitled to keep those facts in mind [section 92, proviso (6) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872]. In our opinion, regard being had to the admissions of the parties and to all the circumstances, the two pro-notes Exhibits P-52 and P-53 must be held to have been executed by Lala Panna Lal in his capacity as Managing Director of the Laxmi Company for and on behalf of the said Company, and in respect of them he himself incurred no liability either personally or as a surety, and the Laxmi Company alone is liable thereon. As regards Exhibit P-54, however, our conclusions are different. It is evident from the resolution of the 13th September 1908 (Exhibit P-46) that the Directors of the Bank realised the necessity of having some further security than the pro note Exhibit P-52 which had been executed on behalf of the Company by Lala Panna Lal on the 16th August, especially if further advances to the limit of Rs. 50,000 were to be made from time to time to the Company and that they had decided that the form which any such further security should take was to be a personal guarantee by the then Directors of the Company, Lala Panna Lal, Lala Ganga Ram and Lala Ram Saran Das, of whom the last mentioned represented Lala Basheshar Nath, his nephew, no less than himself. The necessity for this further security would certainly not become less urgent as the year drew to its close and the time for audit of the Bank's books approached. It was in these circumstances that Exhibit P-54 came to be executed. Prima facie, therefore, we would expect to find the Bank, when fresh documents are being executed, insisting on the Directors of the Company complying with the terms of the resolution passed in September 1908 and we have now to look to Exhibit P-54 to see if it is in terms the guarantee which it is claimed to be by the Bank. Unfortunately (and probably for the sake of saving a lawyer's fee) the Bank decided to adopt a form of security bond which was one of their stock forms and used by customers who wished to overdraw accounts from time to time (see Exhibit P-60).

As a result of this false economy, this playing with dangerous legal instruments without understanding the real meaning of the terms employed, the Bank has been involved in costly litigation, for it is hardly too much to say that the present claim would probably never have been disputed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2, had not the person who adopted the form slavishly copied out the words "demand pro-note in your favour of date" after the words "Laxmi Company, Limited", in the first paragraph of Exhibit P-54. Despite the confusion caused by this carelessness (for such we must consider it), the general tenor of the document appears to be clear enough. The opening words: "In consideration of your allowing the Laxmi Company, Limited, to overdraw sums not exceeding in the aggregate of Rs. 50,000 only" must mean that the principal debtor is the Company and that the executants of the document are the guarantors for the repayment of all sums overdrawn or due by the Company up to the specified limit of Rs. 50,000. In other words, the agreement is a contract of continuing guarantee within the meaning and for the purposes of sections 126, 128 and 129 of the Contract Act, and that it is not (as contended by defendants Nos. 1 and 2) merely an agreement by the Company itself through its Directors is obvious not only from the terms of the document to which we have referred but also from the fact that it was executed, unlike Exhibits P-52 and P-53, by three Directors and not one, whereas had it been a contract on behalf of the Company the signature of one Director would have been as sufficient for its due execution as it was for the execution of the two pro-notes. Moreover, it is a fact of some significance, and throws considerable light on the real meaning of the executants, that one of them, Lala Ganga Ram, has admitted his personal liability thereunder and paid up the one-third share, namely, Rs. 9,384 due from him under the contract. Mr. Petman contended that the liability of the executants could not in any event extend beyond the amount of the pro-note Exhibit P-53, inasmuch as that was the pro-note referred to in paragraph 1 of this document. We cannot agree with him, as we are satisfied that the words "demand pro-note in your favour of date" were by mistake copied from the form which served as a precedent for this document, whereas the amount which the Company were to, be at liberty to overdraw up to has been rightly stated in the same paragraph as being Rs. 50,000. Nor can we agree with the argument that there were two wholly independent accounts between the Laxmi Company and the respondent Bank, the one being "the pro-note account of Rs 30,000" covered by Exhibit P-52 and the other "a floating account" to which P-53 and P-54 referred. Originally no doubt two accounts appear to have been kept up by the Bank, but this was due to the fact that the Rs. 30,000 had been advanced by the Cantonment Branch of the Bank, whereas the smaller current account which opened in May 1908 was with the City Branch of the Bank. In October 1908 the amount then due to the Cantonment Branch was transferred to the City Branch, and that this was done to the knowledge of the defendants is clear from Exhibit D-3 (page 71), which is a statement of account submitted by the Bank to the Laxmi Company and filed by defendants. Thereafter the accounts were all kept by the City Branch and though there is a certain amount of confusion, inasmuch as the accounts which commence at page 82 of the paper-book were allowed to continue up to December 1909 pari passu with the account set forth at pages 48-57, it is clear that the accounts were those of the Company alone and that the amounts due on the pro-note and the sums drawn by the Company from the Bank and payments made from time to time by the Company to the Bank were all treated as being on the same footing. There is no doubt moreover that the accounts were consolidated in December 1909 and thereafter continued as set forth at pages 48 et seq. It is alleged that this was done without the knowledge of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. But it is clear from the correspondence on the record that statements of accounts were duly submitted from time to time by the Bank to the Company (e. g., see Exhibits P-2 and P-3) and we have no reason to suppose that the Directors of the Company, or in other words the defendants, were unaware of what was being done.

We hold then that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are personally liable under Exhibit P-54 for sums due by the Company to the respondent Bank within the margin of Rs. 50,000 and as no attempt has been made to impugn the accuracy of the various items set forth in the accounts filed by the Bank, we must further hold that the amount claimed, namely, Rs. 18,853 12-0 is correct.

As regards the arguments that the plaintiffs cannot sue defendants Nos. 1 and 2 until they have first sued the defendant Company, the principal debtor, and have failed to realise from the latter, it is only necessary to refer to Sanjana Kalana v. Virupakashapa Ganeshapa (1), Lachhman Joharimal v. Bapu Kandu (2) and Totakot Shanguuni Menon v. Kurusingal Kaku Varid (3) as sufficient authority for the proposition that in a case of this kind, the creditor is not bound to exhaust his remedy against the principal before suing the surety and that a suit may be maintained against the surety though the principal has not been sued.

The fourth contention is not tenable upon the terms of Exhibit P-54, as the obligation thereunder is clearly joint and several. Accordingly plaintiff by accepting payment of his one-third share from Lala Ganga Ram cannot be held to have released the co-sureties.

As regards the fifth contention, viz., that a variation was made in the terms of the contract when the rate of interest was enhanced from $7\frac{1}{2}$ to $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. and that such variation being without the consent or knowledge of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 released them from their contract, or at all events did not render them liable to pay interest at a rate other than that originally agreed upon, we are unable to accept the argument, as we are satisfied upon the evidence that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 must have had knowledge of the variation in question. Admittedly, the Bank gave due notice of their intention to enhance the rate to the Laxmi Company (see Exhibits P-5, D-12 and P-6) and we cannot believe that the Directors of the Laxmi Company were altogether in the dark upon this point. According to Wadhawa Singh, P. W. No. 6, the liquidator of the Laxmi Company, Exhibit P-63, which will be found at page 66 of the printed record, was filed by himself and Lala Panna Lal in the Court of the District Judge at Ambala in connection with the liquidation proceedings, and upon this exhibit there is a "note" that interest at $8\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. is to be included from the 1st January 1912 on the balance of Rs. 28,000-9-4 due to the Bank. This again shows that defendant No. 2 at all events was well aware that enhanced interest was being charged, and in addition to this we have the significant fact that neither defendant No. 1 nor defendant No. 2 went into the witness-box to swear that they had no knowledge of the agreement between the Company and the Bank.

In the sixth place it is contended that the Bank were negligent in realising an amount of Rs. 9,525-0-0 due on certain hundis which had been sent to them by the Laxmi Company as security for the money due to the Bank and that consequently the said amount must be deducted from any sum found to be due to the Bank. It is not specified in the pleadings what particular hundis are referred to in this connection, but apparently they are the five set forth in Exhibit D-15 at page 80 of the paper-book. The District Judge has found that the Bank made every reasonable effort to realise the hundis in their possession and that on their failure to do so, they brought the matter to the notice of the Company and were told on more than one occasion to hold up the hundis for the time being. This finding is supported by various documents on the record (see Exhibits P-32, 33, 35, 36, 37, 38, 40, 41 and 44). In face of this evidence we cannot agree that the Bank showed negligence in the matter of realising the hundis and that they are, therefore, liable to make good to the Company any loss that may have been sustained by reason of the hundis being now time-barred.

We know of no authority in support of the argument that the plaintiff Bank was bound to accept the hypothecation of certain supplementary securities which the Company offered the Bank in December 1910 (see Exhibit P. W. 1 at page 67); or that their refusal to accept such hypothecation debars them from claiming relief against the sureties.

Finally, there is the question of the interest to be allowed from date of suit to date of realisation. The District Judge has granted this at the contract rate of $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum and we are unable to hold that he acted unreasonably in so doing. The rate is not unduly high and it must be remembered that the Bank has been deprived of its money for some considerable time.

Before concluding we would advert briefly to Mr. Petman's request that we should remand the case in order to enable defendants to call evidence to prove that Exhibit P-54 has a well understood meaning in banking circles and that the form in which the contract of the 28th December 1903 was embodied was one employed by the customer of a Bank who wishes to be allowed to overdraw his account from time to time. We find it unnecessary to accede to this prayer as it is, in our opinion, the duty of the Court to construe a written contract of this kind for itself, and we are unable to see how the evidence of the bankers and bankers' clerks could be relevant to, or indeed of any material assistance in the interpretation of an agreement in writing which is clear enough so far as its language is concerned.

The result is that we dismiss both the appeals with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

Rule against the order of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Nabinagora.

FACTS.—In this case the plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of a plot of Bazar land which was fenced round by him as part of land appertaining to the land on which his shop stands. The defendants, who were the co sharer owners of the Bazar, dispossessed the plaintiff of the disputed land by erecting a tin shed. The plaintiff thereupon brought this suit for recovery of possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The defense was that the plaintiff did not take any settlement of the disputed land, which was a piece of khas land, from any of the co sharer miliks of the Bazar and that the plaintiff was never in possession, whereas the defendants were in possession by allowing the itinerant stallkeepers to hold their stalls there. The Court below found that the plaintiff was in possession but without any title, as he did not take any settlement from any of the maliks and on finding that he was a trespasser dismissed the plaintiff's suit. Hence this appeal.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Petitioner.
—Upon the finding the plaintiff was entitled to succeed under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The scope of section 9 is to give summary remedy to a person who is dispossessed without his consent by restoring him to possession without any investigation into the question of his title. Now when in this case on an investigation it has been found that the plaintiff was in possession, the Court below should have given him a decree without going into the question of title. Under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act the Court had no jurisdiction to dismiss the suit while it found that the plaintiff was in possession but was dispossessed by the defendants.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was obtained by the plaintiff calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree complained of should not be set aside. No one shows cause at the hearing before us. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover possession under section 9 of the Specific Relief Act. The Court below found that the plaintiff was in possession of the land. Therefore, under the terms of the Act, he was entitled to be restored to possession. But the Munsif, finding the plaintiff to be in possession without any title, dismissed the suit. The suit being one under the provisions of section 9 of the Specific Relief Act, the plaintiff, on proving his possession and dispossession as mentioned in the section, was entitled to be restored to possession. The judgment and decree passed by the learned Munsif must be set aside and in lieu thereof a decree must be passed directing the plaintiff to be restored to possession of the suit land. The petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Rule. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

Rule made absolute.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104 (c)—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—Appeal, right of, against order under s. 19 of Arbitration Act—Staying or refusing to stay suit—"After appearance," meaning of—Stay of suit—Duty of Court—Burden of proof.

An appeal lies under section 104 (c), Civil Procedure Code, against an order passed under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, staying or refusing to stay a suit, where there is an agreement to refer to arbitration [p. 435, col. 1.]

An appearance by a defendant for the purpose of making a stay application can be treated as an appearance in the suit. [p. 435, col. 2.]

The expression "after appearance" in section 19 of the Arbitration Act is merely directory, and neglect of this procedure would not invalidate an order of stay made by the Court. [p. 435, col. 2.]

Under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, where there is an agreement to refer, it is prima facie the duty of the Court to stay a suit and the onus is on the plaintiff to show why he should not be bound by his agreement. [p. 436, col. 1.]

The provision of English Law whereby an arbitrator can be compelled to refer a point of law for the opinion of the Court does not apply in India. Under the Arbitration Act an arbitrator is the sole judge of both questions of fact as well as of law arising under the reference and it is discretionary with him to apply for the Court's opinion on any question of law. [p. 436, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of Mr. Fawcett, A. J. C., Sind.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order made by the Additional Judicial Commissioner staying a suit filed by the appellants against Messrs. Volkart Brothers under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act.

The preliminary objection raised by Mr. Elphinston on behalf of the Volkart Brothers is that no appeal lies. It is true that no provision is made for an appeal in the Arbitration Act IX of 1899, but we think it clear that an appeal lies under section 104 (c) of the Civil Procedure Code, KODUMAL KAULMAL & VOLKERT BROS.

That sub-section allows an appeal from an order staying or refusing to stay a suit where there is an agreement to refer to arbitration. There is no ground for the suggestion that the word "order" in section 104 is limited to an order under the Civil Procedure Code. The word "order" is defined in section 2, sub-clause (14), in very wide words as "formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree." Section 104 takes the place of section 588 of the old Civil Procedure Code, in which the phrase was "the following orders under this Code." The words "under this Code" have been omitted from the present Civil Procedure Code, which refers merely to the "following orders." Again the section itself makes a distinction between orders under the Code and others generally, for sub-section (h) specially refers to orders under any of the provisions of this Code. It seems clear that section 104 (e) gives a right of appeal from any order made by a Civil Court staying or refusing to stay a suit where there is an agreement to refer to arbitration, whether under the Civil Procedure Code or under the Arbitration Act IX of 1899.

The first point raised by the appellants refers merely to a matter of procedure in the lower Court. Mr. Wadhmal complains that the lower Court wrongly refused the application for adjournment which he had made on the 25th February and that he had not, therefore, sufficient time to put his case before the Court. This, however, is a matter within the discretion of the Court, with which we should be reluctant to interfere unless very strong case had been shown. We do not think that such a case has been shown. The notice of the application was served upon Mr. Wadhmal three days before he applied for adjournment and the length of the arguments which he addressed to the lower Court shows that he had had sufficient time to prepare his case.

The next point raised is that the application for stay is premature and should not be entertained, because it was made on the 19th February 1918 at a time when no summons had been served upon the defendant. So that he could not be said to have appeared in the suit. This objection is based upon the words of section 19 of the Arbitration Act, which directs that a party may apply for stay at any time after putting appearance and before filing a written statement or taking any other steps in the proceedings. This section was copied from the corresponding section of the English Act and under the English Procedure whereby a defendant may waive service and appear gratis without being served at all. Such appearance is also contemplated by the proviso to Order IX, rule 2, of the Civil Procedure Code. The appearance for the purpose of making the stay application could, therefore, be treated as an appearance in the suit. But in any event we think the expression "after appearance" in the section is merely directory, for, what the section is intended to prevent, is a party filing an application for stay after he has attained to the jurisdiction of the Court, as appears from the wording of the corresponding section in the Arbitration Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. Neglect of this procedure does not, therefore, invalidate the order made by the Court.

Now coming to the merits of the case, the appellant's first contention is that he, as a plaintiff, has a right to come to Court and that the onus is on the other party, the defendants, to show why the suit should be stayed. But the wording of section 19 is perfectly clear. It shows that the Court must be satisfied by the plaintiff that there is a reason for not staying the suit and not acting on the submission to arbitration. In this respect the section is in accord with what has been described as a classic passage in the judgment of Lord Selborne, L. C., in the case of Willesford v. Watson (1). It is as follows: "But I think that the Legislature and the Act of Parliament under which the Court is now asked to act have given the answer to that argument. If parties choose to determine for themselves that they will have a domestic forum instead of resorting to the ordinary Courts, then since that Act of Parliament was passed a prima facie duty is cast upon the Courts to act upon such an agreement."

(1) (1873) 8 Ch. 473 at p. 479; 42 L. J. Ch. 447; 28 L. T. 428; 21 W. R. 350.

KODUMAL KAULMAL v. VOLKART BROS.

The parties here have made that agreement. They probably knew what were the reasons in favour of determining these questions by arbitration, and what were the reasons against it, and made it part of their mutual contract that these questions should be so determined. The plaintiffs cannot, therefore, be now heard to complain if that part of their contract is carried into effect.

It is, therefore, a prima facie duty of the Court to stay a suit and the onus is on the plaintiff to show why he should not be bound by his agreement to refer to arbitration.

The reasons that have been shown are three:—

Firstly, it is said that the dispute involved complicated questions of law which can be better determined by the Court than by the arbitrators. Mr. Wadhupal contends that it is the law in England that wherever there is a complicated question of law to be decided the Court should stay the suit. But the English cases do not apply where questions of fact as well as of law are in dispute. Under the English Act the arbitrators can be compelled to refer a point of law for the opinion of the Court, and on this there is authority that where the only matter in dispute is a question of law, the Courts will be disposed to refuse the stay since it would be idle to remit to the arbitrator that which the arbitrator would, in his turn, have to remit to the Court. But this argument does not apply in India, for the Indian Arbitration Act contains no provision under which the arbitrators can be compelled to refer to the Court a question of law. The machinery of the Indian Act is adequate for the disposal both of questions of fact and questions of law, and section 10B of the Act gives the arbitrators power to invoke the assistance of the Court for a decision of a question of law, if they so desire. We do not, however, go to the length of saying that there may not be cases involving complicated questions of law which the Court would be better able to try than the arbitrators. But Mr. Wadhupal has entirely failed to convince us that any such question arises in the present case. What are the questions of law in this case which the arbitrators would be incompetent to decide? In the first place it is said that a question arises as to the construction of the contract. But the contract is a simple mercantile contract and one which we think any man of business would be perfectly competent to construe. Next it is said that the defendants might raise a defence under a recent English Statute, viz., Emergency Act of 1917, referred to by my learned brother in his judgment in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 40 of 1918 [Messrs. Volkart Brothers v. Messrs. Kodumal]. But that Statute has no application to the present contract. Next it is said that the plaintiffs anticipate that the defendants will raise a defence that there is a custom affecting the contract whereby the plaintiffs are bound to take delivery although the goods may have been shipped after the time limited by the terms of the contract. But it does not appear that there is any occasion to raise this plea, for, clause 13 of the contract makes a special provision for late delivery. And even if such a plea were raised, it would be a customary right arising out of the contract and falling within the scope of the very wide arbitration clause.

Next it is urged that the arbitrators would be unable to call the evidence necessary for the trial of the suit because the plaintiff would have to prove the dates of the sailings of the steamers leaving Java. But under present conditions the Courts would find great difficulty in executing Commissions in Java and no such evidence is necessary, for the sailing dates could be easily proved before the arbitrators from Reuter's cables.

The next point raised is that the class out of which the arbitrators are to be selected is prejudiced because all European merchants are importers, and, therefore, their sympathy would be with the defendants. But the class out of which the arbitrators are to be selected is not limited to sugar merchants. The arbitration is to be by two European merchants resident in Karachi, and we cannot believe that two disinterested European merchants cannot be found in Karachi. It is said that the European merchants would be unwilling to act as arbitrators in this case and that arbitration would fail for that reason. But in that event it would be open to the appellants to make an application to revive the suit

GAMMETER v. CONTROLLER OF PATENTS AND DESIGNS.

Apart from these considerations, this Court would be loth to interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Court, as suggested in the case of Jaipal Kunwar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (2), where it was held that the Court of Appeal will not interfere with the discretion judicially exercised by the lower Court. That was the consideration that governed the judgment of Lord Moulton in Bristol Corporation v. Aird (3).

We accordingly confirm the order of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Section 62 of the Patents and Designs Act is limited to applications by the registered proprietor or some person in whom his interest is vested. [p. 438, col. 2.]

Section 64 of the Act does not apply to the case of cancellation of a design which has already been registered; the words "non-insertion in" or "omission from the register" used in section 64 do not cover a case of registration of a design and subsequent cancellation of it. [p. 439, col. 1.]

Section 77 of the Act does not give the Governor-General in Council power to extend the powers of the Controller beyond those which are given to him by the express provisions of the Act. [p. 440, col. 1.]

The High Court has no power to revise the Controller's decision under section 64 of the Act. [p. 440, col. 1.]

A design in order to be new or original within the meaning of the Act, need not be new or original in the sense of never having been seen before as applied to any article whatever; there might be a novelty in applying an old thing to a new use, provided it is not merely analogous. [p. 441, col. 2; p. 442, col. 2.]

Held, that though the shape of the "Novelty" band by itself could not be said to be new and original, the application of it to a watch to be worn on the wrist was for a purpose so different from and for a use so dissimilar to the purpose and use of the bracelet that the design in question might be said to be original. JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Ernest Otto Gammeter against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Fletcher.

The matter arises in connection with an application which was made by Mr. Gammeter to the Controller of Patents and Designs on the 16th of January 1915, whereby the Controller was requested to register the accompanying design in class. The description of the design was as follows: "The design consists of a metal band, for attaching a watch to the wrist and novelty is claimed for such a band, preferably of silver, passed below the watch through loops affixed to each side of the watch case, which method by preventing the bending of the band between the said loops, tends to draw the free ends of the band apart, and thus assisted by the resilience of the metal, prevent the accidental opening of the fastening means which consist of one or more studs on one end and projecting from either the inner or outer side of the band, taking into one or more or several key-hole slots provided in the other end of band."

The Controller registered that design on the 5th of February 1915. On the 23rd of July 1915, Messrs. J. Boseck & Co. applied to the Controller for cancellation of the registration; and, after hearing both parties, that is to say, Mr. Gammeter and Messrs. Boseck & Co., on the 7th of August 1915, the Controller cancelled the registration. On the 23rd of February 1916, notice of an application to the learned Judge was given; and the notice was that an application would be made for an order that the Controller of Patents and Designs should place the Design No. 2611 upon the register of designs in such manner as the same was on and prior to 4th August 1915. The notice was headed "In the matter of section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, and, in the matter of the Indian Patents and Designs Act, 1911." Section 45 of the Specific Relief Act provides as follows: "Any of the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay may make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forbore, within the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction, by any person holding a public office, whether of a permanent or a temporary nature, or by any Corporation or inferior Court of Judicature, provided . . . (c) that in the opinion of the High Court such doing or forbearing is consonant to right and justice, (d) that the applicant has no other specific and adequate legal remedy."

The first point that was taken before the learned Judge was that the Controller had exceeded his jurisdiction; and the second point was that, even if he had jurisdiction, he ought not to have cancelled the registration, because the design was in fact a new and original design.

Now, the Controller is alleged to have acted under section 62 of the Indian Patents and Designs Act: and it is argued on behalf of the appellant that the Controller had no jurisdiction upon the application of Messrs. Boseck & Co., which was hostile to the interest of Mr. Gammeter, to cancel the registration of the design, on the ground that section 62 is limited to cases of applications by the registered owner or somebody in whom is vested the interest of the registered owner, such as the trustees in bankruptcy or the Liquidator, if the registered owner happens to be a Company. That is the first question I propose to consider.

The first part of this Act deals with patents, and the second part, which begins at section 43, deals with designs; and section 43 provides, in sub-section (1) that "The Controller may, on the application of any person claiming to be the proprietor of any new or original design not previously published in British India, register the design under this part." Sub-section (4) provides that "The Controller may, if he thinks fit, refuse to register any design presented to him for registration; but any person aggrieved by any such refusal may appeal to the Governor-General in Council": so that, the Controller upon an application for the registration of a design has discretion either to register or to refuse to register, but his decision is subject to an appeal not to the Courts, but to the Governor-General in Council. Then after several sections to which I need not refer in detail, comes section 62 in Part III, which part applies generally both to Patents and Designs. That section provides, "The Controller may, on request in writing accompanied by the prescribed fee,—(a) correct any clerical error in or in connection with an application for a patent or in any patent or any specification; (b) cancel the registration of a design either wholly or in respect of any particular goods in connection with which the design is registered; (c) correct any clerical error in the representation of a design or in the name or address of the proprietor of any patent or design, or in any other matter which is entered upon the register of patents or the register of designs." That is the section upon which this matter primarily depends. I am of opinion that the contention of the appellant in this case with regard to the construction of that section is correct. I think, on reading the section itself, the proper construction to put upon it is that it is limited to applications by the registered proprietor or by some person in whom his interest is vested. First of all the words "on request in writing" induce me to think that they must mean on request, by a person who is interested in the patent or design. Then when I come to look at the matters which are dealt with in that section, I find that clause (a) deals with the correction of any clerical error in or in connection with an application for a patent or in any patent or any specification; and clause (c) deals with the correction of any clerical error in the representation of a design, etc. These are obviously matters which can concern only the proprietor or the person in whom his interest is vested. Then between these two clauses (a) and (c), comes the clause in question, "(b) cancel the registration of a design either wholly or in respect of any particular goods in connection with which the design is registered." It is quite possible that the registered owner may desire to have the registration cancelled, for instance, he may desire to avoid a litigation which may be threatened against him in connection with the design which he has been successful in getting registered. I think it is an extraordinary way of providing, if it was intended to provide, that the Controller might cancel the registration upon an application by a third person hostile to the registered owner, by placing the provision between two clauses which obviously deal with the correction of clerical errors which obviously can only be corrected on the application of a registered owner. The matter does not rest there: because when I come to section 64, sub-section (1), I find it provides, "A High Court may, on the application in the prescribed manner of any person aggrieved by the non-insertion in or omission from the register of patents or designs of any entry, or by any entry made in either such register without sufficient cause, or by any entry wrongly remaining on either such register, or by an error or defect in any entry in either such register, make such order for making, expunging or varying such entry as it may think fit." I think the learned Judge in the Court below held that the words "non-insertion in or omission from the register" would cover a case of the registration of the design and subsequent cancellation of it. I doubt, having regard to the provision of section 62, whether that is the correct interpretation to put upon it. When the word "cancel" has been used in section 62, if the Legislature intended that section 64 should apply to cancellation by the Controller, I think it is a curious thing that that has not been specifically mentioned in section 64. The word "cancel" has been used in clause (b) of section 62; and if that was intended to be "cancellation" upon the application of a person hostile to the registered owner, and if it was intended by section 64 to give a right of appeal against such cancellation, I think it is extraordinary that the word "cancellation" was not used in section 64. But again the matter does not rest there because when I turn to section 67, I find that section provides as follows:—"Where any discretionary power is by or under this Act given to the Controller, he shall not exercise that power adversely to the applicant for a patent, or for amendment of an application or of a specification, or for registration of a design, without (if so required within the prescribed time by the applicant) giving the applicant an opportunity of being heard." I think it is pretty plain that the sections which are referred to in that section are sections 5, 17 and 43, and that section 62 is not referred to. It provides that if the Controller is going to exercise his power adversely to the applicant in any of the cases mentioned, he should give the applicant an opportunity of being heard. The section does not deal with the application which it is suggested may be made by a third person under section 62 for cancellation of the registration. The learned Advocate-General argued that inasmuch as the Controller would be occupying a quasi judicial position, he would naturally give the applicant an opportunity of being heard. The point, however, is that when the Act specifies certain cases in which an opportunity of being heard should be given to the applicant, it seems to me that if paragraph (b) of section 62 had been intended to apply to the cancellation of registration upon the application of a person other than the registered owner, then section 67 would have contained a provision that in such a case an opportunity of being heard should be given to the owner of the registered design. These considerations lead me to think that the contention put forward by the appellant in this case is a correct one. Then again, this section is similar to section 70 of the English Act, (7 Edw. 7), and our attention was drawn to the form which had been drawn up by the Board of Trade in pursuance of the English Act: that section has been interpreted by the Board of Trade as applying only to applications by a registered owner or by somebody in whom the interest of the registered owner is vested, such as the trustee in bankruptcy or, in the case of a Company, the Liquidator. I quite agree with the learned Advocate-General that that interpretation is not binding upon this Court; but it is interesting, at all events, to find that the Board of Trade interpreted the Act in the same way that I have. It is argued by the learned Advocate-General that, as regards this country, Form No. 20 is not limited to applications by registered owners. That is quite true. But the section which gives power to the Governor-General in Council to make rules under the Act, is section 77, and it is in these words: "(1) The Governor-General in Council may make such rules as he thinks expedient, subject to the provisions of this Act (g) generally for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this Act." It must be obvious that that section does not give the Governor-General in Council power to extend the powers of the Controller further than is given to him by the express provisions of the Act, and I do not think that the fact that Form No. 20 has been framed in a general way and is not limited in its words to applications by a registered owner, affects, what I think is the meaning of section 62.

Therefore, the conclusion at which I arrive on this point is that the Controller, upon the application of Messrs. Boseck & Co., had no jurisdiction to cancel the registration, and it seems to me that under the Act the proper and ordinary way of expunging the registration of a design was to apply to this Court under section 64.

This, however, does not conclude the question, because the learned Judge in deciding the first point in favour of the Controller adjourned the matter in order that he might see whether or not the design was a new or original design. The learned Judge thought that the Court had power to revise the Controller's decision under section 64. If, my interpretation of section 62 is correct, then that would not be so, and the applicant would be entitled to the order which he asks for, under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, but for the existence of paragraph (c) to which I have already referred, namely, "that in the opinion of the High Court such doing or forbearing is consonant to right and justice."

Therefore, before we can direct the Controller to restore the registration of the design, we have to consider in effect the same question which was considered by the learned Judge, Mr. Justice Fletcher, namely, whether the Court should require the Controller to restore the design to the register on the ground that the design was new and original.

Now, the findings of the learned Judge on this part of the case are as follows: First of all, he points out that "the judgment of the Controller turned on the question as to whether there was any novelty in the key-holes and buttons which are used for fastening the band to the wrist." The applicant seems to have been rather doubtful as to the ground on which he ought to have based his case, and the point that was urged before the Controller has not been urged before us. Obviously it could not be because there was no novelty or originality in the fastening of this particular band. That is clear upon the evidence. But it is not unimportant to notice. Apparently this was the main point which the Controller had before him when Messrs. Boseck & Co. were objecting to the registration; and, if that was the main ground relied upon for novelty and originality, I can quite understand that the Controller came to the conclusion that there was no novelty, or originality. When this matter was before the learned Judge, one of the grounds on which the appellant relied was that there was flattening of the band. The learned Judge based his decision, to some extent at all events, upon the fact that he was convinced that there was nothing in that point and that the flattening did not really exist and that it only came into existence when the band was fitted on to the watch, and that by reason of the manner in which it was fitted to the watch a certain amount of flattening must take place. He did not base his judgment upon that ground alone, but he came to the conclusion that having regard to the shape and configuration of the bracelet which was produced before him in Court there was nothing new or original in the design which was relied upon. Before considering that point, which is the real point at all events as regards the merits of this case, I think I ought to point out that the learned Judge came to certain definite findings; first, he held with regard to this band which I may, for the sake of convenience, call the "Novelty" band, that prior to its introduction the evidence establishes that a plain metal band of uniform width in one piece passing through the loops of the watch had not been used in connection with wrist watches; secondly, that shortly after the "Novelty" band had been introduced, Messrs. Boseck & Co. copied it; thirdly, that on a threat of legal proceedings they applied to the Controller to remove the design from the register, which the Controller, after hearing the parties, did; fourthly, that the evidence also shows that when the "Novelty" band was introduced, it had a large and immediate sale; and, fifthly, that there was produced before him, as there had been before the Controller, a bracelet which, it was said, was an anticipation of the petitioner's design. Then he describes the bracelet as follows: "The bracelet consists of a plain metal band of gold of uniform width fastened in exactly the same method as the 'Novelty' band. In this metal band are two (it ought to be three) small holes, pierced so as to allow a pearl ornament to be affixed thereto by screws. The object, of course, is for this to be used as an ornament. This bracelet is one of a pair manufactured by Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey of this city, and which they have had in stock for about 5 years prior to August 1915. There is other evidence of the manufacture and sale of other similar bands, but I am not satisfied that the evidence on that point is reliable." Then he goes on to say: "The case must, therefore, stand or fall on the bracelet produced by Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey" (that is, this bracelet which I have now in my hand). "It has been decided in a series of cases that the test of novelty is the eye of the Judge. He must place the two designs side by side and see whether the one for which novelty is claimed is new." I entirely agree with the principle which is laid down by the learned Judge. The matter, of course, to a very large extent, is a matter of first impression, inasmuch as it depends upon the view a Judge looking at the article in question takes, when comparing it with the other article which is said to be an anticipation.

In my judgment, the shape and configuration of the metal band taken by itself cannot be said to be new or original. I have the "Novelty" band before me and the bracelet which was produced by Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey. It is true that it is not of the same size, that is to say, it is narrower than the bracelet, and not of the same dimensions; but as regards the shape and the configuration, I confess I cannot see anything new or original. It is conceded that the fastenings are similar and that the method of the fastening has been known in the trade for a considerable time. But that does not conclude the matter. The real point in this case, in my judgment, arises in connection with the user of this metal band: and I have to ask myself the question whether the application of the "Novelty" band was in respect of an object analogous or kindred to the bracelet: or to put it in another way, was the metal band intended for such a different purpose and for a use so dissimilar that the design may be held to be new or original. I think the case of Clarke's Design, In re (1) lays down quite clearly what the test in matters of this kind is. In the judgment of Lord Justice Lindley, at page 45, he dealt with the case which had been decided by Mr. Justice Chitty [Read & Greswell's Design, In re (2)] and then with reference to that he said as follows: "In this last case, Chitty, J., said that 'to be capable of being registered a design must be new or original in fact and not, as is suggested, new or original as to some particular class of goods. It cannot be said to be new and original if it is already being applied to articles of an analogous character' (that is a quotation from Mr. Justice Chitty's judgment). The learned Judge was obviously referring to the classes of goods mentioned in the schedule to the designs rules, and the words referring to articles of an analogous nature show that the learned Judge did not intend by the words 'new or original in fact' to decide that a design must be new or original in the sense of never having been seen before as applied to any article whatever. In Walker, Hunter and Co. v. Falkirk Iron Co. (3) and Hecla Foundry Co. v. Walker, Hunter and Co. (4), a design for the shape of an iron furnace-door was protected, although wooden doors of the same shape for side boards and other articles of furniture were old. The things shaped were for such different purposes and their uses were so dissimilar that the design for one of such things was held to be new or original, although it was old for the other. What then is the test to be applied to a case such as that before us? The design must be new or original with reference to the kind of article for which it is registered, meaning by kind of article, not the class of article mentioned in the schedule to the rules, but the kind of article having regard to its general character and use." Then he proceeds to give well known instances: "A design may be new for a coal-scuttle, but not for a bonnet." Now, that being the test, I formulate the question which I have to put to myself, having regard to its general character and use, was the "Novelty" band, for a purpose so different from, and for a use so similar to, the purpose and use of the bracelet that the design may be said to be new and original. To my mind the purpose and use of the band are entirely different from the purpose and use of the bracelet. The "Novelty" band is intended to attach a watch to the wrist. The object of wearing a watch on the wrist is generally different from that of wearing a bracelet,—one is for a useful purpose and the other is ornamental. It was pointed out in argument, and I think based upon evidence, that the leather straps which had been generally used for the purpose of attaching a watch to the wrist, were unsuitable to such a country as this, or in fact to any other country of hot climate, and consequently this band—the "Novelty" band—which was introduced had become a very useful article, and, as appears from the evidence, had, to use the words of the learned Judge, "a large and immediate sale." There may be a few cases where the articles (the watches) are so ornamental that they are worn more as ornaments than as articles of use; but I think they are the exceptions and not the rule: and in my judgment this "Novelty" band which was made an exhibit in the case is not the kind of band which would be ordinarily used for an ornamental watch.

It is said by the learned Counsel for Messrs. Boseck & Co. that utility is wholly immaterial. So it is in one sense, that is to say, the Statute applies to all designs, whether they add to the utility of the articles to which they are applied or not. But in considering the purposes and uses of the article in question for the sake of considering whether they are analogous or kindred to the purposes and uses of the article which is said to be the anticipation, I think it is legitimate to take into consideration that one purpose is ornamental and the other is useful. In addition to that which I have already mentioned there are other facts which to my mind are significant. The fact that as soon as this article was produced there was a large and immediate sale, is strong evidence that it was novel and original: then there is the fact that Messrs. Boseck & Co. shortly after its production, adopted and copied it and put it in their catalogue on the top of one of the first pages (the catalogue was produced before us). Further, there was evidence of well-known people in the jewellery trade who described the "Novelty" band as a novelty. The result is that all these facts lead me to the conclusion that although in view of the bracelet produced by Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey, the shape of the "Novelty" band by itself cannot be said to be new and original, the application of it to a watch to be worn on the wrist was for a purpose so different from and for a use so dissimilar to the purpose and use of the bracelet that the design in question may be said to be original.

For these reasons, I think, that the appeal should be allowed and the application of the 22nd of February 1916 granted. In my judgment, the Controller ought to pay his own costs of the proceedings before Mr. Justice Fletcher and this Court, and Messrs. Boseck & Co. ought to pay the costs of the appellant in respect of the hearing, so far as the merits are concerned, before Mr. Justice Fletcher, and the appellant ought to have the costs of this appeal with the exception of one day, which was taken up in the argument with respect to the preliminary point, as to which there ought to be no costs before us. The costs will be on the basis as "of hearing."

I should myself like to say before parting with this case, that I am indebted to the learned Counsel engaged in the case for their able arguments and for the assistance they have given me in this matter.

WOODROFFE, J.—This application was made under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act. It is not, in my opinion, barred by section 64 of the Designs Act. The action of the Controller was not justified by section 62 of that Act. We have then to see whether the application is justified on the merits. Mr. Justice Fletcher seems to have dealt with the question as one under section 64 of the Designs Act. But the appellant does not admit that that section applies, for, if it did, he could not get relief under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act. His case is that the merits are to be entered into under the provisions of section 45, under which provision the application is made.

As to the merits, in my opinion, the appellant has established his case. There is no question, I think, that it is a good design. It is found as a fact that it had never been previously applied to wrist watches and the fact that it had an immediate and lucrative sale strongly indicates that the article sold was a useful novelty. It was also copied by Messrs. Boseck and Co. and inserted in their catalogue, and there given the first place. The case before Mr. Justice Fletcher was decided practically on one ground and one ground only, and that was that the design in question was not new, in that it had been anticipated by a bracelet of Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey which they had held in stock for about 5 years prior to August 1915; the learned Judge after finding several points in favour of the applicant then says that "the case must stand or fall on the bracelet produced by Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey."

It has been argued by Mr. James that the band of the bracelet produced by Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey is not the same as the band of the design in question. Assuming for the sake of the argument, without deciding the point, that it is the same, there is, I think, novelty in applying what on this assumption is an old thing to a new use. If that is so, the design should be protected, provided it is not merely, to use the words of the cases, analogous. The present case does not seem to be within the proviso, though it may be that class divisions do not necessarily determine whether one case is analogous to another; it seems to me that the fact that articles are in different divisions is a matter of some account. However this may be, in the present case we have here different purposes and different uses. A wrist band used to carry an ornament such as that produced by Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey, and a wrist band to carry a watch do not appear to me to be so analogous as to deprive the applicant of his claim to novelty. Further, the band is, in my opinion, original and differs from the other band produced by its circular shape according to which it passes at the back of the watch, and as a consequence of that, produces a flattening which is referred to in the evidence.

In my opinion, therefore, the appeal succeeds and the applicant is entitled to the order which he sought.

A suit instituted by the Receiver of the estate of an insolvent against a debtor of the insolvent during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings is not rendered unmaintainable on the annulment of the adjudication. [p. 444, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore.

Messrs. B. E. O'Connor and Dr. Surendro Nath Sen, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Motilal Nehru and Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this and the connected appeals arise are somewhat complicated but it is unnecessary to state them at any great length. It appears that there were three brothers, Ghasi Ram, Shankar Lal and Mannu Lal. There was also their father Fauji Lal. Ghasi Ram appears to have been a man of considerable business capacity and intelligence and to have started a number of businesses in various parts of the province, which were up to a certain period at least quite successful. He associated his father and brothers as partners in some of the concerns without any contribution of capital on their part. All went well until one of the brothers Mannu Lal started a suit for partition against his brother Ghasi Ram. Ghasi Ram, instead of meeting this suit in a straightforward fashion and having all questions decided between himself, Mannu Lal and the other members of the family, got himself declared an insolvent. After a good deal of litigation (out of which probably the legal profession alone gained anything), a scheme for composition was put forward and eventually accepted by the creditors and the Court. The bankruptcy was annulled. Before this happened, however, a suit had been commenced by the Receivers against Shankar Lal and Mannu Lal in respect of their alleged liability, as partners in some of the concerns, to Ghasi Ram and his son as the proprietors of certain other concerns in which Shankar Lal and Mannu Lal had no interest. Notwithstanding the fact that the declaration of insolvency was annulled, the present suit was continued and the learned Subordinate Judge has made a decree in favour of the Receivers, plaintiffs in the suit.

The first point argued on behalf of Shankar Lal and Mannu Lal (the latter being represented by Mr. O'Connor, Barrister, and the former by Mr. Katju) was that the annulment of the insolvency rendered the suit by the Receivers unmaintainable and that on this ground alone the suit ought to have been dismissed. In our opinion this contention has no force. The defendants are alleged to be the debtors of Ghasi Ram and the other late insolvents. Ghasi Ram makes no objection to the suit being maintained, (the objection that is raised is at the instance of the alleged debtors). There can be no doubt that the suit was properly instituted originally. There can be no doubt the suit could have been continued after the annulment in the name of the late insolvents, if not by the Receivers. It seems perfectly clear that if the debtors pay the amount found due either voluntarily or under stress of a decree, they will get a good discharge for their indebtedness to the late insolvents. We think under the circumstances that no injustice of any kind could be done to the defendants by the case being heard out on the merits.

The next point argued was that the suit should have been dismissed, because the suit as framed did not ask for an account of the transactions relating to a number of other concerns in which the parties were interested. Such pleas were raised in the Court below on behalf of the defendants and the Court admitted the equity of the defence by directing that the account should be taken in such a way that the liability, if any of the defendants would be finally decided after giving them credit for any sums which might be due to them from Ghasi Ram on account of the other concerns. We think that having taken care to prevent the possibility of any injustice being done to the defendants on account of original frame of the suit, the Court below was quite right in not dismissing the suit but directing that the accounts should be taken.

The next point that was urged was that the Court below has assumed the correctness of the claim for Rs. 13,538-3-0 being due to the Cawnpore firm. It was contended that the Court ought not to have assumed that this sum was actually due but should have gone further into the accounts, and it was vaguely hinted that fictitious entries might have been made by Ghasi Ram in the Lakhimpur and Gola accounts at the time the suit was brought for partition by Mannu Lal so as to inflate the indebtedness of these two concerns to the Cawnpore firm. It was urged that the learned Judge himself thought that there were fictitious entries in these accounts. We have carefully considered the point and we cannot see that the learned Judge thought anything of the kind. We have even seen the evidence that was given on this particular point. One item that was suggested as a fictitious entry was a sum of Rs. 1,300 or thereabouts, damages which the Cawnpore house had paid to Ralli Brothers and had charged against Lakhimpur. It appears that witnesses were examined to show that a consignment of corn was sent by the Lakhimpur house to Ralli Brothers but that this was done in pursuance of a contract entered into between the Cawnpore house and Ralli Brothers. The contract being between these two firms, the Cawnpore house had necessarily in the first instance to pay the damages for breach of contract, but it was quite right that the Lakhimpur house should have been debited with the payment of the damages if (as between the Lakhimpur house and the Cawnpore house) the grain was to come from Lakhimpur. If this item is to be taken as a specimen of the items suggested as fictitious, we think that there is very little weight or force in the allegation put forward on behalf of the defendants as to fictitious entries. We think that the Court below was justified in accepting the indebtedness as between the Cawnpore house and the Lakhimpur house and the Gola house of the sum mentioned above. It was argued that neither Shankar Lal nor Mannu Lal could be liable for any sum, because according to the contract between them and their brother Ghasi Ram they were entitled to share in the profits but they were not to be bound to contribute to any loss. We are perfectly certain that there was no such contract, and we are quite certain that the learned Judge never intended to hold that such an absurd contract existed. No doubt Shankar Lal and Mannu Lal contributed no capital and the shares in the partnership given to them were in lieu of their services, but as partners they were entitled to profit and liable to loss in proportion to their shares.

The last point was that the rate of interest, namely, nine per cent., was not the rate agreed upon. On this point we see no reason to differ from the finding of the Court below.

We think on the whole the case was carefully tried and justice done by the learned Subordinate Judge. We hope that the brothers may see their way to bring this litigation to a speedy determination without incurring further cost. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

*Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII B.C. of 1885), ss. 61, 62
—Deposit of rent made by tenant—Tenant not entitled

The receipt given by a Court on accepting a deposit under section 62 of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot operate as a valid acquittance unless the tenant is entitled under section 61 of the Act to make the deposit. [p 447, col. 1.]

If the tenant deposits his rent without first making a tender or without any of the other conditions existing which makes section 61 applicable, the landlord's only remedy is to sue for rent ignoring the deposit, which cannot even be treated as a tender of rent so as to suspend the running of interest. [p. 447, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Pabna and Bogra, dated the 26th of April 1916, affirming that of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Bogra, dated the 1st of December 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Baranasibasi Mukherjee, for the Appellants.—The question of tender or no tender of the rent due was a question for the determination of the Court receiving the deposit of rent and this question should not have been gone into by the Courts below, in other words, the Courts below have acted without jurisdiction in entering into the question as to whether the deposit under section 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act can be regarded as a valid tender of the rent due to the landlord. Refers to sections 61 and 62 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under section 62 the Court receiving the deposit of rent is to be satisfied that the applicant is entitled to deposit the rent under section 61. The question of the right of making the deposit of rent is entirely a question to be determined by the Court receiving the deposit, and any other Court has got no jurisdiction to enter into that question.

Then the deposit having been accepted by the Court there was a valid acquittance and as such there was no arrear of rent and so the suit should have been dismissed, at any rate the deposit should have been treated as a valid tender of rent due at the time of making the deposit which would suspend the running of interest. As soon as the Court accepts the deposit and gives a receipt, there is a valid acquittance and there remains no arrear for which the defendant may be sued upon. The plaintiff, therefore, can get no relief whatsoever. The deposit is a valid discharge at least to the extent of the amount deposited. Refers to section 62, sub-section (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act and Sasi Bhusan Dey v. Umakanto Dey (1). Before the suit was instituted the money due to the landlord was paid and paid within time and a receipt was duly granted by the Court for the amount deposited. Therefore, the Courts below should have dismissed the suit, allowing the plaintiff to withdraw the money deposited. Even if it be supposed that the deposit was not proper, it could be treated at least as a valid tender so as to stop the running of subsequent interest.

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Gunoda Charan Sen), for the Respondent.—Section 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act provides that there cannot be a valid deposit unless there was a valid tender of rent by the tenant and there was a refusal by the landlord to accept the rent tendered, but it has been found by the Courts below that there was no valid tender and so the deposit in question can be no defence to the plaintiff's claim. If the defendant was not entitled to make a deposit under the law, then he has got no case at all. Moreover the notice of the deposit in question was received by the landlord (plaintiff) after the institution of the suit, so even if the deposit had been made before the date of the institution of the suit that would not make any difference in the case. The deposit was made on the 24th October. Notice of deposit was served on the plaintiff on 20th November. The present suit was filed on 1st November, i.e., before the receipt of the notice of deposit. There is no authority for the broad proposition of law that when a deposit is accepted by a competent Court, the question of the validity of the deposit cannot be entered into by the Court trying a suit for rent between the landlord and the tenant who made the deposit.

Babu Baranasibasi Mukherjee, for the Appellant, referred to Sirdhar Roy v. Rameswar Sing (2).

JUDGMENT.—In the present case the defendant made a deposit of rent under section 61 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, alleging that he had tendered the money to the landlord who had refused to receive it. This deposit was made on 24th September 1913 corresponding with 8th Assin 1320 and was for the rent due in Assin 1320. The plaint in the present suit was preferred by the landlord for this rent on 1st November 1913 and the landlord had not then notice of the deposit. Both the lower Courts have held that the statement made by the tenant that he made a tender of the rent to the landlord was false, and that, as he was not entitled to make a deposit under section 61, the landlord's suit for rent should be decreed as if no deposit had been made. Before us it is contended that as the Court accepted the deposit and granted a receipt under section 62, that receipt operated as an acquittance for the amount of rent payable by the tenant and that consequently at the time the suit was brought there was no arrear due. It appears to us that the lower Courts have rightly held that the receipt given under section 62 cannot operate as a valid acquittance unless the tenant is entitled to make a deposit under section 61. The Court which accepts the deposit must do so ex parte, as the Act makes no provision for the serving of a notice of deposit on the landlord until after a receipt under section 62 has been granted. It is pointed out in the case of Sirdhar Roy v. Rameswar Sing (2) that it is entirely at the option of the Zemindar either to receive the rent deposited or not, just as he pleases, and that he may bring a suit for the recovery of the whole of the arrear of rent due to him up to the date of deposit within six months from the date of the service of notice upon him, disregarding altogether the deposit made by the tenant and that if in that suit it be proved that the tenant had, without reasonable or probable cause, neglected or refused to pay the amount of rent due to the Zemindar, the Court might award to him damages and costs in addition to the rent. It appears to us that the law never contemplated that any tenant could make a deposit into Court simply by making a false affidavit that he had made a tender of the rent which had been refused. If the tenant does deposit his rent without having first made a tender or without any of the other conditions existing which make section 61 applicable, the landlord's only remedy is to sue for rent ignoring the deposit and this, we hold, he is entitled to do. It is contended that, at any rate, the deposit should be taken as a tender to the landlord and should at least suspend the running of interest. We cannot accept the contention that the Court is made by the provisions of this section a statutory agent of the landlords or that the payment into Court can be treated as a tender to the landlords themselves. We, therefore, hold that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Messrs. N. C. Mehra and Qamar Din, for the Appellants.

Mr. E. W. Parker, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The mutation register for 1888 in original has been sent up in compliance with the order of this Court, dated the 30th January 1917. I have referred to the mutation order, dated the 21st December 1888, and I find that it is signed by Sheikh Najam-ud Din, Assistant Collector of the Second Grade. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the question of the mutation of the land in suit in favour of the mortgagee, Mansa Ram, as owner came up before a Revenue Officer who had jurisdiction to deal with it and was decided in favour of the mortgagee, mutation of the proprietary rights in the land being made in his name, as prayed by him. It would also appear from that order that some of the present plaintiffs were present in person or were represented by a de facto guardian at the mutation proceedings and that no objection to the proposed mutation was made. As noted by the patwari in his preliminary report and by the Revenue Officer in his final order, the usual notice of the proposed mutation was given in the village, and, therefore, the proprietary body must be presumed to have had sufficient knowledge of the mutation proceedings.

It is clear from the mutation in question that the mortgagee, Mansa Ram, set up a proprietary title to the land as against the proprietary body of the village on the ground that the mortgagor, Musammât Lachmi, had died without leaving any heirs except the mortgagee himself, and since no objection was raised by any member of the proprietary body to the claim set up by him, mutation of the land was made in his name as proprietor. Even if, as is now contended before me by the appellants' Counsel, Mansa Ram was not an heir of the widow, and the appellants, as members of the proprietary body or the descendants of the original settlers in the village, were entitled to succeed to the land left by her, it seems to me that Mansa Ram did effectually set up adverse possession as owner to the land in question and his adverse possession against the appellants, and in fact against the whole world, began from the date of the mutation in his favour. In the peculiar circumstances of this case, the fact that Mansa Ram was mortgagee of the land before the death of Musammât Lachmi is immaterial so far as the application of the doctrine of adverse possession is concerned, for it is not denied that there may be circumstances under which the mortgagee can in law set up adverse possession in regard to the mortgaged property. Counsel for the appellants relied upon certain decisions of our own Court and of the Allahabad High Court in support of his contention that, generally speaking, the mortgagee cannot claim adversely to mortgagor the property which had been mortgaged to him; but the correctness of that proposition is admitted on all hands; the question for decision in the present case being whether this is not one of those exceptional cases in which the mortgagee can set up adverse possession regarding the property mortgaged to him. I am of opinion that he can, for admittedly the mortgagor died without leaving any issue or reversioner of her husband related to him in a definite degree of relationship, and the land has been claimed by the proprietary body as the ultimate heirs to the property of a childless proprietor.

As pointed out by the District Judge, not only have the plaintiffs not brought the present suit within twelve years from the date of the mutation of 1898 but they have omitted to sue within twelve years from the year 1897, when the mortgage could have been redeemed according to the terms of the original contract.

For the above reasons I agree with the District Judge in holding the suit barred by limitation; and I accordingly maintain his judgment and decree and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

They did not expressly set up in the plaint a title by adverse possession, but the plea of title by adverse possession was included in the statement of facts on which the plaintiffs based their claim for title and the issue of the plaintiffs' title by adverse possession was fought out on its merits in the first Court. The case set up by the defendants was not that the plaintiffs had been in permissive possession, but that they had never been in possession:

sif, Additional Court, at Rampurhat, dated the 18th of September 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (with him Babu Jatindra Narain Bagchi), for the Appellants.—Although the plaintiff failed to prove Lakheraj possession, adverse possession has been decreed in his favour, there being no prayer in the plaint for adverse possession. The Court below should not have entered into the question of plaintiff's title by adverse possession, as there was no prayer for that in the plaint and as that was not the subject-matter in issue in the lower Court. The plaintiff cannot succeed upon a title which he never set up. Bijoya Debia v. Bydonath Deb (1), Shiro Kumari Debi v. Govind Shaw Tanti (2), Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi (3), Vasudeva Padhi Khadanga Garu v. Maguni Devan Bakshi Mahapatrulu Garu (4) referred to. The case of Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi (3) was in regard to a suit for possession on declaration of plaintiff's title, whereas this case is for a declaration of title merely. Hence this case is distinguishable from the former set of cases beginning with Bijoya Debia v. Bydonath Deb (1).

Again it has been held in Sundari Dasses v. Mudhoo Ohunder Sircar (5) that where a mere declaration of title is sought you cannot succeed unless the title is proved. Again in Vasudeva Padhi Khadanga Garu v. Maguni Devan Bakshi Mahapatrulu Garu (4) also possession was sought upon declaration of title of the plaintiff. But the case was a suit for partition, so the case is not against me.

That this distinction between a suit for possession upon declaration of title and for simply declaration of title has been drawn to a great length I would show from a judgment of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in Ananda Hari Basak v. Secretary of State (6).

Babu Biraj Mohan Mojumdar (with him Babu Jatindra Lal Banerjee), for the Respondents.—Argument of the other side is rather academic. He says that this case is a new one altogether.

[NEWBOULD, J.—His case is that the cases on which the lower Court depended in dismissing the suit against him are cases of possession, whereas his case is for declaration of title.]

The two issues framed by the lower Court, viz., (1) whether the suit is barred by limitation, and (2) Has the plaintiff Lakheraj title in the land, involve adverse possession. Then again in Vasudeva Padhi Khadanga Garu v. Maguni Devan Bakshi Mahapatrulu Garu (4) the parties gave evidence on the point of adverse possession. In Ananda Hari Basak v. Secretary of State (6) it is said that if the point is raised directly or indirectly that is sufficient.

In a case like this where Lakheraj title is set up and adverse possession is found a decree should be given for this, and this view has been supported by two cases in 22 C. L. J., one at page 126 [Jafar Ahmed v. Birendra Kishore Manikya Bahadur (7)] and another at page 132 [Birendra Kisore Manikya Bahadur v. Gagan Ohandra (8)]. There is another case also at 22 C. L. J. 153 [Birendra Kisore, Manikya v. Ram Ohandra Dey (9)], which supports this view.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought the suit out of which this appeal arises to establish their Lakheraj title to a certain tank. Both the lower Courts held that this Lakheraj title had not been proved but that the plaintiffs had succeeded in proving a title by adverse possession. It is contended on behalf of the appellants, first, that on the suit as framed the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree, and, secondly, that the facts found are not sufficient to justify the conclusion that the possession of the plaintiffs was adverse.

As regards the first point, the learned Pleader for the appellants has addressed an able and interesting argument, taking us through a number of reported cases commencing with the case of Bijoya Debia v. Bydonath Deb (1) and ending with the case of Ram Chandra Sil v. Ramanmani Dasi (3). We do not consider it necessary to discuss the point how far the plaintiffs can succeed on a title by adverse possession that has not been expressly set up in the plaint, because it appears to us from a reading of the plaint in this case that the plea of title by adverse possession was included in the statement of facts on which the plaintiffs based their claim for title, and it also appears that the issue of the plaintiffs' title by adverse possession was fought out on its merits in the first Court. Though such an issue was not distinctly framed, it appears from the judgment of the first Court, in joining the issue of limitation to the issue of Lakheraj title, that the parties clearly understood that the plaintiffs' claim to title by adverse possession was in issue.

As regards the second point, although the lower Courts have not distinctly stated on what ground they held the plaintiffs, long possession to be adverse, it appears that in those Courts the case set up by the defendants was, not that the plaintiffs had been in permissive possession, but that they had not been in possession at all. The defendants tried to prove that they themselves had been in actual possession of this tank. The finding that the plaintiffs have been in possession for generations and that the defendants have never been in possession must be taken as conclusive in second appeal; and on those findings, we cannot see that any other inference could be drawn except that the plaintiffs' possession was adverse.

Taking this view, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

APPELLANTS

versus

SRI KISHAN DAS AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Patents and Designs Act (II of 1911), s. 3—Patent —Invention, what is—Combination of old materials in new form, whether can be patented.

Plaintiffs invented a stove for the preparation of banslochan, a medicinal powder. The essential features of the process were the treatment of the raw substance at a red heat with sulphuric acid inside a closed crucible or retort made entirely of earthenware. The advantages involved were:—(a) No iron or other metal being used in the composition of the crucible there was no danger of any deleterious action on the part of the furnace of the acid upon the metal; and (b) the retort or crucible being entirely closed from the time when the acid was added until the process of calcination was complete, there was no necessity of a chimney communicating with the retort for the purpose of carrying off the fumes of the acid. The action of the acid on the crude material under these conditions became more thorough and satisfactory and the possible nuisance from the escaping fumes of the acid was done away with.

Held, that this specification was a good subject-matter for a patent. [p. 463, col. 2; p. 464, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Farrukhabad, at Fatehgarh.

Mr. Kemfry, (of the Calcutta Bar) (with him Mr. B. E. O'Connor, the Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru and Dr. S. M. Sulaiman), for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Moti Lal Nehru (with him Dr. Surendro Nath Sen), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—We have come to the conclusion that this appeal must succeed. There has been a very full discussion, upon somewhat unfamiliar lines in this Court; but we have no doubt as to the proper conclusion which out to be reached. The appeal is brought by the plaintiffs, the registered patentees of a process of manufacture, the plaintiffs consisting of Lakhpat Rai, Sampat Rai and Manful Narain, and carrying on business at No. 14, Mulliek Street, Calcutta, against a judgment dismissing their suit brought against the defendants Srikishan Das, Babal Rai and Bhoop Narain, carrying on business at Farrukhabad, for infringement of the patent. One Prag Narain, who figures somewhat prominently in the case, is a member of the plaintiffs' firm but for reasons best known to the plaintiffs was not one of the applicants for the patent, and is, therefore, not a necessary party to the suit. The ground upon which the suit was dismissed was a question of fact, namely, that the process for which the plaintiffs had obtained their patent had

Speaking for myself, I think it desirable to make one or two general observations. The patent law is a provision made by the Legislature for the encouragement of research, industry and progress. It rewards genuine discoveries by giving them a limited monopoly and thereby seeks to encourage commercial enterprise and development. A patent suit in which the validity of an alleged discovery is challenged is one in which the Courts would seem to have a right to expect candour and honest dealing and genuine assistance in the often complex and difficult technical question of ascertaining whether the alleged new process is really a good subject-matter for a patent. In this case the parties appear to be men of position in their own commercial circle; each has charged the other with the perpetration or attempted perpetration of a mean and contemptible fraud. There has obviously been a mass of hard swearing which has enormously increased the difficulties of the task thrown upon the Court. We have had to do our best to sift the truth from a mass of untruth. Apart from this aspect of the case which must seriously have prolonged the litigation, there is even a graver aspect. It is regrettable, and it is a matter to which those who are interested in the industrial development of this country might well direct their attention, that commercial disputes of this kind should be tainted by a mass of palpably dishonest evidence, unfair methods of competition, and conduct which decent people cannot but reprobate. Moreover, the conduct of the case in Court (we are saying nothing about the learned gentlemen who appeared for either party before the Subordinate Judge who gave judgment in Farrukhabad, we refer particularly to some of the incidents when evidence was taken on commission) is characterised by a method of cross-examination in the case of independent and respectable professional witnesses, which is worthy of the worst traditions of the lowest forms of litigation and which is calculated, if indulged in as a practice in the way in which it was indulged in in this case, to make our trial Courts a terror to self-respecting men and to produce a state of things under which only those will care to come and give evidence who have no character to lose. We may say at once, as we are differing from the view of the facts taken by the lower Court, that we find very little assistance in the Subordinate Judge's judgment. It consists of a considerable amount of painstaking criticism, some of which is difficult to follow, some of which we find ourselves unable to agree with, while some of the conclusions are so vague or so overburdened with details that their weight is largely discounted. We, therefore, have to approach the consideration of the mass of conflicting evidence in this case unobscured by the existing decision and to form an independent judgment of our own. In one respect we are not at a very serious disadvantage. It so happens that the majority of the principal witnesses in the case were examined either on commission or by the learned Subordinate Judge's predecessor and were, therefore, not seen or heard by the learned Judge any more than they have been by us. The controversy arises in this way. About the 23rd of June 1915 the plaintiffs applied to the Patent Office in Calcutta for a patent, the claim for which and the specification for which is contained in the document before us, Specification No. 2191. The claim related to the manufacture of an ancient and well-known medicinal commodity called banslochan. As a matter of interest we may quote here the chemical description of this article as found in Professor Thompson's Pharmacopœia.

The powder in question, which is manufactured by a calcining process from bamboo, is said to be a medicine for the home, and to possess certain restorative and invigorating qualities for the old as well as for the young which, if they do not entirely fulfil their promise, may at any rate account for their undoubted popularity. The powder is made from the interior of bamboo which is found in Singapore, by baking or calcining. According to the plaintiffs this process has up to, generally speaking, June 1915 been carried out by means of iron-pans when the commodity is prepared in any substantial quantities. Of course they do not allege, and no sane person could allege, that ordinary earthenware pans could not be and indeed were not in fact used from time to time by persons who wanted to prepare a small quantity for their own use without delay, but as a matter of trade use when the manufacturer is preparing the stuff in any quantity for the market, according to the allegation of the plaintiffs, the ordinary known method was by the use of iron-pans in which the stuff was placed for the purpose of being cooked under great heat in a stove. According to them also the effects of the use of iron-pans were to produce a rapid and intense heat operating directly upon the material; to make the cost of the stove somewhat greater than if ordinary earthen-ware pans were used, particularly because the tendency of the iron-pan was to wear out quickly and also to produce in the substance itself what has been called a brownish or reddish tint, specimens of which we have seen with our own eyes in bottles which have been exhibited in the case, and which is regarded in the market by those who know the stuff well, without having a serious drawback, as something which makes the article inferior to the best standard. According to the plaintiffs also they were constantly worrying and working by experiments of various kinds to arrive at some satisfactory process of heating which would be cheaper and more satisfactory than the old method; and in substance they claim by this patent to have achieved that result by a combination of earthen-ware vessels placed one upon the top of the other in the stove as described and delineated in the specification, which method they say has the superior advantages of securing a slower heat, enabling the material to be treated (as it always is treated at some stage and in some form or another) with sulphuric acid at a red heat, of confining the fumes produced by the sulphuric acid within a closed crucible and of producing a better colour of pure white or bluish white. There is less risk of the brownish or reddish tint manifesting itself and the production is regarded in the market as superior in appearance and quality and costs less. Another feature, according to their allegation, which distinguishes the new process from the old, is that in the latter stoves there was a chimney of greater or less height which carried away the fumes. The specification was ultimately accepted and was published to the world by a formal notice in the Gazette of India of the 16th October 1915 in the following terms; "Improvements in the manufacture of a medical preparation, Patent No. 2191," which we feel bound to say in passing cannot be regarded as a satisfactory mode of summarising the real claim which had been accepted by the office.

We now turn to certain other dates. On a date in July 1915, by a coincidence which can only be described as remarkable, one Maharaj Narain paid a visit to Calcutta. This Maharaj Narain, who gave evidence in the case for the defendants, although not a member of the defendants' firm, was their general Attorney and apparently the moving spirit. We think that the object of this visit has not been satisfactorily explained. Maharaj Narain's reasons for it are two-fold. He says he was desirous to make arrangements or to ascertain how arrangements could be made for securing the raw materials of bamboo from Singapore, and also to take lessons from one Munna Lal in the construction of the stove which was in common use for the manufacture of banslochan. A railway journey from Farrukhabad to Calcutta strikes us as a somewhat expensive mode of communication by post with Singapore. And if, as the defendants' case is, it be the fact that the plaintiffs' process of manufacture was wellknown throughout India and particularly in Farrukhabad and all that was necessary was for somebody on the spot to show the workmen in Farrukhabad how to build a stove, we do not see why it was necessary to go to Calcutta at all. The process of imparting the knowledge which Munna Lal posassed to the mind of Maharaj Narain appears to have occupied a considerable period. Although the visit took place in July, it is not suggested that the defendants began to build until September of the same year. The nature of the construction of the stove is such that the time occupied by instructing a competent workman how to make it and in fact producing one complete from top to bottom could not possibly amount to more than a week. Whether the course of lessons was more troublesome than had been anticipated or whether there was an unexpected delay in obtaining the raw materials from Singapore we do not know, but the next date which is important is the 18th of December 1915, when the defendants wrote to a customer in Delhi in these terms:—"Our compliments to you. We have started factory for manufacturing banslochan. All kinds of goods are in stock. The rates will be given below, please note them. The rates have fallen down on account of the opening of our factory; so you should send for goods from us, in order that you may derive benefit and our factory may receive help from you. We shall send goods of a very superior quality. Please send for a small quantity of goods as sample and see them. What more to add?" And then follows a list of rates to which we shall refer in a moment. It is hardly to be wondered at, having regard to the terms of that letter and to the fact that it is common ground that the process of manufacture referred to in that letter was precisely the same as the plaintiffs' patented process of manufacture, that the defendants have not seriously challenged the plaintiffs' contention that the plaintiffs' process of manufacture if new is certainly an improvement. The defendants have not attempted to explain in any way consistent with the ordinary conduct of honest business men the sudden enthusiasm, worked up one may say to almost white heat, which they displayed for the manufacture of banslochan between June and December 1915, but having regard to the fact that the rates per seer set out in their letter were a very substantial reduction upon the price then being charged by the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were admittedly practically in sole possession of the market, we have not the slightest doubt that on the 18th of December when that letter was written and further back even when they determined to enter the market for the sale of this commodity, they knew perfectly well that whether it was a genuine discovery or not, the plaintiffs were coming upon the market with an alleged improved method of manufacturing this commodity which was likely to be a commercial success and that they had made up their minds, by fair means or by foul, to share the profits which they anticipated the plaintiffs were going to make if their invention were accepted by the public. On the 26th of January 1916 an even more striking document came into existence. A telegram was sent to the defendants from Calcutta by another Maharaj Narain, who appears upon the stage for a moment and subsequently is seen no more in connection with this case. The plaintiffs, by an application made in the course of the suit, not unnaturally showed considerable curiosity about this telegram and no doubt also as to what this Maharaj Narain was doing in Calcutta. That curiosity has never been satisfied as the defendants have not put this Maharaj Narain in the box. All we know about him is that he belongs to a younger generation, that he is the son of Bahal Rai, one of the defendants, and that he wired to the defendants in the following terms: "Lakhpatt Rai doing registry of banslochan, come immediately." It is to be observed that that telegram alleges, and it is quite possible that the plaintiffs themselves have alleged sometime or another, that this patent gave them the sole right of manufacture and sale of the commodity itself. It does not refer to the process. It is quite clear, however, that Maharaj Narain the general Attorney of the defendants, to whom it was sent and who, that is to say, Maharaj Narain in Farrukhabad undoubtedly received and dealt with the telegram, knew quite well that the telegram referred to a process and not merely to the commodity. What exactly he did except a visit to Cawnpore to consult somebody is not quite clear. But on the 27th of January he sent a telegram to the Controller of Patents, Calcutta, in the following terms: "Application for patent process manufacture of bamboo camphor tendered by Lakhpai Rai, Sampat Rai or other party is for a process used by ourselves and several manufacturers, are forwarding representation." Two observations arise upon that document. Maharaj Narain would have us believe that the telegram which he had received from his namesake was the only information which he had upon the subject at all. We find it impossible to believe this statement. The telegram to the Controller of Patents shows that he knew perfectly well that the application dealt with the process of manufacture, no reference to which had been made in the telegram received from Calcutta, but more than that, he alleged in the telegram sent within 24 hours of the news which he had received from Calcutta that the process for which application had been made was the same as that with which he was so familiar. It is impossible that he could have become aware of that fact, even if it were a fact, by means of the telegram from Calcutta. We are satisfied on these materials alone that the telegram was a disingenuous document sent expressly for some purpose of the defendants' own and that the conduct of Maharaj Narain and his perfectly hopeless attempts to get out of the difficulty are only evidence of the guilty conscience of a dishonest man. It does not, however, rest there. The telegram was followed up by a letter which it is necessary to examine very carefully, having regard to the statements about it made by Maharaj Narain when he was very naturally asked in cross-examination to explain its language. It is dated the 27th of January 1916, from Farrukhabad. It is signed "Sri Kishan Das by the pen of Maharaj Narain." It is, however, said on behalf of the defendants-respondents at the Bar before us, I think it was not very clearly said at the trial, to have been written by a scribe for Maharaj Narain when Maharaj Narain was in Cawnpore. It is in the following terms: "We are informed that Lakhpai Rai Sampat Rai of 14 Mullick Street, Calcutta, have applied for permission to patent a process for the manufacture of bamboo camphor (banslochan). We have the honour to state that the same process has been in use by us for sometime past and others have been using it for a still longer period. The object of this applicant is apparently to place obstacles in the way of our doing business and although in our opinion there is nothing patentable in the process, we deem it necessary to record the fact that the process which the applicants propose to patent is not new" (so far the letter merely repeats what had been said in the telegram and then follow these significant words) "and is in common use by a number of manufacturers in this district." The defendants' case at the trial, as we shall have occasion to point out in a moment, was that this process of manufacture had been adopted for the most part by firms in Calcutta for many years although they had during the last decade been driven out of the market by the plaintiffs. Maharaj Narain was, therefore, asked to explain the language used in this letter. He first said: "I wrote in the letter to the Patent Office that the said process for preparing banslochan was used by a number of manufacturers in the district, because two factories were then using that process and several other factories in this district had formerly used that process." Now there can be no mistake about that sentence. He was confronted with the letter which he had written and he was asked by the cross-examiner perfectly naturally and fairly, "to what you were referring" and he pledged himself on a critical question in the dispute to the fact, although not a tittle of evidence has been called to support it, that in the district, that is to say, in Farrukhabad, because the writer was at Farrukhabad, there were two factories using that process and several other factories in the district had formerly used it. He could have had no doubt whatever as to the purport and meaning of the question which was put to him and as to the meaning of the answer which he gave. He was then reminded indirectly that his case at the trial was that it was mainly in use in Calcutta and the cross-examiner put this question, "Can you state any reason why you did not mention about Calcutta in it?" He answered: "I did not mention any place; but simply told him that several manufacturers used that process and I cannot say, what he understood that he mentioned the words in this district." So that after swearing point blank that he used the words in this district with special reference to factories which were really in his mind, and realising the difficulty that he got himself into having regard to the real facts which he was able to prove, he recanted and threw the blame on to the Babu to whom he was dictating the letter. We have dwelt upon this incident in the case, because it is only by such tests (they are specially valuable where you get a contemporaneous document under the hand of a witness which he cannot deny), fairly applied by a proper cross-examination, that you can prove the witnesses in a case of acute conflict of verbal testimony and see where the pinch comes. We have come to the conclusion that the conduct of Maharaj Narain, with regard to the statements which he made in the documents themselves and the hopeless attempt to get out of the difficulty in which he found himself when challenged on oath in the witness box, shows that he was a dishonest witness, that he was labouring under a guilty conscience and that there is no explanation of his conduct except upon the hypothesis which the plaintiffs allege, that he was the moving spirit in an attempt to steal and purloin the plaintiffs' process from them by unfair means.

Shortly after this incident and the telegram of protest to the Controller of Patents, it being too late for the defendants to challenge the registration of the patent, they continued the manufacture which, it is admitted, is practically the same process as the plaintiffs' and thereby forced the plaintiffs to bring this suit. The plaintiffs ask for an injunction and for damages. The defendants, while alleging generally that the alleged invention is not really a good subject-matter for a patent, for example they say in paragraph 6 of their defence that it was the original form of stove in common use for a long time in India, raise a somewhat broader issue of fact on which the trial in the Court below and much of the discussion before us has really turned, namely, they have committed themselves to this somewhat startling proposition that not only other traders mostly in Calcutta, but even the plaintiffs themselves, have all along manufactured banslochan by this method which the plaintiffs now seek to patent, that it is really the only method known to the trade, that it is incapable of improvement, and that the plaintiffs have themselves been doing business by this method for some 12 or 13 years, and that they really were endeavouring to impose upon the Controller of Patents and the general public, not a thing in which they believed as a new discovery, but a thing which they knew was well known to others as well as to themselves and was an attempt to defraud the general public. Now that, as we have said, was a startling proposition which one would naturally require to be clearly and definitely established in fact. The defendants alleged in their answers to the interrogatories served upon them in the course of the suit by the plaintiffs the names of the firms relied upon by them as being those commonly using this process of manufacture:

1. Hulasi Rai, Calcutta.
2. Hanuman Sahai Rameshar, Calcutta.
3. Bhagwan Das Munna Lal, Calcutta.
4. Prag Narain, Calcutta. (Now one of the plaintiffs' firm).
5. Lakhpat Rai Chhote Lal, Calcutta. (The plaintiffs' firm).
6. Silchand Sadh, Calcutta.
7. Juggi Lal Bania, Farrukhabad.
8. Mathura Das-Sat Narain, Cawnpore

Omitting from this list the two now connected with the plaintiffs' firm, these persons appear to have ceased business altogether for periods varying from 40 years to 15. It is not suggested that any of them has manufactured banslochan during the last 14 years. Two of them or representatives of two of them appeared in the box. All of them were admittedly failures in business. At the trial Munna Lal, one of them, was called and he spoke of three, two of whom are additions to the list which I have read, namely, Karim Baksh and Gappu Lal. But inasmuch as neither of them appeared in person at the trial no further reference need be made to their business. Reference will have to be made to the two witnesses Munna Lal and Rameshwar in a moment. But the striking fact, and it is common ground between the parties in this case, is that the plaintiffs by ordinary competition, and if the defendants' case is to be believed by the use of precisely the same process that the defendants themselves have been using and everybody else in the trade has been using, have succeeded during the last 12 or 13 years in securing a paramount position in the trade. All their rivals have been beaten out of the field and it is not suggested that during that period of 12 or 13 years the plaintiffs have enjoyed any superior advantage over their competitors, and the theory is that in spite of that fact and although they have successfully carried on their business during that period, almost unrivalled, by the well-known process which was open to everybody, they nonetheless thought it necessary, so far as we can see for no possible object either of gain or of anything else, to invent a story which could have been exposed and blown to pieces in five minutes by honest evidence, namely, that all this time they have been adopting a totally different method, that they have been experimenting in new methods and only just discovered, and, therefore, went to the expense and trouble of obtaining a patent for this ancient method which was known to all. We think that theory has hopelessly broken down upon the evidence and that it is a hypothesis which would require overwhelming evidence for any Court to accept as the real truth.

Turning to the oral evidence, which it is necessary to examine in this case with the preface which we have already made, namely, that there is on the written evidence and on the admitted facts serious reason for doubting the honesty of the defendants' case, a very strong attack was made by the Hon'ble Motilal Nehru for the respondents upon the plaintiffs for not, as he put it, going into the box. We think this comment is really not justified. They did go into the box in the true sense of the word. The District Judge, who originally was intended to try this case, himself called Maharaj Narain for the defendants on the one side and Manful Narain, one of the plaintiffs, on the other side. Manful Narain gave his statement to the learned Judge describing in general language the present process, saying that in the old stove an iron tray had been used, that the present stove is closed above the trays while the other was not so, that in the old stove there used to be a chimney while in the new there is no chimney, that under the old stove the working had been going on in his factory in Calcutta for many years, that he had never seen an earthen-bowl being used in any other factory until they decided to use it and as far as he knew, for 13 or 14 years nobody in Calcutta had been manufacturing this stuff at all. We do not know what more the plaintiffs could say than this witness said, unless he was cross-examined in detail either by the Court or by the other party. A sort of argument was suggested that Mr. Remfry, who conducted the case for the plaintiffs in the Court below, ought to have put the man into the box again. We cannot see the slightest reason why he should have done this. The witness had given a general account of his case consistent with the independent witnesses who were subsequently called to support it and if the defendants thought that they could get anything out of this particular witness of whom they now make a grievance as not having been called at all, nothing was easier than for them to apply to the learned Judge at the trial to re-call him for cross-examination. It is idle to suggest that the provision in the Code which enables a Judge to call one of the parties and put him on oath, does not make the witness just as much a witness and make the evidence just as relevant, as if he is called by his own representative. And why in the world when he has given satisfactory evidence his legal representative should go through the ceremony of putting him into the box again for examination-in-chief, we cannot for the life of us understand. But there is nothing in the point, even if there were any technical grievance which could be founded upon it, because Prag Narain, although not a plaintiff, is to all intents and purposes the same as a plaintiff; and he gave evidence at considerable length and his story was much to the same effect. He had obviously been working on his own account and had in 1911 joined the present plaintiffs in partnership. He described in detail the present form of manufacture and the old form of manufacture. He explained that the acid was mixed formerly with the dry banslochan and that the mixture was put into the stove. He said that acid was used before putting banslochan into the stove, apparently referring to the process of washing before baking. He described the chimney which was formerly in use. He described how for the last 18 months they had ceased to use iron-pans, and had used earthen-ware pans or kholis in their place. He said that the inventors were Lakhpai Rai, Sampat Rai and Manful Narain, giving the three names of the plaintiffs excluding himself, which may mean that they all individually took part, or may mean nothing, namely, that they were merely the owners and that somebody in their employ had lighted upon the idea. The only question is whether it was a real discovery, and he described the advantages of the new process in these terms:—"The new invention therein is this, three kholis, a handi and another handi to cover it and a gamla with a hole to cover it over which another handi is placed. This is the new invention. No stove of this kind was made before. Besides the above, there are four bricks inside the stove on which the three kholis rest and three bricks above to keep the gamla and the fact that fire affects kholis and handis from all sides. Besides this there is no new invention. By doing away with the chimney the benefit is that the fumes of acid formerly used to escape but now they materially affect the material and thoroughly clean it. This is the new invention in it." And he mentions by the way that Dr. Hossack, whom we shall have to refer to in a moment, came and saw the process when iron-pans were used, that he remained standing below the platform and asked a few questions for a space of five minutes, that they showed him how they mixed the acid into the crude banslochan, kept outside the stove, by pushing it in with a ladle and that no acid was used in his presence when the stuff became red hot. He also said that Dr. Hossack must have been in error or must have been misunderstood when he was reported as saying that the acid was thrown into the stuff, as it never was. In connection with the evidence of this witness and of the conflict, if any, between him and Dr. Hossack, it is not unimportant to refer to the evidence of Mr. Briggs, commonly called Bugs in the book. He was called by the plaintiffs and was examined on commission and described himself as an analytical consulting chemist. He seems to have had good training in England and to have worked under a gentleman of experience in India since 1898. He was not a witness to any fact but merely an expert upon the new process. Assuming the facts to be as alleged by the plaintiffs, he said that he thought the new stove was better. He had been shown what was alleged to be the old process, and, therefore, he believed the pans in it to be of iron, and upon that hypothesis he said that the new stove was better on account of its slow heat, whereas the old stove being of iron must be a fast heater. He had never seen a stove like the plaintiffs' before. But it does not appear that he had been in the way of seeing these stoves one way or the other in the past. But his opinion was that the effect of adding sulphuric acid to cold material would not be nearly so satisfactory as at a red heat, while on the other hand an attempt to add it at a white heat would be to lead to too rapid an evaporation, which might be dangerous, and in the former stove which he saw it would be impracticable. He said it was not an ordinary accepted theory that sulphuric acid should be added at a red heat. And he suggested that the iron-pan (it was only a belief on his part but it is not without significance in its bearing upon the rest of the evidence) probably was the reason of the reddish or brownish appearance of banslochan which had been seen and objected to in the past, his theory being that the acid acting upon the iron-pan when hot would produce what he described as ferrous sulphate. He said that the furnace may be called a furnace on the reverberatory principle, and he made also this important statement. Having seen the stove which was alleged to be new and the stove which was alleged to be old, he said the stoves did resemble one another in outward appearance, although one was made of iron pans and the other of earthen vessels. The importance of that is (it is plain upon the evidence even if it is not plain to one's own intelligence) that you can only discover whether iron pans or earthen pans are used inside by some kind of physical or ocular test, and that you cannot possibly discover it by the naked eye when the place inside is a burning furnace. The next witness relied upon by the plaintiffs is Dr. Sandal. Dr. Sandal was a subordinate official in the Health Department in Calcutta, a kind of Inspector of nuisances, whose business it was to go round and visit factories under his superior officer, and he was subordinate at one time undoubtedly to the witness whom we shall refer to in a moment, Dr. Hossack. He gave a detailed account, which it is not necessary to recite, of the old system worked by the plaintiffs as he remembered it, and if his evidence is believed, the truth of this dispute would clearly be on the side of the plaintiffs. A most violent attack, and in our opinion an entirely unjustifiable attack, was made upon this witness and for certain reasons which are material to other parts of the case, we propose to examine it in some detail. It is quite true that the witness was not a man of the highest academic qualifications and that he had bought, as other people have bought, an American degree. The curious feature of the impertinent and virulent attack upon his intellectual and academical qualifications, apart altogether from his personal character, was the fact that when he was asked a question as to whether the stove now used by the plaintiffs was an improvement, an objection was raised by the legal gentleman who subsequently cross-examined him about his intellectual qualifications, on the ground that he was not called as an expert, so that while the defendants objected to his answering a question as an expert, they delivered a cold-blooded and deliberate attack upon his educational qualifications. As a matter of fact he did not profess to be an expert in the real sense of the word and his answer, when he was allowed to give it, shows what was uppermost in his mind, namely, his duties as an Inspector of nuisances. He said: "the present process that I have seen is far better and no nuisance is created either to the inmates of the house or to the neighbours and the material now is whiter and better than before." It is due to this gentleman to say that he was in the employment of the Municipal Corporation of Calcutta for about 25 years and that he retired after that period owing to ill-health with a pension. He was challenged with the opinion of his superior officer and he answered as only an honest witness could do, that he did not think that Dr. Hossack was ever at the factory for any great length of time but whatever he (Dr. Hossack) said he had seen he (the witness) could say nothing. He (the witness) was only there to speak to what he had seen. Having failed by throwing every sort of mud at this witness for a considerable time to make the slightest impression upon his evidence, the defendants then embarked upon a new and more desperate form of attack. They deliberately accused this witness, not in the presence, be it observed, of the Court trying the case, but in the presence of a Commissioner, of having offered to sell his evidence to them for Rs. 500 and they did this by the production in person of the two persons to whom the offer was supposed to have been made. Their names were Kunji Lal and Gappu Lal. It is impossible for us to shut our eyes to the fact that Gappu Lal is the name of the petitioner in an original suit which has been connected with this appeal and which has been heard by us, although judgment has been reserved, in which he, Gappu Lal, seeks to revoke this very patent, and that Gappu Lal and Kunji Lal, these two men, have given evidence before us in that suit testifying to their personal knowledge of the old process by which lanslochan was manufactured. Mr. Moti Lal for the respondents, contended, when we asked him why these two men to whom Dr. Sandal is alleged to have offered to sell his evidence were not called, that the law did not permit him to put them into the box but that by another section of the Evidence Act he was bound by the answer of the witness. If that view is correct, Dr. Sandal's evidence stands untainted and untouched by the attack upon him. But it is impossible for us not to ask ourselves the question why, if these two men were in a position to give evidence before us in another suit, one of them being actually the petitioner and an alleged manufacturer and seller of the substance (banslochan) who alleges that he has suffered a grievance through this patent and could testify to the fact that one of the principal witnesses called by the plaintiffs had made an offer to them to sell his evidence to the defendants, they were not called as witnesses in this suit. To that question there has been no attempt of any kind to make any answer. The learned Judge undoubtedly rejected the evidence of Dr. Sandal. We are unable quite to understand the ground on which the learned Judge refused to treat him as an honest witness. It is true that Dr. Sandal admitted that he went for his own examination before the Commissioner on a date other than that on which he was really summoned, having reason to believe that he would be wanted on that date, and the learned Judge accepts the explanation in his judgment, but nonetheless he comes to the conclusion that this matter, which is satisfactorily explained, coupled with the negotiations about the purchase of his evidence makes the matter suspicious. The view of the learned Judge is that the evidence of a witness should be rejected if only he is asked questions sufficiently offensive to arouse suspicion as to his character. We cannot agree that this is a sufficient reason, and we see none for throwing over Dr. Sandal's evidence. It may be that Sanitary Inspectors are not always absolutely reliable, but they must be shown, and not presumed, to be untrustworthy.

The next witness relied upon by the plaintiffs was Dr. Mitter. Here again we have been ourselves unable to accept the somewhat hypercriticism to which this gentleman's evidence has been submitted by the lower Court. There does not seem to be anything extraordinary in Dr. Mitter's story that he, being a doctor on a ship between Singapore and Calcutta, made the acquaintance of one of the plaintiffs whose business was in both places and who was travelling backwards and forwards and as the result of this friendship he went to stay with the plaintiffs and had medically treated one of them, and was wandering about their premises and became acquainted with the manufacture which was going on and out of which they were making their living. And why a doctor should not, assuming that he was there and interested himself on a holiday in the manufacture of the article by which his friends were making a livelihood, take the opportunity of looking into the stove out of curiosity and satisfying himself whether it contained an iron-pan or earthen ware pan we do not quite see. However, the learned Judge seems to find something so uncommon in it that he regards it as not true at all, and in the course of his judgment he has come to the conclusion that none of the details of Dr. Mitter's story can be accepted. Being apparently dissatisfied in his own mind with that criticism he finally came to the conclusion that Dr. Mitter was not there at all. But we think that there is no material on which we can treat Dr. Mitter otherwise than as an honest witness, who was desirous of giving the best assistance he could from his recollection. And again if Dr. Mitter's evidence is believed, the fact that the plaintiffs were using iron-pans in the stove is clearly established. On the whole we think that the plaintiffs have made out a satisfactory case; that there is no reason for disbelieving the five witnesses to whom we have referred; that upon their evidence it is established that iron-pans were formerly used; that the earthen-ware pans were new; that the present combination is an improvement and that it has the advantages claimed for it.

We have, however, to consider further how far the defendants' evidence makes a serious inroad upon this evidence. The defendants called a quantity of evidence. We have already given sufficient reason for distrusting the evidence of Maharaj Narain. The main features which the defendants otherwise rely upon are the evidence of Dr. Hossack, undoubtedly a scientific witness of high standing and respectability, Munna Lal who is alleged to have been in the trade and to have taught Maharaj Narain, and further a contemporaneous report made by one Mr. Kundu, a subordinate in the Health Department and a kind of Inspector of nuisances subordinate to Dr. Hossack. We think that giving full weight to Dr. Hossack's evidence it really comes to very little. He was palpably an honest witness who frankly said that he was very hazy, and the more pressed he was upon details, the more he explained that his recollection was really a hazy one. It is but natural that a busy man like Dr. Hossack with important avocations should forget what he had seen long before, to which at the time he attached no importance and in which he had no concern; and when reminded about it should come to Court with a very hazy recollection of it. Whereas the case of a man like Dr. Mitter is quite different. Although he had no concern in the matter, being a friend of the plaintiffs he might very naturally spend his leisure time in looking into their stove; but Dr. Hossack was a busy man engaged in his profession, and, therefore, the plaintiffs' case may be perfectly true and everything that Dr. Hossack said may be perfectly honest, whereas it is impossible for the defendants' case to be true without convicting Dr. Sandal and Dr. Mitter of flagrant and deliberate perjury. This in itself is a reason for preferring the plaintiffs' story, supported as it is by witnesses who relate facts which could only be wilfully untrue, if untrue at all: whereas in so doing we do not cast the slightest discredit upon Dr. Hossack's testimony. We do not think that he was really prepared to commit himself upon the question whether the interior of the stove was iron or not. It is plain from Dr. Brigg's evidence that he could not have examined it for himself at any rate with his eye, and he does not profess to have used any other means, and it is quite clear from the report which he made on the 14th of October 1909 that the process of calcining the bamboo camphor, in what he called a retort, with an addition of sulphuric acid occasionally, was being carried on in a stove which had a chimney—a fact wholly inconsistent with the defendants' case. In our opinion the evidence relied upon of Dr. Kundu, who is represented only by his report, ought really as a matter of law to be rejected. Dr. Kundu's report is alleged to be a public document under section 35 of the Evidence Act. We think that it does not come within this category at all, certainly not for the purpose of proving a fact immaterial to the matter in respect of which he was making his report. But however that may be, Dr. Kundu is alive and available and was twice summoned by the defendants. The plaintiffs properly objected to the report. Their objection was overruled. They contend in one of their grounds of appeal that this report ought to have been rejected. We agree that it ought. On the other hand it has been referred to by both sides in the Court below and before us, and even if it was improperly admitted, we think that it would make no difference to our decision in any way. It refers to the addition of strong sulphuric acid at a white heat, it refers also to the existence of a chimney, and although it does describe the stove as a "native reverberatory furnace," which according to the best understanding of that expression is inconsistent with the method of iron-pans which the plaintiffs say they were using, we are not satisfied that a gentleman who thinks that a high chimney is useful for diminishing the amount of heat generated in a stove, is a gentleman whom a priori we can accept as fully acquainted with the technical meaning of the term "reverberatory furnace." The witness Rameshar does not appeal to us as a satisfactory witness. He said he worked this process according to the plaintiffs' method for 20 years. If he did he made an astonishing mess of it. He has not attempted to work it during the last 20 years. He became the owner of the factory, in which it was alleged he had formerly worked, by a deed of gift from his former employer, the result of which was that the concern was wound up within a year. He frankly says that there is nobody now to be found in Calcutta who might have seen the stove which he had at that time, and when he was asked about the books relating to his business he made the astounding statement that a Muhammadan gentleman who lived in a bungalow wrote out the books but he is not now to be found. Another witness relied upon was a man named Ram Kumar, who was a broker. If he is like most brokers, he interests himself more in the commission to be earned from a manufactured article of this kind than in the process by which it is brought into existence. He has not been at work since 1904. He says that somebody or his clerk has been receiving profits for him, but he does not know how much. He admits having been hard hit by the plaintiffs who have been selling this stuff without an agent, and really all that he says is that he never saw iron-pans, but did see broken earthenware pans about the place where manufacture was going on, and that when he did see them he "sat down and talked." Nor can we attach much greater weight to the evidence of the gentleman, Govind Singh, who visited Calcutta and stayed with the plaintiffs. His opportunity for seeing the internal construction of this stove was, according to his first impression, from a window some fifteen yards away where he was sleeping. When pressed, he thought he got a better view of it from the enclosure where he went to relieve nature. This gentleman is under the impression that Howra Bridge is a kind of kuchha bridge of pipas covered with straw and mud; and, if that is the best account he can give of it after visiting Calcutta (we take judicial notice of the fact that Howra Bridge is at times not unlike London Bridge in the middle of the day) if that is the best this gentleman can make of his impression of Howra Bridge, we do not think that any importance can be attached to his recollection of the internal construction of the stove. Dr. Srivastav's evidence really consisted of no more than the recitation of what he had read in the journals, "Indian Forester" and "The Commercial Products of India." We may say that the Court below was mistaken in thinking that there was any legal ground for the admission of this witness's information of literature on the subject which was otherwise inadmissible; but it really contributes nothing to the case. The witnesses Ohhedu and Sheoraj Narain, one of whom apparently is an old servant of the plaintiffs and the other, a relation of Manful Narain, one of the plaintiffs, is not on very friendly terms with them, sufficiently create doubt with regard to their power of observation in respect of the material drawn out from the fire. They say it was drawn out fifteen minutes after its treatment with the acid, whereas Munna Lal says the interval is two or three minutes.

So much for the defendants' witnesses, as a whole, many of whom no doubt were doing their honest best to give an account of what they saw. This brings us to the consideration of Munna Lal, and this is the evidence which from the defendants' side causes us more difficulty than anything else in the case. He tells a story which on the face of it is clear and not open to much criticism and it has been accepted by the learned Judge who, by the bye it should be observed, did not see him as he was examined on commission. We think, however, that his connection with Maharaj Narain and with the defendants is very close, and that he is, if the expression may be used, tarred with the Maharaj Narain brush. We cannot accept as satisfactory, as we have already said, the story of Maharaj Narain's visit to Calcutta in July merely to take lessons from this witness, and one sentence in his cross-examination casts doubt upon the whole of his story. He committed himself to the positive statement that the plaintiffs had been using this process in Calcutta to his knowledge for 12 or 13 years. We have come to the conclusion that this is not the fact. It, therefore, follows that Munna Lal, when he made that statement, stated that which he knew to be untrue. We have been much pressed, as the learned Judge in the Court below was impressed, by the contents of this man's books. We have seen them. They are not in a character, although my brother, Mr. Justice Piggott, was able to read some of the figures, which was familiar either to the Commissioner who examined the witness or to the Counsel who examined and cross-examined him or to most of us in this Court. Without going in detail through the extracts which have been laid before us, it is true to say that they are not entries which by their sequence or by the way in which they occur amongst the other entries in the books absolutely recommend themselves. They do require some explanation, but the witness was not cross-examined upon this basis. He was not asked to explain them, and, therefore, no explanation was forthcoming and we are not prepared to say that they are untrustworthy in the sense that they do not represent actual contemporaneous entries; but after all they come to very little. It is true that he intended the Court to believe that the kholis and other earthenware articles, entered in these books as expenses connected with the stove, did relate to similar earthenware pans to those in the plaintiffs' stove and were used in connection with what we have described as the plaintiffs' process of manufacture and were bought and entered in the books for that purpose. But the entries are anything but clear or convincing upon that point, for example in one place kholi or covering is entered at Rs. 4-14-3, in another three kholis are entered at Rs. 2-4-0, in another three kholis are entered at Rs. 1-8-0 and in another three kholis are entered at Rs. 1-7-0, two landis at Rs. 3-9-0. These are not large or expensive or out of the way articles. They can be bought anywhere in the Bazar according to measurement, and, therefore, we ought not to be hypercritical about entries of this kind, but on the other hand it is obvious from the prices which we have mentioned that the sizes of these kholis were not all the same, and it is sufficient to say that while the entries are not inconsistent with the purchase of earthenware vessels such as are necessary for a stove like the plaintiffs', they are equally consistent with the ordinary use, by persons interested in the manufacture of the article, of earthenware pans for mixing it or washing it, and having regard to the other evidence regarded as a whole and Munna Lal's close association with Maharaj Narain whom we unhesitatingly hold to be a dishonest witness, we do not think that either he or his books are sufficient to destroy the case which the plaintiffs have established. For these reasons we have come to the conclusion that the plaintiffs' case is true, that iron pans were used and that they themselves by experiment have discovered the better use by combination of the earthenware pans.

We find that the essential features of the process patented by the plaintiffs are the treatment of the substance at a red heat with sulphuric acid inside a closed crucible or retort made entirely of earthenware. The advantages involved are:—(a) No iron or other metal being used in the composition of the crucible there is no danger of any deleterious action on the part of the furnace of the acid upon the metal aforesaid; (b) The retort or crucible is entirely closed from the time when the acid is added until the process of calcination is complete; this does away with the necessity of a chimney communicating with the retort, by means of which the fumes of the acid used to be carried off. The action of the acid on the crude material under these conditions appears to be more thorough and satisfactory, while the possible nuisance from the escaping fumes of the acid is done away with. We think this combination as embodied in the plaintiffs' specification is new, that no one ever worked it out before, that it effects a useful purpose in reaching the point of heat at which the treatment of sulphuric acid can be most effectively applied and in eliminating the brownish tint or iron matter from the material, so as to produce a purer colour and a better quality.

The question of law which has been vigorously argued, therefore, arises; whether this has been properly claimed by the plaintiffs in this specification as a good subject matter. The specification must be read as a whole and the claim interpreted by the body of the specification.

There seems to have been some difficulty in deciding in many cases of improvements how far the law casts upon the applicant the obligation of making it clear to the public or to the workman of ordinary intelligence in the trade which portion of the combination is new and which is old. We do not think anything is to be gained by discussing at length the interesting series of authorities to which we were referred by Counsel on either side. We propose to apply the principle as laid down in Harrison v. Anderston Foundry Company (1), to this case, which we hold to be one "of a new combination of admittedly old materials." The principle is enunciated in the following terms. The Lord Chancellor at page 578 says:—"If there is a patent for a combination the combination itself is ex necessitate the novelty; and the combination is also the merit, if it be a merit, which remains to be proved by evidence." Lord Hatherley while delivering his judgment in the same case says at page 583:—"Well, my Lords, that being the case, the Judges extended, as it appears to me with great respect, the doctrine of Forwell v. Bostock (2) in their application of it to this case. It was there held—and that, I think, was all that was held—that it is not competent to a man to take a well-known existing machine and having made some small improvement, to place that before the public and say:—‘I have made a better machine. There is the sewing machine invented by so and so; I have improved upon that. That is mine; it is a much better machine than his.’ That will not do: You must state clearly and distinctly what it is in which you say you have made an improvement. To use an illustration which was adopted, I think by Lord Justice James in another case, it will not do, if you have invented gridiron pendulum, to say, ‘I have invented a better clock than any body else,’ not telling the public what you have done to make it better than any other clock which is known. That principle was laid down in Fowell v. Bostock (2) and I do not think that anything further was intended to be determined in that case. It could not have been meant in that case to say that where that happens, which may well happen, that a person, arranging his machinery in a totally different way from the way in which it has ever been before arranged, although every single particle of that machinery is a well-known implement, produces an improved effect by his new arrangement, that new arrangement cannot be the subject of a patent. It may be that the levers may be perfectly well known in their mode of action, and it may be that all the other separate portions of the machinery to which the patent relates may be perfectly well known; but if he says:—‘I take all these well-known parts, and I adjust them in a manner totally different from that in which they have ever before been adjusted. I have found out just what it is that has made these parts, though they may have been used in machinery, fail to produce their proper effect and it is this, that they have not been properly arranged; I have, therefore, re-considered the whole matter and put all these several parts together in a mode in which they never were before arranged, and have produced an improved effect by so doing.’ I apprehend it is competent to that man so to do, and that it would be perfectly impossible for him to say what is new and what is old because ex concessis it is all old, nobody ever before used it in the manner in which he has used it.” His Lordship further says at page

586: “That, my Lords, is what it appears to me the patentees have done by the claims which are contained at the end of the patent: ‘Having thus particularly described the nature of our said invention and the manner in which the same is or may be performed, we have to state that we do not restrict ourselves to the precise details herein described delineated, but what we believe to be novel and original, and, therefore, claim as the invention secured to us by the hereinbefore in part recited letters patent, is—First, the construction and arrangement of the parts of pattern mechanism and shuttle box moving and holding mechanism as herein distinguished generally.’ That seems to me to be the one great claim for the whole. They say—We cannot tell you that this part or that part or the other part is in itself a new engine or a new machine, but we tell you that our combination of all those parts into a complete machine, affecting both the shuttle box moving apparatus and the pattern apparatus, is a new combination and we claim to be capable of carrying that out in an improved manner under the specification in our letters patent.” And Lord Penzance in the same case at page 590 says:—“Having thus described what the novelty consisted in, were they bound to go further and state in what the novelty did not consist? In other words, to point out everything that in the several parts or the subordinate combinations of them might be old and had been previously used? I cannot think that they were or that there is any authority in law for this requirement. If such a task were attempted to be fulfilled in reference to a machine so old, so largely altered, and so greatly improved from time to time as the weaving loom, it is not too much to say that it would be hardly possible to fulfil it without insufficiency or error. If the patentee accurately defines on the face of his specification his real invention, and the limits within which that which he claims as a novelty is confined, he is not bound, as it seems to me, to go further and specify how it is, and why it is, that his invention is novel, or recapitulate all the particulars in which it differs from preceding arrangements.”

Applying the principles laid down in that case we think the specification in this case satisfies the legal requirements so far as the claim for combination and construction of the stove even of old materials is concerned.

A difficulty has been raised with regard to the first part of the claim, where the patentees state that they claim in the preparation of the said substance the treatment of the same when red hot with an acid. We have purposely refrained from referring in detail to the evidence with regard to the use of acid. We think it clearly establishes what the plaintiffs have not seriously denied, that in some form or another, and at some stage or another in the process of manufacture, acid has always been used for purifying the material. And there seemed at one time a difficulty with regard to this claim, namely, as to whether it was not either too wide, or too vague, or in itself old. Mr. Remfry, for the appellants, accepted the principle relied upon by Mr. Motilal Nehru, for the respondents, in the case of Brunton v. Hawkes (3), where it was held that a patent which consisted of more than one claim would be bad if it definitely and independently claimed something which was shown itself to be bad for want of novelty. But after all the attack made upon this part of the plaintiffs' claim raises an issue of fact, first what is 'red heat', whether it is understood and recognised as describing a particular stage in the process of heating which all members of the trade know, and whether, assuming that to be the fact, it was in common use, that is to say, whether the application of sulphuric acid at that particular moment, known and accepted by the trade as accurately described by the words "red heat", was in itself an old process of manufacture. We think that Mr. Remfry was well founded when he met this case by saying that there really was no dispute about that part of the case as a fact in the Court below and that if the defendants wanted to raise the question that "red heat" was not understood in the trade, or that being understood, it was too vague and uncertain and left too wide a margin of variation to be capable of a claim, that was a matter which ought to be dealt with above all things by evidence which could inform the mind of the Court. The defendants, so far from adopting this attitude towards this part of the claim, accepted it, and embraced it and said that they had always done it themselves, and that it was so well known that it was accepted generally through the trade, and that nobody had any doubt what it meant. Having taken that attitude, it does not lie in their mouth here and now to contend that it is impossible to say what is meant by the words "red heat". Therefore, we must hold that it is established that the treatment of sulphuric acid at "red heat", which is a defined stage in the process of heating, is well known to the trade and perfectly intelligible and also new, as nobody in the case suggests that there was any defined or ascertained stage at which it was always done. It is to be borne in mind, and perhaps it is desirable that we should make it once more perfectly clear, that it is quite immaterial what one or more members of the plaintiffs' firm may have said about the rights which the patent really gives them. What they think about it cannot enlarge the rights which are actually conferred by the patent; and the patent does not confer upon the plaintiffs either the sole right to manufacture and sell the substance itself or even the sole right to apply sulphuric acid at red heat so that nobody may use it. What people cannot do is to manufacture an oven or stove substantially as described and illustrated in the specification for drying, heating, roasting and calcining the said substance, and to use such construction for the purpose of applying sulphuric acid in the process of preparing and heating the substance to a red heat in the stove. That is what the plaintiffs claim as patentees. That is what we think the plaintiffs have established, and that is what they have a right to patent. Mr. Remfry referred us to the case of Plimpton v. Spiller (4). The passage which particularly seems applicable to this case is at page 428 in the judgment of Lord Justice James:—"It appears to me that in doing that he (His Lordship refers to Plimpton's claim) is claiming, not a distinct and substantive invention, but he is claiming it as one of the merits and advantages of the entire construction which he has before given, and he is not in any way pretending or claiming to enlarge his monopoly."

(4) (1877) 6 Ch. D. 412; 74 L. J. Ch. 211; 37 L. T. 56; 26 W. R. 285.

We think that language applies to this case. A suggestion was made by Mr. Remfry in the course of his argument that if there was any difficulty in this connection, it was possible even at this stage for the plaintiffs to withdraw this claim [Plimpton v. Spiller (4)] and apply for an amendment. In answer to this we have no hesitation in saying that in our opinion the authorities he quoted are not applicable, and cannot be applicable, to an application made at the eleventh hour in a Court of Appeal by an unsuccessful litigant in the Court below who made no application in that Court, and who is actually suing for infringement. The plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction substantially in the form referred to in Seton on Decrees at page 549, restraining the defendants or their servants or agents or any of them from building, constructing, selling, using, or in any way dealing with a stove manufactured in accordance with the plaintiffs' patent, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to a certificate under section 32 of the Act. With regard to damages the matter is not free from difficulty. We have already expressed our view of the defendants' conduct. We think it is clear that they went out of their way to perloin, if they could, the advantages of the discovery which the plaintiffs had made. On the other hand, no satisfactory case for damages was made out in the Court below for one reason because the plaintiffs failed to establish their right, and for another reason because the learned Judge seemed to think that the profit made by the defendants was the sole criterion. That can hardly be a sound view, having regard to the fact that the defendants deliberately tried to undersell the plaintiffs, and quoted prices below market price. On the other hand Mr. Remfry, when challenged in this Court to make out a case, proceeded to claim damages, or rather to frame his claim upon the evidence in the case, as if he was entitled to damages as enjoying the monopoly for the sole sale of the article itself, which is not the case. We think the evidence before us does not enable us to come to a conclusion on the question of the actual damages suffered by the plaintiffs, and that in any event having regard to the early stage in which the plaintiffs quite properly brought their suit, the amount involved does not make it worth while to award anything more than nominal damages. We, therefore, hold the plaintiffs entitled to the nominal damages of one rupee. We decree the injunction and grant a certificate and one rupee damages. We think under the circumstances the plaintiffs are entitled to their full costs, which will include fees calculated on the higher scale on the subject-matter of Rs. 4,000, with the exception of so much of the Court-fee as was paid in respect of the sum of Rs. 25,000 claimed under the head of damages; that much the plaintiffs must bear themselves.

Construction of document—Mortgage or sale—Intention of parties—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 58—Interest Act (XXXII of 1839)—Mortgage not providing for interest—Discretion of Court to allow interest—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 21—Jurisdiction—Appeal, second, question of jurisdiction whether can be raised in.

Where the parties to a document use words that indicate a mortgage by way of conditional sale and all the terms contained in the document are consistent with the terms of a mortgage by way of conditional sale, the proper construction is that the document is a mortgage by way of conditional sale, and it cannot be contended that the intention of the parties as gathered from the instrument was to make an out-and-out sale subject to the right of re-purchase on re-payment of the money within the stipulated time. [p. 466, col. 2; p. 467, col. 1.]

CHANDRA MOYI CHOWDHURANI v. GREGSON.

The question whether in a suit to enforce a mortgage by way of conditional sale, where no interest is provided for in the deed, the Court should have in its discretion allowed interest in accordance with the terms of the Interest Act, cannot be raised in second appeal unless it was raised in the lower Appellate Court. [p. 467, col. 1.]

The question that the primary Court had no territorial jurisdiction cannot be gone into in second appeal, unless it was raised at the earliest possible moment in the course of the suit. [p. 467, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 7th September 1916, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 18th August 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babus Brojo Lal Chakraborty and Purna Chandra Roy, for the Appellant:—In Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1) kut kobala is called a mortgage by conditional sale.

We have to construe a document with reference to the terms contained in it. In Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1) their Lordships held that that was a sale out and out. In that case although the document consisted of a term for re-conveyance of property, their Lordships held it was an out-and-out sale because there was no stipulation for interest.

[FLETCHER, J.—But with regard to the kut kobala here it is translated as a mortgage by way of conditional sale.]

In Subhabhat v. Vasudevhat (2) a document was executed in connection with a debt. It was held to be a case of sale. In all these cases although the documents were by nature mortgages, they were held to be sales out and out.

[FLETCHER, J.—What is the use of giving us cases when the case before us is exactly a case of mortgage by way of conditional sale and fits in with section 58 of the Transfer of Property Act?]

Then in Abdulbhai v. Kashi (3), although it was in the nature of a bond, it was held to be a case of an out-and-out sale. There also was the condition that the money was to be paid within a certain time.

Then again in the Full Bench case of Moti Singh v. Ramohari Singh (4) the mortgage bond contained no stipulation for re-payment of money within a certain time and it was held to be a case of sale.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned District Judge of Rajshahye, dated the 7th September 1916, affirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge of the same place. The plaintiff brought the suit to recover possession of certain property on the ground that she had acquired it; alternatively, she prayed for a decree on the footing that she was the mortgagee of the property. The main point in the appeal turns on this: Is the plaintiff the mortgagee under the document or is she a purchaser? The document is called by the parties as kut kobala and the plaintiff states that she got this kut kobala executed to the following effect: The transfer, the ostensible sale in this kut kobala, was subject to the condition that, on payment being made within the month of Pous next, the sale should become void and that if, on the other hand, there was a failure to pay the money within the said time, the mortgagee should be entitled to bring the properties mentioned in the said kut kobala into her possession by resorting to law. It is quite clear that the words, used in the document bring the case exactly within the definition of a mortgage by way of conditional sale contained in section 58 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. It is said that, notwithstanding that it falls within that definition, the intention of the parties, as gathered from the instrument, was to make an out-and-out sale subject to the right contained therein of the mortgagor to pay the money within Pous next and to get the property released, and, therefore, the document is an instrument of sale and not of mortgage. It is quite clear that that is not so. The parties used the word kut kobala, which is an ordinary word used to indicate a mortgage by way of conditional sale; and where the parties use words that indicate a mortgage, by way of conditional sale and then give all the terms in the document that are consistent with the terms of a mortgage by way of conditional sale, it seems to me that the proper construction is that the document is a mortgage by way of conditional sale. The case is, I think, an extremely simple and clear one. The authorities which have been cited are of no assistance at all.

The other point in the appeal is this: The mortgage by way of conditional sale does not provide for interest. It is said that the Court has a discretion to award interest in accordance with the terms of the Interest Act and that that interest along with the principal should be made a charge on the property. That may be so. But in a case like this, such a matter ought to have been raised in the Court below and evidence ought to have been adduced and proper findings arrived at by the Judge, in order to satisfy himself as to whether or not he should exercise the discretion which the law vested in him either to allow or to disallow interest in respect of this sum. No point like that having been raised before the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court, it is much too late now before us, we not having the evidence nor the attending circumstances before us, to raise the point that we should allow interest on this sum.

The appeal must, therefore, stand dismissed with costs.

As to the cross-objection preferred by the respondent the Midnapur Zemindary Company, Limited, namely, the want of territorial jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahye, I think it is quite clear that the Midnapur Zemindary Company did not raise the point at the earliest possible moment and, therefore, under section 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure the question that the Court had no territorial jurisdiction cannot be gone into in this Court. The cross objection is therefore, dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

The Collector when acting under sections 10 and 11A of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act acts purely as an administrative officer. He does not act as a "Court" and the proceedings before him are not civil proceedings within the meaning of section 14 of the Limitation Act. The time occupied by such proceedings, therefore, cannot be excluded under section 14 of the Limitation Act in computing the period of limitation for a suit. JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—This was a case in which the respondents sued to recover possession of half of a certain property on partition. They were met by a plea that the suit was time-barred. The facts necessary to be borne in mind in determining this question of limitation are that the defendant or his predecessors had been in possession of this property for some time (how long is immaterial) prior to 1899, and that on the 8th of July 1899 their possession became adverse to the plaintiffs who filed their suit only on the 8th of September 1912. Apparently, therefore, on the facts so presented the plaintiffs' suit was out of time: for the defendant had been in adverse possession of the property claimed for more than twelve years. The plaintiffs, however, pleaded that they could take the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act, and this plea was found in their favour both by the trial Court and the Court of first appeal. The defendant has come here in second appeal and maintains that section 14 of the Limitation Act does not apply and that the claim should be dismissed. It is claimed that section 14 does apply in this way. It appears that the Collector gave a certificate of the kind provided by section 10 of the Vatan Act and on the strength of this certificate a Court sale was set aside. Thereafter the plaintiffs applied to the Collector to take action under section 11A of the Vatan Act. It is claimed that the time occupied by the Collector between receiving this application and disposing of it should be allowed to the plaintiffs in addition to the ordinary period of limitation, in virtue of section 14 of the Limitation Act. That proposition is arrived at by assuming that the Collector in the case stated was 'a Court' and that the proceedings before the Collector were "civil proceedings" within the meaning of these words as used in section 14. On the other hand, on behalf of the defendant it is maintained that these were administrative and not civil proceedings and that the Collector was an administrative officer acting as such and not a 'Court.'

There were other arguments also and we had an interesting discussion as to the meaning of the word 'Court.' We were referred to the cases bearing on the meaning of that word as used in section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code and in section 115 of the present Civil Procedure Code. But I propose to base my opinion, which is in favour of the appellant, on two grounds. I recognize that there are other grounds also from which the same conclusion might be reached. The two I am about to name are those which appeal more particularly to me, and the first ground is this: When I read sections 10 and 11 of the Vatan Act, I come to the conclusion that the Collector, when acting under those sections, is acting purely as an administrative officer, that he is not acting as 'a Court' and that the proceedings before him are not judicial proceedings. In the case of Queen Empress v. Tulja (1), there is in West, J.'s judgment a quotation from the case of Reg. v. Price

(2), in which Blackburn, J., says: "Where the common law or the Legislature has cast on a person the obligation, where certain facts exist, not to form his opinion or exercise a discretion, but to do a certain thing, then, no doubt there is a preliminary inquiry whether those facts exist, and no doubt the person called upon to perform the obligation must, to some extent, exercise common sense, and see whether the facts do exist," and Blackburn, J., then goes on to say that a person doing such a thing is not 'a Court.' West, J., himself gives as an illustration the case of a policeman who has a warrant to arrest a certain person. He has, of course, to satisfy himself that the person he arrests is the person to whom the warrant refers and for that purpose he may have to make an inquiry. But he is not a Court. In the case before us, all that the Collector had to determine was whether certain action had been previously taken with regard to this property and having ascertained that circumstance, he had to take certain action himself. The ascertaining of this particular circumstance was merely a matter of referring to certain proceedings, and did not involve the ascertainment of disputed facts by taking evidence. Therefore, it is to my mind quite clear that the Collector was, as I have said, acting purely as an administrative officer and that he could not be described as 'a Court' in the sense in which the word is used in section 14 of the Limitation Act. Nor could his proceedings be described as civil proceedings.

My second reason is this: Section 14 of the Limitation Act to my mind quite clearly refers primarily to suits and proceedings such as are dealt with in the Schedule to the Limitation Act itself. If section 14 can apply to proceedings taken before a Collector, one would expect that the application on which those proceedings were begun would also be an application of the kind covered by the Limitation Act. As a matter of fact it is conceded that the application to the Collector is not an application of this kind. If for that purpose or if in that particular the proceedings before the Collector are entirely outside the provisions and the intention of the Limitation Act generally, it seems to me that it naturally follows that the proceedings are equally outside the scope and purpose of section 14 of the Limitation Act; unless it is quite plain otherwise that the proceedings are civil proceedings and also are the proceedings of a Court. This is not quite plain in this case, indeed it is very far from plain, so this second reason which I have given, strengthens and supplements the first.

I think, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed and that the claim should be dismissed and that the plaintiffs should pay the costs of the defendant in all three Courts.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. The substantial question for decision is whether an application to the Collector to take action under section 11A of the Bombay Vatan Act (III of 1874) can be held to be a 'civil proceeding' in a Court within the meaning of section 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. There appears to have been no general definition of the terms 'civil proceeding' and 'Court.' It is, therefore, necessary in each case to examine the precise nature of the proceeding and the constitution of the authority before whom such proceeding is taken, in order to decide whether it should properly be termed 'a civil proceeding in a Court.' This has been indicated in the discussion upon a similar matter in the case of Royal Aquarium v. Parkinson (3), in which Fry, L. J., is reported at page 448 to have said: "I find in the Act no words prescribing any particular mode of procedure, or requiring them (the authorities prescribed by the Act) to hear and determine." He then proceeded to consider further directions in the Act and came to the conclusion that the proceedings for granting licenses under that particular Statute were not judicial proceedings in a Court. If we look then to the provisions of section 11A of the Vatan Act, we similarly find no particular procedure laid down and no direction requiring the hearing and determination by the Collector. All he is required to do is either to resume possession of the land or to assess it at full rates for the benefit of the Vatan on receipt of the order of the Civil Court. It is true that there are dicta of West, J., in the case of Collector of Thana v. Bhaskar Mahadev (4) tending to show that the Collector exercises judicial functions under section 10 of the Vatan Act. It is not altogether easy to follow the argument in view of the specific provisions of section 10. But it is sufficient here to observe that those dicta were obiter and that the Collector's order under section 10 was not in that case interfered with as an order of a Civil Court in exercise of the powers there invoked of superintendence vested in the High Court. It is again true that the Collector was said to be made a Judge for the particular purposes of the Vatan Act in the case of Khando Narayan Kulkarni v. Apaji Sadashiv Kulkarni (5) by the same learned Judge. But that referred to the entirely different sections dealing with the duty conferred on the Collector to determine the custom of the Vatan and the representative Vatan-dars under sections 24 and 25 of the Act, and it is no doubt such proceedings which were contemplated by the directions in section 72 making them judicial proceedings for the particular purposes of the Criminal Procedure Code. It seems to me, however, unnecessary to refer to this further or to the several decisions quoted before us dealing with similar directions in other Acts for preventing malicious prosecutions under the provisions of section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code, in which the definition of 'Court' has for that particular purpose been discussed by this and other Courts. For we have here to consider the particular words of section 14 of the Limitation Act. Those words refer expressly to civil proceedings, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal, and appear to me to point particularly to regular civil proceedings in the ordinary Civil Courts under the Civil Procedure Code. There is, moreover, a ruling upon this very section in the case of Muhammad Subhan-ullah v. Secretary of State (6) which appears to me very similar to this case, in which it was held that proceedings for mutation of names Pre-emption suit—Appeal by vendee—Pre-emptor, failure of, to pay extra sum directed by Appellate Court, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 14.

In an appeal by the vendee in a pre-emption suit the pre-emptor was directed by the Appellate Court to pay into Court an extra sum within the time fixed by the original Court. The pre-emptor had twelve days after the date of this order within which the amount could be paid into Court, but he failed to make the payment:

Held, that the consequence of the pre-emptor's default was that the decree became final and that his suit must be dismissed.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 16th February 1917, varying that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Mianwali, dated the 20th January 1917, decreeing the claim.

Mr. Badri Nath Kapur, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—At first sight it seemed inequitable that the plaintiff pre-emptor should lose his right of pre-emption because he had not paid the small extra sum of Rs. 12-9-0 ordered by the District Judge within the time fixed by the original Court. It appears, however, that when the District Judge passed his order on the 16th February 1917, the pre-emptor came to know on the same date that he had been ordered to pay that extra amount and on the date in question, i. e., 16th February, there still remained 12 days within which that amount could have been paid into Court in compliance with the order of the first Court. Knowing this fact the pre-emptor did not comply with the order of the District Judge within the time limited and as a consequence a final decree was passed dismissing his suit. In these circumstances I can see no ground for going behind the final decree and accepting an appeal from the preliminary decree of the District Judge dated the 16th February 1917.

I must accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 167—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Ejectment of tenant, decree for, by Revenue Court—Declaration, suit for, in Civil Court, maintainability of.

Where a Revenue Court has exclusive jurisdiction to try a certain question and it tries that question as between the parties, the finding arrived at by it is binding upon the parties and cannot be questioned in a Civil Court. [p. 472, col. 2.]

Defendant brought a suit in the Revenue Court to eject the plaintiff from certain fields on the ground that the latter was a sub-tenant, and obtained a decree. KISHORE SINGH v. BAHADUR SINGH.

Mr. Lakshmi Narain Tewari (with him Mr. Haribans Sahai), for the Appellants.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-respondents for a declaration that they were co-owners with the defendants, first, in a muafi holding and secondly, in an occupancy tenure. The Court of first instance granted a declaration in favour of the plaintiffs. We may point out that though the plaintiffs asked for a decree for joint possession, the Courts below held that they were in possession and so granted them a declaration only. The defendants have come to this Court on appeal, and the appeal is pressed only in respect to two plots Nos. 238 and 245 which form portions of the alleged occupancy holding. It was the defendants-appellants' case in respect to these two numbers that the plaintiffs were their sub tenants. It was the plaintiffs-repondents' case that they were co-owners with the defendants of the occupancy tenure. In respect to these two numbers there are certain facts which have to be set forth. The defendants-appellants instituted a suit in the Revenue Court for the ejectment of the plaintiffs on the ground that the latter were their sub tenants. To this suit the defendants replied that they were not sub-tenants but that they were co-tenants with the plaintiffs. That suit was instituted on the 14th of August 1915. While it was pending the plaintiffs brought the present suit in the Civil Court. The Revenue Court was the first Court to come to a decision in regard to Nos. 238 and 245. It held that the present plaintiffs-respondents were the sub-tenants of the present appellants and were not the co-tenants. It, therefore, granted to the present appellants a decree for the ejectment of the present plaintiffs. Subsequent to that the Civil Court came to its decision and gave the plaintiffs a decree for joint possession of all the land including these two numbers. That decision was upheld on appeal in the Civil Court. From the decision of the Revenue Court no appeal whatsoever was preferred and that decision became final and binding between the parties. The result, therefore, is the absurdity that a Revenue Court with competent and exclusive jurisdiction has granted a decree for ejectment which can be enforced in respect to these two numbers. The Civil Court has given a decree for joint possession on the ground that the present plaintiffs are co-tenants and not sub-tenants. What the result is to be nobody can at present state. It is urged before us and with considerable force, specially in the face of a large number of rulings of this Court, that the decision of the Revenue Court as between the parties, to the effect that the plaintiffs are the sub-tenants in these two numbers of the defendants-appellants, is the decision of a competent Court with exclusive jurisdiction, that it is final and binding upon the parties and that the Civil Court has no jurisdiction whatsoever to upset or reverse that decision. Reliance has been placed upon the decision of this Court in Sheo Prakash v. Karna (1), wherein it is remarked that the Revenue Court having made a decree for ejectment and that decree having been carried into effect and the plaintiff having been ejected, a suit in the Civil Court is not maintainable. The decree of the Revenue Court was binding upon the parties and any decree made by the Civil Court would be wholly nugatory. The point is covered by authority in the case of Ram Dei v. Bindsri Upadhyaya (2). The judgment of the learned Judge who decided that case was affirmed on appeal under the Letters Patent. In this case while a suit in the Revenue Court for the ejectment of Karna was pending and before that case was decided, Karna brought a civil suit out of which that appeal arose. It was a suit which was brought in such form as would ordinarily make it cognizable by a Civil Court. Its object was clearly to nullify the decree of the Revenue Court. That is also the case in the present suit. An ejectment suit in the Revenue Court had been brought and was pending and was about to conclude when this present civil suit was brought. It is true that the present civil suit was brought in the form in which a suit would be entertained only by the Civil Court, but in so far as these two numbers were concerned, the suit was clearly one brought with a view of possibly nullifying the decision of the Revenue Court.

KISHORE SINGH v. BAHADUR SINGH.

We think that the principle which was applied in Ram Dei v. Bindesri Upadhya (2) applies equally to the present case before us. It was solely within the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court to hold that the present respondents were the sub-tenants of the present appellants and that as such they were liable to ejectment. Practically the same principle was applied in the case of Ram Singh v. Girraj Singh (3). There it was held that the Revenue Court in a case of ejectment had jurisdiction to go into a certain question and that decision was binding on the parties, and the Court in the civil suit was bound to look to the substance of the relief and not merely to the form of the suit, and that the civil suit was not maintainable as it was merely directed to the upsetting of the decision of the Revenue Court. In Maharaja of Vizianagaram v. Chhango Kurmi (4) a suit for ejectment of the defendant on the ground that he was a tenant-at-will was brought in the Revenue Court, which decided that he was a tenant but not a tenant-at-will of the plaintiffs, and subsequently a suit was brought in the Civil Court for the ejectment of the defendant on the ground that he was a trespasser; it was held that the Revenue Court having determined the nature of the defendant's tenancy and the class to which he belonged, a suit in the Civil Court could not be maintained. It was equally in the present case that the Revenue Court has determined the nature of the defendant's tenancy and he is clearly liable to ejectment. The present suit is an attempt, as remarked in that judgment, to go behind the decision of the Revenue Court and ask the Civil Court to do that which under section 167, it is forbidden to do. On behalf of the opposite party, our attention has been called to two decisions of this Court, Jagar Nath v. Ajudhya Singh (5) and Kanhi Ram v. Durga Prasad (6). The former of these two cases may be distinguished from the present case. In that case there had been no decision by the Revenue

Court on the question and Mr. Justice Banerji in his judgment remarks as follows:—"It is true that the plaintiffs sued in the Revenue Court to eject the defendant on the allegation that the defendant was their sub-tenant. Had the Revenue Court decided that question and held that the defendant was the tenant of the holding, there might have been some difficulty in the plaintiffs' way, but in this case, as pointed out by the lower Appellate Court, the Commissioner did not determine the question whether the plaintiffs were the tenants of the holding, or the defendant was so." The case of Kanhi Ram v. Durga Prasad (6) is somewhat in favour of the respondents' contention. We would call attention to the opinion expressed by the late Sir Sundar Lal in his judgment on the point. He referred to Mr. Justice Chamier's decision in Second Appeal No. 1001 of 1911 and remarked:—"Like him I am inclined to think that the matter should be deemed to be res judicata." In that suit the defendant brought a suit in the Revenue Court seeking for the ejectment of the plaintiff on the ground that the latter was his sub-tenant. The Revenue Court ordered ejectment. The plaintiff brought a suit in the Court for a declaration that he was the owner of certain occupancy holdings and claimed possession. He sued the opposite party on the ground that he was a trespasser. It has held in that case that the decision of the Revenue Court did not operate as res judicata. We do not propose to decide the present appeal on the question of res judicata. There have been a long series of rulings of this Court for a considerable length of time in which it has been consistently held that where a Revenue Court has exclusive jurisdiction to try a certain question and it tries that question as between the parties, that is a finding which is binding upon them and it is a finding which cannot be questioned in the Civil Court, reference being made to section 167 of the Tenancy Act. We think that that is the principle which will govern the decision of the case before us. In so far as these two plots are concerned, there is a final and binding decision between the parties. The present respondents are the Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, value of—Record of Rights—Presumption.

Though an entry as to title in a wajib-ul-arz or Record of Rights does not create a title, it gives rise to a presumption in its support, which prevails until its correctness is successfully impugned. [p. 475, col. 1.]

Ex parte appeal from a decree of the Judicial Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, dated the 13th January 1913, varying that of the District Judge, Dera Ismail Khan, dated the 10th May 1918.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and H. B. Raikes, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—In the district of Dera Ismail Khan there are two villages, Mauzah Darakki and Mauzah Sher Ali. Of the first the plaintiffs are the proprietors, of the second the defendants.

The dispute is between the proprietors of these two villages as to the ownership of village common lands measuring upwards of 7,989 acres. The plaintiffs contend that these lands belong to them jointly with the defendants in proprietary right by virtue of ownership of the two villages; the defendants maintain that they are the exclusive proprietors. There was a subsidiary question as to the omission of certain provisions from the wajib-ul-arz relating to these common lands but on this there is no longer any contest.

On the 10th May 1912 the District Judge of Dera Ismail Khan decided on both points in the plaintiffs' favour. On the 13th January 1913 this decree was varied by the Judicial Commissioner, North-West Frontier Province, who dismissed the plaintiffs' claim of joint ownership. In other respects the decree was confirmed. It is from this variation in the appellate decree that the present appeal has been preferred by the plaintiffs.

The history of the land in suit is summed up in the following passage taken from the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner.—

"This land originally formed part of the hinterland of the Kundi village of Darakki. During the period that Nawab Sarwar Khan, of Dera, held a vague authority in the district under the Sikhs, one Mian Khan, a Kundi, obtained a Sanad authorising him to found a new village on the Darakki waste. He collected a group of colonists, consisting chiefly of Murats, and the village of Sher Ali was established. At the Regular Settlement (1874-78) the separate entity of Sher Ali was recognised by the Authorities, and the persons actually holding land in the village were shown as owners in the Record of Rights."

Mian Khan was not an unwarranted intruder, entering on his new possession with a strong hand and with no sanction. He acted under the authority of the Nawab. And in this connection it is interesting and relevant to observe what Sir Henry Maine has to say of such matters:—

"The Native Indian Government," he writes, "sometimes claimed (though in a vague and occasional way) some exceptional authority over the waste; and acting on this precedent the British Government at the various settlements of land revenue has not seldom interfered to reduce excessive waste, and to re-apportion uncultivated lands among the various communities of a district." ("Village Communities," page 122).

DAKAS KHAN v. GHULAM KASIM KHAN.

This is aptly illustrated at page 38 of Volume II of "Tupper's Punjab Customary Law," where it is said:—

"Nawab Muhammad Khan, Sddaozai, Governor of the province of Dara, gave a great impulse to Baluch immigration. Without much regard to the claims of the old had proprietors, he allotted waste lands to any one who would found a village."

It is principally by reference to the Settlement of 1874-78 that the dispute between the litigants has to be determined.

There are certain matters that are beyond controversy. Thus it is clear (a) that though what is now Mauzah Sher Ali was at one time a part of Mauzah Darakki, it was at the date of the Settlement, and still is, a separate and distinct village, and (b) that the lands in suit are within the boundaries of Mauzah Sher Ali.

At the same time it is apparant from the Revenue proceedings which led up to the wajib ul-arz of 1878 that in adjusting the rights in these lands regard was had to the origin and history of Mauzah Sher Ali, and it was a part of the scheme of adjustment that the claims of the parent Mauzah should be recognised. The Settlement Officer responsible for the Rekhar of the 5th February 1876 recorded the opinion that it was fair and proper that the waste land should be entered as the joint property of the village Sher Ali and Mauzah Darakki. But from the earlier part of this document it would seem that what was in the Settlement Officer's contemplation was that the Zemindars of Darakki should have equal rights with the cultivators of the Marat tribe to break up the waste lands of Mauzah Sher Ali.

The next document that calls for notice is the shajra nash, or genealogical tree. The whole of it is not on the record but only section 1, which is, in effect, a narrative of the origin and development of Mauzah Sher Ali. It is there stated that: "The proprietors of Sher Ali and Darakki villages were held as malikan qabiz (proprietors in possession) of 7,989 ghomaons 6 kanals 14 marlas of shamilat land." It has been urged that this supports the appellants' case, and much has been made of the expression malikan qabiz. But here their Lordships are confronted by an initial difficulty. In the official translation of this document, Exhibit No. 25, there is no sort of indication that this statement as to proprietorship was derived from or based on the terms of the wajib-ul-arz, but in his judgment the District Judge renders this part of the document in these words:—

"According to paragraph 14 of the wajib-ul-arz 7,709 ghomaons 6 kanals 14 marlas of land was held to be the shamilat property of the proprietors of Mauzabs Darakki and Sher Ali."

Which of these renderings is the more correct their Lordships have no means of judging, and their difficulties in this respect are enhanced as the appeal has been heard ex parte. Yet there is a vital and obvious difference between their effect for the purpose in hand. In the one there is what purports to be an independent statement of the rival rights; in the other, there is a statement which is merely the interpretation placed on paragraph 14 of the wajib-ul-arz. Nor do the difficulties end there. The expression malikan qabiz is a term of art used for the purpose of Settlement proceedings, and before its value as an indication of any group of rights or their quality can be justly appreciated its precise signification in this context should be known. And here again their Lordships have been left without such assistance as would justify a decisive pronouncement on the point. That the expression may bear a meaning that would not advance the plaintiffs' case may be reasonably inferred as a possibility from a passage to be found at page 150 of Boulnois and Rattigan's "Customary Law." But, when all is said and done, the statements of these documents were not immutable, and the determination of this case must depend on the interpretation to be placed on the wajib-ul-arz or Record of Rights, in which the final result of the settlement proceedings was recorded.

A Record of Rights has been described by Sir Henry Maine as a detailed statement of all rights in land drawn up periodically by the functionaries employed in settling the claims of the Government to its shares of the rental ("Village Communities," page 72). He adds that—

DAKAS KHAN V. GHULAM KASIM KHAN.

"The most important object of the Settlement operations—not second even to the adjustment of Government revenue—is to construct a Record of Rights, which is a detailed register of all rights over the soil in the form in which they are believed to have existed on the eve of the conquest or annexation."

The authority of such a document is universally recognised, and in Musammât Lali v. Murlî Dhar (1), it was said:—

"The term wajib-ul-arz in the North-Western Provinces is applied to what is considered to be the most important document contained in the official records relating to the village administration."

Though it does not create a title, it gives rise to a presumption in its support, which prevails until its correctness is successfully impugned.

Had the opinion expressed in the Robkar been reproduced in the wajib-ul-arz and had the villagers of Darakki been entered there as owners jointly with the "proprietors of Murat tribe," it might well have been contended that the plaintiffs' title was impregnable. But this was not done; and an examination of the wajib-ul-arz shows that it was a far more complete and exhaustive adjustment of rights than the outline sketched in the proposal of the Robkar.

It will be found that the proposed rights of cultivation and grazing are carefully safeguarded. And though the method employed may not have followed literally that contemplated by the author of the Robkar, it calls for no great ingenuity to guess how, on balancing expediences and reckoning up the advantages, it may have been felt, when the final word came to be said, that the conflict of claims could be best reconciled and most conveniently arranged by bestowing the inferior rights of enjoyment on both villages alike, but securing the superior right of proprietorship, with its obligations to the Government, exclusively to the village in which the lands were situated, and of which they formed a part for the purposes of Revenue administration.

The only sections of the wajib-ul-arz disclosed in the record are the 14th and the 17th, and on their true construction they do not (in their Lordships' opinion) support the contention that their legal effect was that for which the appellants contend. Section 14 draws a sharp distinction between the superior right of proprietorship of the village common lands and the inferior right of bringing them under cultivation and of grazing cattle. The superior right is recorded as belonging to the proprietors of the Murat tribe, or, in other words, the proprietary body of Mauzah Sher Ali, and the inferior right as vested in the Khewatdars of both Mauzahs. Section 17, after dealing with the cultivation of the village common land and the revenue to be paid, provides that the income is to go to the revenue of Mauzah Sher Ali, and not to Darakki. The learned Judicial Commissioner, in holding that the defendants' title had the sanction of the Revenue Records, attributed great importance to this provision as to the revenue, and their Lordships do not think he exaggerated its significance when he described it as marking the true proprietorship of the waste lands. Indeed, Counsel was unable to point to any other circumstance in the case as a mark of proprietorship which was not equally, and even preferably, referable to the inferior right of cultivation and grazing bestowed on the villagers of the two Mauzahs.

This view as to the meaning and effect of the wajib-ul-arz has not been held by the Judicial Commissioner alone. In the report of Mr. S. Mulaim Din, Tahsildar, Tonk, dated the 2nd July 1894, it is said that the names of the Darakki people are not shown in the column of proprietorship in the Settlement and the jamabandi files, but it is shown as village shamilat of the proprietors of Sher Ali. And this opinion is repeated in the Commissioner's order of the 20th May 1895. These views are of value, as Revenue Officers would be intimately conversant with topics of this kind.

Nor do the difficulties in the appellants' way rest there, for the subsequent treatment of the lands lends no small support to the view expressed as to the legal effect of the wajib ul arz.

To begin with, the revenue of the lands has actually been received and dealt with according to the provisions of section 17. Then, again from 1878 onwards the lands have been consistently shown in the official records as the shamilat deh of Mauzah Sher Ali. The appellants seek to escape from the obvious inference this invites by the suggestion that this entry merely indicated the situation of the lands within the bounds of Mauzah Sher Ali, and was in no sense a token that the proprietorship belonged to that village. This attempted explanation leaves their Lordships unconvinced.

And it is not as though there was this entry in the records and nothing more. The Darakki claim to proprietorship has been repeatedly and consistently challenged. As far back as 1883, the learned Judicial Commissioner declares, the plaintiffs' rights were definitely traversed. Then, from Mr. Bruce's order of the 20th May 1895, it is apparent that the villagers of Sher Ali at that time asserted that the Darakki village had no proprietary rights in the land and denied the Darakki title. Again in 1900 this denial was repeated. And yet it was not until the institution of this suit on the 23rd of March 1909 that the plaintiffs attempted to vindicate their claim in a Court of Law, though long before this the urgent necessity of such action had been pressed on them. It would be wrong to treat all this as of no moment. Apart from any bar of limitation which this delay may entail, the reluctance or, at any rate, prolonged failure of the Darakki villagers to assert their claim in the Civil Courts, whether due to a lack of confidence in its merits or not, imposes on their Lordships the clear and imperative duty of cautious reserve before accepting the appellants' contention that the decree adverse to their claim should be reversed. And the need for this reserve is the greater as this case with its difficulties and peculiarities has come before this Board in the absence of anyone to present the defendants' case.

But, in truth, so far from being convinced that the decree under appeal is erroneous, their Lordships consider it to be amply supported by a judgment which is well reasoned and well founded; and they certainly are not prepared to dissent from the Appellate Court's conclusion that the plaintiffs' claim to joint ownership has failed.

Nor do their Lordships differ from that Court's decision that the plaintiffs' claim to a declaration of joint ownership is barred by limitation, though in the view they take this aspect of the case calls for no elaboration.

The Judicial Commissioner has affirmed so much of the first Court's decree as declared clause 14 of the wajib-ul-arz to be still operative, but it follows from what he had previously determined that its legal effect would be in accordance with his view, and not that of the First Court, as to its true interpretation. The rights thus secured to the plaintiffs are not of as high a degree as they claimed, yet they are probably substantial. Any attempt, however, at a definition of them would be outside the scope of this appeal, for the determination of their meaning, as the Judicial Commissioner has indicated, is more a matter for the Revenue Authorities, should the occasion ever arise.

The result, then, is that their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed, but without costs as the respondents have not appeared.

—Mortgage—Mortgagor allowed to remain in possession of mortgaged property as tenant of mortgagee—Rent, arrears of, suit to recover—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

A zar-i-peshgi lease created the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee between the parties. On the mortgagor's failure to deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee the latter filed a suit for possession against the former. The suit ended in a compromise, whereunder it was provided that the mortgagor would remain in possession on behalf of the mortgagee on condition of his paying to the latter a certain amount of annual rent and that in default of such payment of rent the former would be liable to ejectment. On the mortgagor's failure to pay rent the mortgagee brought a suit in the Civil Court against the mortgagor for possession of the mortgaged property and for arrears of rent.

Held, that the compromise in the previous suit created the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties and that, therefore, the present suit was not maintainable in the Civil Court in view of the provisions of section 103, clauses (2) and (4), of the Oudh Rent Act. Mr. Abdur Rauf, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ali Muhammad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 26th October 1896, Gul Muhammad, Pir Muhammad and Wali Muhammad executed a zar-i-peshgi lease in favour of plaintiffs Nos. 1, 2 and 3 and the ancestors of plaintiffs Nos. 4 to 11, whereby they borrowed Rs. 200 and agreed to give possession over the mortgaged property to the mortgagees, subject to the condition that the latter shall pay a rental of Rs. 6-13-0 per year to the former till the mortgage was redeemed. The time fixed for redemption was Baisakh 1313 Fasli.

The mortgagors did not, however, deliver possession. A suit was then filed by the mortgagees for possession and a decree was obtained on the 22nd August 1902.

The mortgagees got possession in pursuance of that decree but were ejected thereafter. They, therefore, brought another suit for possession in 1904 in which there was a compromise, the effect of which was that the mortgagors were allowed to remain in possession on behalf of the mortgagees on condition of their paying Rs. 14-5-0 yearly to the latter. The compromise provided that if the mortgagors failed to give the rent they would be liable to ejectment. The mortgagees alleged that in spite of the said compromise the defendants had not paid the rent, which they had agreed to pay. They, therefore, sued for possession of the mortgaged property and for arrears of rent for the three years preceding the suit. In the plaint, they described arrears of rent as profits, but that description does not make any difference in the nature of the suit.

The Courts below found that the mortgagors became the tenants of the mortgagees by virtue of the compromise and that the suit for possession and arrears of rent was not maintainable against them in the Civil Court.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants relies on the decision in Altaj Ali Khan v. Latta Prasad (1). But the facts of that case were clearly distinguishable from the present. In that case the suit was based on the zar-i-peshgi lease or the mortgage itself, and was for the recovery of the money due on the mortgage. There was also a lease accompanying the mortgage; but the lease and the mortgage were taken to form part of the same transaction and the mortgagees were declared entitled to seek their remedy for non-payment of the rent, reserved by the lease, in the Civil Court by means of a suit upon the mortgage. The relationship of landlord and tenant was constituted in the present case by a compromise effected on the 16th September 1904. The compromise was an entirely separate transaction and as held in

RADHEY SHIAM v. BIHARI LAL.

Chimman Lal v. Bahadur Singh (2) and Mahmud un-nisa v. Fakhr-ud-din (3), a suit for the recovery of arrears of rent on the basis of the lease, created by the said compromise, in regard to agricultural land would not lie in the Civil Court, much less a suit for the ejectment of the tenants from the land leased. Section 103, clauses (2) and (4), of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886) gives exclusive jurisdiction to the Revenue Court to entertain suits for arrears of rent or for the ejectment of a tenant. A zar-i-peshgi lease, accompanied by a covenant for redemption, may amount to a mortgage, but the relation, which the compromise created and which the plaintiffs seek in this suit to terminate, is not that of a mortgagor and mortgagee but that of a person in possession of the mortgaged property as a tenant on behalf of the mortgagee.

The plaintiffs have also impleaded some of the transferees of the mortgagors, but that fact makes no difference, because the transfer was made after the date of the compromise and whatever rights they might have need not be determined in this case. The suit is principally for the ejectment of the mortgagors, who occupy the mortgaged property as tenants of the mortgagees, and for arrears of rent due by them, and the Courts below were justified in treating it as excluded from the cognizance of the Civil Court.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

A minor cannot be made to repay money which he has spent merely because he received it under a contract induced by his fraud. [p. 479, cols. 1 & 2.]

In a suit for sale on a mortgage bond, the defendant pleaded that at the time of the execution of the bond he was a minor and no fraudulent representation on the part of the defendant inducing the plaintiff to enter into a contract was either alleged or found:

Held, that the defendant was not liable to repay the money borrowed by him. [p. 480, col. 1.]

Where a trial Judge has given his reasons for depriving a successful party of costs and all the circumstances are before the Court of Appeal, the latter can, if satisfied that the trial Judge has not exercised his discretion judicially, interfere with it and make the order which the lower Court ought to have made. The mere fact that a defendant relies upon a right which a Statute gives him is not a sufficient ground for depriving him of his costs. [p. 480, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree dismissing a suit in effect by two judgments, dated respectively the 13th of September 1915 and the 30th of September 1915, on what were really two preliminary points. The suit was brought upon a mortgage-deed for sale of the property hypothecated in respect of a default made by the defendant at an early stage of the transaction. The plaintiff chose to shelter himself behind the legal arguments of Counsel and did not go into the box, and at present there is nothing before us to show why and how the defendant was persuaded in January 1915 to enter into a fresh transaction at compound interest with security in order to get rid of some comparatively recent unsecured liabilities which are not even shown to have borne compound interest. We do not know either whether the defendant ever received a single rupee in respect of this transaction. The uncontradicted evidence of the defendant is that he did not, and the general conduct of the plaintiff raises some inference that he has not paid a rupee more than he was obliged to pay.

Two grounds are raised in appeal against the judgments which I have mentioned; each deals really with a separate judgment. By the fourth ground of appeal it is contended that the defendant, as to whom it has been found that he was a minor, is estopped by his fraudulent misrepresentation from relying upon this defence. This is the latter of the two judgments to which I have referred. The law is well settled and this point has been disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge in an excellent judgment, in which he relies very largely upon the recent decision of the English Court of Appeal in a considered judgment of three Lords Justices in Leslie Limited v. Shiell (1). That decision, by the way, has been recently approved by the Privy Council: see Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yech Ooi Gark (2), in a case which was cited to us for another purpose. The learned Judge of the Court below cites a passage from the judgment of Mr. Justice A. T. Lawrence, who was then sitting in the Court of Appeal, to the following effect:—"Wherever the infant requires, as a plaintiff, the assistance of any Court, it will be refused until he has made good his fraudulent representation. Wherever the infant is still in possession of any property which he has obtained by his fraud, he will be made to restore it to its former owner." So far Mr. Justice Lawrence has given expression to the equitable principle recognised in England and adopted in the case relied upon by Dr. Sapru, Jagar Nath Singh v. Lalta Prasad (3). "But," continues Mr. Justice

Lawrence, "I think that it is incorrect to say that he can be made to repay money which he has spent merely because he received it under a contract induced by his fraud." And that was in substance the decision of the Court of Appeal which has been consistently followed by the Courts in India. The contention as to the legal proposition, therefore, fails and we agree with the judgment of the Court below on this point. We desire, however, to add, lest it should be supposed that this decision conveys any reflection upon the defendant, that not only has no fraudulent representation been found against the defendant but it has not even been alleged. There is a faint suggestion in paragraph (c) of the reply which the plaintiff made to the written statement where the defendant set up his minority at page 9 of the printed book, which suggests that the defendant put forward some active misrepresentation with regard to his age in the form of a document. It is not alleged that that was done fraudulently, and applying the principle which has always been applied by Courts of Justice in a case of this kind, this point really ought not to have been allowed to have been argued by the plaintiff at all. The plaintiff, as we have said, was not called and there is no suggestion from first to last by any positive evidence of any active misrepresentation by the defendant before the contract was entered into. Further than that it would be necessary for the plaintiff to establish that he was induced by such misrepresentation, if in fact it had been made. One's experience of these cases in Courts is that the plaintiffs who carry on money-lending business, like the present plaintiff in this case, and enter into similar transactions, are not as a rule so much influenced by the statements of their respective debtors as by the desire to get inexperienced young men into their clutches and to make as much profit out of them as the law will permit, or as the fear of criminal charges, or other consequences of that kind may prevent the debtors from resisting. As we have already said, we are inclined to think that the plaintiff himself entertained grave doubts as to the age of the defendant and, therefore, it is unlikely that he was influenced by anything the defendant had said to him. So much for the first point raised in the fourth ground of appeal which is dealt with in the latter of the two judgments.

With regard to the other point, namely, the judgment of the 13th of September 1915, on the pure question of fact as to the actual age of the defendant one really cannot improve upon the able and careful analysis of the evidence contained in the judgment itself. Out of respect to the arguments addressed to us, however, we will add this. It seems to us that the evidence with regard to the defendant's actual age is overwhelming. The best evidence of course is the evidence of a minor's parents. In this case the mother was dead, but it so happened that she made an application in 1900 with reference to her child who, if the rest of the evidence be believed, had been born only three years before. It is almost impossible that she could have been mistaken at that time, and no reason of any kind is suggested why she should have desired to mislead anybody. The sister, who was a pardanashin lady and called on commission, gave strong and clear evidence which we have no reason to suppose to be dishonest and which was not shaken by a long and determined cross-examination. The brother's evidence is much to the same effect. In the result the family evidence in this case is peculiarly strong and clear. It is, therefore, unnecessary to say anything about the weight or admissibility of horoscopes and other matters of that kind which have been much discussed. As against such evidence as exists in this case expert evidence, horoscopes and medical certificates are of very little, if any, value. In this case they are, in our opinion, of no value whatever. The appeal fails on both grounds and must be dismissed with costs.

The matter, however, does not rest there. There is a cross-objection by the defendant upon the ground that he has been deprived of his costs. We agree with Dr. Sapru in his contention upon this point that this is a matter for the discretion of the trial Court. At one time it was thought that a Court of Appeal would never interfere with the exercise of such discretion, but where the Judge has given his reasons and all the circumstances are before the Court of Appeal it is now settled that the Court of Appeal can, if satisfied that the discretion has not been judicially exercised, interfere with it and make the order which the Court below ought to have made. We think that there was really no evidence to support a finding that the defendant was "mostly responsible for this litigation." The presumption usually is that a plaintiff is responsible for a suit which he has brought into Court. In this case the plaintiff was in a peculiar hurry to bring the case into the Court. We cannot agree with the ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge has proceeded. It has been held in the English Courts of Appeal that the mere fact that a defendant relies upon a right which a Statute gives him is not a sufficient ground for depriving him of his costs. Some people think that in the ordinary sense of the word it is a shabby thing to rely upon a Statute of Limitation, or the Gaming Act or a defence of infancy, but it has been distinctly held that neither of those grounds is a judicial ground for depriving the defendant of his costs. In the case which was relied upon by the appellant and was referred to in argument [Leslie Limited v. Shiell (1)], the defendant was deprived of his costs even of that part of the suit in which he succeeded. He had been found guilty by a Jury of fraudulently deceiving the money-lender. There is nothing of that kind in this case. The plaintiff has chosen to come into Court with a hopeless case. The defendant has succeeded in establishing a legal defence. We see no reason why the costs should not follow the result.

The appeal is dismissed with costs and the cross-objections are allowed. We modify the decree of the Court below by allowing the defendant his costs throughout.

Appeal dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 512
—Evidence taken against absconding accused—Procedure.

Where a Magistrate had clear evidence that the accused were absconding and evidence from which he might reasonably infer that there was no immediate prospect of their arrest, and he expressly stated in his order that he was taking evidence under section 512 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the presumption is that he did his duty and did not record the evidence under the section unlawfully. The mere fact, that the Magistrate did not recite a finding that there was no immediate prospect of the arrest of the accused does not render the evidence inadmissible. [p. 482, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Allahabad, at Mirzapur.

Mr. C. R. Alston (with him Mr. Peary Lal Banerji), for the Appellant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused in this case has been found guilty of murder and sentenced to transportation for life. The alleged murder took place as far back as the 24th of June 1904. A trial took place in respect of this murder in the year 1904 and one Khedu was convicted. He was sentenced in the first instance to transportation for life, but that sentence was subsequently enhanced by the High Court to a sentence of death. The present accused was arrested on the 8th of February 1918 at Madras. He was put upon his trial and convicted and sentenced to transportation for life. The depositions of three witnesses were used as evidence against him. All these three persons were dead. Mr. Ross Alston, on behalf of the appellant, has raised the point that these depositions were not admissible. The Magistrate in the year 1904 took the evidence of these witnesses having previously made the following order:—"I find that Mahabir and Bhagwati have absconded. The evidence which I am about to take will be regarded as taken under section 512 of the Code of Criminal Procedure as regards Mahabir and Bhagwati."

The point raised by the learned Counsel is that the omission in the order of an express finding that there was no immediate prospect of arresting the two persons renders the evidence inadmissible. In support of this contention the case of Rustam v. Emperor (1) has been quoted. In that case a person was put upon his trial sometime after an offence had been committed. The evidence of certain witnesses, who had been examined previously, was admitted at the trial. The evidence, it seems, purported to have been taken under section 512. At page 31* the learned Judges say:—"The learned Counsel for the appellants contends that the said evidence is inadmissible, inasmuch as no proof of the absconding of the accused had been formally received and recorded prior to the examination of the said witnesses. We think that this objection is valid and must prevail. In section 512 it is distinctly laid down that if it is proved that an accused person has absconded and there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, the Court competent to try or commit for trial such person for the offence complained of may, in his absence, examine the witnesses (if any) produced on behalf of the prosecution and record their depositions. It is clear from the language of the section that the Court which records the proceedings under it, must first of all record an order that in its opinion it has been proved that the accused has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of his arrest. No such finding appears on the file of 1897, in fact no evidence was taken in that year to show that the present appellant was absconding and that there was no immediate prospect of his arrest. The evidence of 1897 being inadmissible, the conviction of the appellant on the basis of such evidence cannot stand."

It would seem from this passage that the learned Judges looked at the file of the previous trial and found that there was no evidence from which the Magistrate could draw the inference that the accused was absconding and that there was no immediate prospect of his arrest. In the present case we find that a witness was examined who proved that the accused were absconding, and from his evidence the Magistrate might most reasonably have inferred that there was no immediate prospect of their arrest. In the evidence as recorded by the Magistrate the witness actually said that the accused had absconded and that there was no prospect of arresting them and that action under sections 87 and 88 had been taken by the Court. In the passage we have quoted the learned Judge who delivered the judgment says:—"It is clear from the language of the section that the Court which records the proceedings under it must first of all record an order that in its opinion it has been proved....."

The section nowhere says that the Magistrate must record a finding. We wish to make it quite clear that in our opinion a Magistrate before recording evidence under section 512 ought to be satisfied that the accused is absconding and that there is no immediate prospect of his arrest, and it is certainly advisable that he should recite in his order that he finds this to be the case. However, in this case we find that the Magistrate had clear evidence that the accused were absconding, and evidence from which the Magistrate might reasonably infer that there was no immediate prospect of their arrest. In his order he expressly states that he is taking the evidence under section 512. The presumption is that the Magistrate did his duty and did not record the evidence under section 512 unlawfully. In our opinion the mere fact that the learned Magistrate did not recite a finding that there was no immediate prospect of the arrest of the accused does not render the evidence inadmissible. In the present case neither of the accused were very promptly arrested. One was only arrested in the present year and the other is still absconding. We think that the evidence was clearly admissible. Once we decide this point, we see no reason whatever to differ from the conclusion arrived at by the Court below. The evidence was believed at the original trial and there is no reason to doubt it. We dismiss the appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 234, 239—Joint trial of several persons for separate offences, legality of—S. 239, applicability of.

The joint trial of several accused persons for two or more separate offences is illegal. [p. 483, col. 1.]

Section 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies only to offences committed by a single person. It is not applicable when several persons are tried jointly under section 239 of the Code. [p. 483, col. 1.]

Section 239 of the Criminal Procedure Code is the only section of the Code which refers to a trial of more persons than one jointly, but it does not authorise such trial for two or more distinct offences unless they form part of the same transaction or unless one is the actual offence and the other or others are offences of abetting or attempting that offence. [p. 483, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment and finding and sentence of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Akola, in Criminal Case No. 10 of 1918, dated the 10th April 1918.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Two separate Challans were filed by the Police against 3 persons named Chand Khan, Sayad Lal and Umar Khan charging them with offences under section 457, Indian Penal Code, in the houses of Govind Rao (P. W. No. 6) and Draupadibai (P. W. No. 7) respectively. The offence in Govind Rao's house is said to have been committed on some day between the 12th and 19th February 1918 and in Draupadibai's house between the 16th and 19th of the same month. Two separate cases were registered in the Magistrate's Court, No. 10 in respect of the offence in Govind Rao's house and No. 11 in respect of that in Draupadibai's house.

The order-sheets of the 8th March 1918 in the two cases are as follows:—

"Case No. 11.

"All the accused are present. The offence of this case and the one of case No. 10 are of one and the same kind and against the same accused. The two offences will, therefore, be tried together under section 234, Criminal Procedure Code. For further orders see order sheet of case No. 10."

MAHADEO SINGH v. EMPEROR.

"Case No. 10.

"Accused produced. Public Prosecutor represents the Crown. Mr. Sirsalkar defends Chand Khan and Mr. Pingle and Mr. Pande defend Sayad Lal. Five witnesses for prosecution examined and discharged. It is now 5-15 p. m. The remaining witnesses will be bound in Rs. 10 each. This case and the offence mentioned in Case No. 11 are of the same kind and against the same accused alleged to have been committed within one year. The two cases will, therefore, be tried together under section 234, Criminal Procedure Code. Accused remanded to jail custody. Case for 14th March 1918. The articles in evidence be kept with Nazar. On and after this date all the proceedings are recorded in case No. 10 only."

After the prosecution case was over Chand Khan was examined and discharged, and charges with two heads in respect of two offences were framed against Sayad Lal and Umar Khan. These two have been convicted. Sayad Lal has been sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for five years and Umar Khan to 2 1/2 years for each offence. The two sentences on each accused have been ordered to run concurrently. The two accused have filed separate appeals and this judgment will govern both.

It is clear that the trial of the three accused jointly for two separate offences is illegal and the convictions must be set aside. The Magistrate purports to act under section 234, Criminal Procedure Code, but that section applies only to offences committed by a single person. It is not applicable when several persons are tried jointly under section 239. [See Budhi-Sheik v. Emperor - (1) and Emperor v. Balwantsingh (2).] Section 239 is the only section which refers to a trial of more than one person jointly, but it does not authorise such trial for two or more distinct offences unless they form part of the same transaction or unless one is the actual offence and the other or others are offences of abetting or attempting that offence. The two offences in the present case are not, and the learned Magistrate has rightly not treated them as, committed in the same transaction.

I set aside the convictions of Sayad Lal and Umar Khan. It will be open to the prosecution to take such further proceedings against the accused as they may think proper, and in this connection I would draw attention to the remarks at pages 77 and 78 in Emperor v. Balwant Singh (2) cited above as to the courses open to the prosecution if they wish to take further proceedings.

Convictions set aside.

M., a tenant of the accused, was recruited in the army and received a certain sum in advance. About a month afterwards the accused brought a suit against M. for arrears of rent. M. appeared before the District Magistrate and made a statement which was neither made on oath nor signed. Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Allahabad, at Mirzapur.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Applicants.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Mahadeo Singh, Mahabir Singh, Harnarain Singh and Diprarain Singh, Thakurs, residents of Jhingurpatti in the district of Mirzapur, have been sentenced by the District Magistrate of Mirzapur to undergo imprisonment for a period of twenty months each under rule 29 of the rules framed under section 2 of the Defence of India Act, No. IV of 1915. The rule which they are alleged to have contravened is No. 23, which runs as follows:—"No person shall dissuade, or attempt to dissuade, any person from entering the Military or Police Service of His Majesty." The facts of the case, which I find to be established beyond question, are that Musai Pasi of Jhingurpatti is a sub-tenant of two of the accused persons, namely, Mahadeo Singh and Harnarain Singh, and that he has also worked as a ploughman for all the accused. On March the 4th, 1918, Musai was recruited in the Bandel corps for service in Mesopotamia and received an advance of Rs. 25. On April the 2nd, 1918, Mahadeo Singh and Harnarain Singh sued Musai, as their sub-tenant, for arrears of rent for the year 1324 Fasli, amounting to Rs. 30-15 0 plus interest. On the 8th of April 1918, Musai, having previously made some statement to the Recruiting Officer, Mr. Branford, appeared before the District Magistrate of Mirzapur. The record of this case commences with a statement recorded in English by the District Magistrate as made to him by Musai on that date. The statement is not made on oath and is not signed by Musai. Then follows an order in the District Magistrate's hand, and signed by him, directing warrants without bail to issue for the arrest of these four accused persons and an order for the summoning of certain witnesses. The District Magistrate took up the case himself on the 22nd of April 1918. He framed a charge on the 13th of May and he convicted and sentenced the accused on the 15th of May, after having heard their defence witnesses. The conviction and sentence have been affirmed by the Additional Sessions Judge on appeal and the matter has been brought before this Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.

The proceedings in the Court of the District Magistrate were certainly irregular in their initiation. If the Magistrate conceived himself to be taking cognizance of this offence upon information received from Musai within the meaning of section 190 (c) of the Criminal Procedure Code, he was bound to offer the accused persons the option of being tried by another Court, as provided by section 191 of the same Code. If, on the other hand, the statement of Musai with which this record opens is the complaint in the case, upon which the District Magistrate proceeded to take cognizance, he was bound, before issuing warrants, to take from Musai a sworn declaration that he had spoken the truth in the complaint made by him and to have obtained the signature of Musai to that sworn declaration. A further question has been raised as to the application in this case of rule No. 30 of the rules in question. In view of the exceptional powers conferred upon the authorities by the Statute, and by the rules under consideration, I think that the Courts are entitled to require strict compliance with all the provisions introduced into the rules by way of safeguarding the liberty of the subject. The District Magistrate ought, strictly speaking, as soon as he decided that action was called for on the information which Musai had given, to have recorded a formal proceeding, intimating his opinion that the initiation of a prosecution against the persons implicated in Musai's statement was advisable. If he had done this, and had also made up his mind definitely whether he was taking cognizance of the matter upon a complaint, or merely upon information received, he would probably have gone on to consider, whether the interests of justice required that he should try the case himself. I do not say that I should necessarily have interfered in this matter if I had no other exception to take to the proceedings in the Courts below than the irregularity of their initiation. As a matter of fact, however, it seems to me that these proceedings have been misconceived in essential particulars. The rule under which the applicants have been convicted is not the rule applicable to the facts stated in the charge. Musai had enlisted, that is to say, had entered the Military Service of His Majesty, on March the 4th, 1918, and all the facts alleged in the charge are subsequent to that date. It is contrary to the genius of the English language to hold that one person can "dissuade or attempt to dissuade" another from doing something which the latter has already done. It is arguable that the Courts below might have acted, or may have conceived themselves to be acting, upon a statement made by Musai, to the effect that threats had been addressed to him prior to his enlistment with a view to dissuading him from taking that course. It also seems to have been present to the mind of the District Magistrate, and of the Additional Sessions Judge, that the accused might be liable to conviction on the ground that they had dealt with Musai in a certain manner with the object, not of dissuading Musai himself from enlisting, but of discouraging other persons from following his example. Finally, it may be argued that the accused specified in the charge might under certain circumstances be held punishable under rule 24, though not under rule 23, if the Court were satisfied that they had attempted to induce Musai to fail in his duty as a person in the Military Service of His Majesty by refusing to fulfil the engagement which he had taken upon himself at his enlistment. I mention these points to show that they have been considered by me before disposing of the case; but I think it sufficient to say that if the accused had been tried on charges suggested by any one of the three lines of argument above set forth, not only would the charge have required to be differently framed, but also the prosecution would have been faced with other and serious difficulties before any Court could have felt justified in holding the suggested offences, or any of them, proved by the evidence on the record. It has, of course, been necessary for me to subject the entire record to a careful examination before I could form any final opinion about the merits of this application. I cannot help remarking that in the reasoning which has satisfied both the Courts below that the evidence on the record, which is certainly scanty and is admittedly discrepant in some important particulars, was sufficient to prove certain facts against the accused persons, there seems to me one fairly obvious and somewhat serious flaw. Most of the points suggested in favour of the accused persons have been put aside in the Courts below, with the remark that there seems no adequate motive for Musai in bringing this accusation if it is not true, or at least founded on fact. I take it on myself to suggest that a very possible explanation of all the evidence on the record, and one which meets most of the difficulties suggested on both sides, would be that Mahadeo Singh and Harnarain Singh thought themselves justified in bringing pressure to bear upon Musai to pay up his arrears of rent before he left the country, and that Musai strongly resented their doing so. There is only one other point on which I think it fair to say a word or two. Both the Courts below have taken it to be proved that the four accused persons first succeeded in obtaining by threats of violence from Musai's wife a sum of Rs. 25 on account of the arrears of rent due to them, and that subsequently Mahadeo Singh and Harnarain Singh sued Musai for arrears of rent without giving him any credit for this payment of Rs. 25. If this were proved by the evidence, the accused, or at least Mahadeo Singh and Harnarain Singh, would deserve to be prosecuted for an offence punishable under section 209 of the Indian Penal Code, and it might be my duty to go further into the matter from this point of view. It seems to me, however, that the evidence on which the Courts below have found that Musai's wife actually handed over Rs. 25 to the accused persons is of the slenderest, and I have ascertained, by going a little outside the record, a fact which the accused persons should have taken the trouble to have brought upon this record, namely, that Musai did not defend the suit for arrears of rent and made no attempt to prove that the major portion of the claim had been satisfied by a payment of Rs. 25 obtained by Mahadeo Singh and Harnarain Singh from his wife. In my opinion, therefore, it is useless to pursue this matter further. The conduct of the accused persons was not particularly creditable to them, and may have been worse than anything that appears to be clearly proved by the record, but they have undergone very nearly three months' rigorous imprisonment in consequence, and the District Magistrate may perhaps feel that, whatever order this Court may now pass, the proceedings instituted by him have served a useful purpose. I do not wish to say anything to deprive him of that satisfaction. On the contrary, I think it fair to say that I fully recognise the fact that he acted in all good faith in the public interests. The conclusion I come to is that the four applicants have been convicted on a charge which is not supported by the evidence on the record and which is in fact bad in law, inasmuch as the facts alleged therein did not amount to an offence punishable under the rule therein quoted. Any further examination which I have made of the record and any further comments which I have passed on the evidence, are merely directed towards the question of the propriety or otherwise of ordering further proceedings to be taken after setting aside this conviction. The remarks which I have made are, I think, sufficient to explain my reasons for contenting myself with quashing these proceedings, without passing any further order. The result is that I set aside the conviction and sentence in this case, acquit the four applicants of the offence charged, and direct that they be forthwith released.

Arms Act (XI of 1876), ss. 4, 19—"Arms," what are.

The definition of the expression "arms" as given in the Arms Act is not, and is not intended to be exhaustive, and the true meaning of the term must be arrived at by consideration of the circumstances in each case. [p. 487, col. 1.]

Neither the length, breadth or the form of the blade of a weapon, nor the handle, afford any certain test of its classification as "arms." Whatever can be used as an instrument of attack or defence and is not an ordinary implement for domestic purposes falls within the purview of the Act. [p. 487, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the order of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Gujranwala, dated the 14th January 1918.

Mr. C. Bevan Petman (Government Advocate), for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows:—On the night of the 21st/22nd of April 1917, Ali Muhammad, Sub-Inspector of the Muridke Police Station, was patrolling with certain Zaildars, Lamberdars and others. On nearing the Serai at Mauza Fatteh Rehan certain persons were seen coming out of the Serai and running away. They were called upon to stop but instead of doing so increased their speed. They were pursued and two of them were surrounded and put up a fight, calling out to one of their companions, Ralla Singh by name, to come to their assistance. This man returned with what appeared to be a dang in his hand. The Sub-Inspector thinking that the dang looked very like a chhavi called upon him to stop. Instead of doing so, however, he moved still nearer in the direction of the Sub-Inspector, who thereupon fired a pistol at him hitting him in the hands and thigh. Ralla Singh fell and was captured, when he was found to be in possession of what is described as a chhavi similar to a takwa, vide Exhibit P. C. In due course Ralla Singh was tried for an offence under section 457/511, Indian Penal Code, in connection with the breaking of a lock in a kothri of the Serai, and in the same trial was charged under section 19 of the Indian Arms Act for possessing a chhavi without a license. The learned Magistrate convicted him of an offence under section 457-511, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment, including three months' solitary confinement. He held, however, that the weapon with which he was armed was not a chhavi as defined in Gahna v. Emperor (1) and was not an arm within the meaning of the Indian Arms Act, and, therefore, acquitted him on the charge under section 19 of the said Act.

Against this acquittal the Local Government has preferred this appeal and the learned Government Advocate has urged that the instrument or weapon in respect of which the charge had been framed fell within the meaning of "arms" as defined in the Arms Act. Mr. Petman drew our attention to Crown v. Santa Singh (2), in which it was held, by a Division Bench of this Court, that the definition of the expression "arms" as given in the Arms Act was not, and was not intended to be, exhaustive and that the true meaning of the term must be arrived at by consideration of the circumstances in each case. This ruling was approved of in Empress v. Kesar Singh (3). In Emperor v. Satish Chandra Roy (4) it was held that neither the length, breadth or the form of the blade of a weapon, nor the handle, afford, any certain test of its classification as "arms." Whatever can be used as an instrument of attack or defence, and is not an ordinary implement for domestic purposes, falls within the purview of the Act. With these decisions we agree.

There is on the record a full size sketch of the instrument which was undoubtedly found in possession of Ralla Singh when he was arrested after he had been wounded. This sketch shews that the instrument has a handle 4 feet, 8 inches long, and a head which is not the ordinary shape of a chhavi. This head weighs 1 seer and $2\frac{1}{2}$ chhataks and is removable from its handle.

(4) 34 C. 749; 6 C. L. J. 751; 11 C. W. N. 971; 6 Cr. L. J. 227.

The head or blade is similar in shape to an axe head but has an elongation of the head downwards towards the handle ending in a somewhat blunt point. It is clear that it cannot be regarded as an ordinary axe head; nor have we ever seen an axe with a handle of this length. There can be no doubt that this instrument can be used as a weapon of offence or defence and so far as we are aware it is not ordinarily used as an agricultural implement or for domestic purposes. As has been stated above, the definition of "arms" in the Arms Act is not exhaustive and it is immaterial whether it can be described as a chhavi or not. We have no hesitation in holding that the instrument in question falls within the meaning of the word "arms" as used in the Indian Arms Act and renders its possessor amenable to the provisions of that Act. The circumstances in which it was found with Ralla Singh leave no doubt as to the object with which he had it.

We accordingly accept this appeal and convict Ralla Singh, son of Mewa Singh, of an offence under section 19 of the Indian Arms Act and sentence him to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

Appeal accepted.

The provisions of section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code are mandatory and non-compliance with them vitiates the trial. [p. 491, col. 1.]

The object of section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, is (1), to communicate to the accused, to the full extent that may be found necessary in each particular case, what is alleged against him in the evidence for the prosecution;

TANI v. EMPEROR.

(2) to ascertain from him what explanation or defence, in law or in fact, he wishes to put forward in respect thereof. [p. 490, col. 1.]

Where the accused is an ignorant person who cannot be expected to know or understand what particular parts of the evidence are, or are likely to be considered by the Court to be, against him, it is necessary that his attention should be directed to all the vital parts of the evidence against him. [p. 490, col. 2.]

It is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code to ask an accused the general question: "Have you anything more to say in this case or?" "you have heard the prosecution witnesses against you, what have you to say?" [p. 490, col. 2.]

Appeal from the judgment of the Sessions Judge, East Berar, dated the 11th May 1918, in Sessions Trial No. 5 of 1918, on a charge under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and sentence of death passed on 11th May 1918.

Messrs. G. R. Pradhan and O. B. Parakh, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Musammât Tani has been convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of Musammât Jakhai, her mother-in-law, and Musammât Bulki, a cousin of her husband, on the 27th March 1918 by administering dhatura poison.

Tani lived in Mouza Dhamangaon, but as that village was infected with plague she was at the time of the alleged crime living with her husband Venkati (P. W. No. 6) and Musammât Jakhai in a hut outside the village. Musammât Bulki occupied an adjacent hut with her mother Poonji (P. W. No. 8) and her two daughters, the elder of whom is Musammât Jani, (P. W. No. 7).

The 27th March 1918 was shimga or Holi day. About an hour after Jakhai had taken her evening meal she had an attack of giddiness and pain in her stomach which became distended, and she felt difficulty in speaking and began to snatch at her clothes and the ground on which she lay: later she became speechless and unconscious and died shortly after midnight. A short time before Jakhai died, Bulki who had taken her meal at the same time as Jakhai and had eaten some of the puranpoli which formed part of Jakhai's meal also developed similar symptoms and died a little after sunrise on the 28th March 1918.

The following questions arise for consideration:—

What was the cause of the sudden illness and death of Jakhai and Bulki?

If poison, who administered it and how?

P. W. No. 6 and P. W. No. 7 describe the symptoms exhibited by the two women before they died. There can be no doubt about this part of their evidence; they could not have invented the symptoms. P. W. No. 5, the Sub-Assistant Surgeon, says that these symptoms are symptoms of dhatura poisoning. Chemical examination showed the existence of a substance having the properties of dhatura in the stomach viscera of Jakhai and in the stains on her choli and the tudhan on which she was lying after she was taken ill. Traces of arsenic were also found in the stomach viscera of both Jakhai and Bulki. There is no reason to discredit this evidence and it must be held that the deaths of these women were due principally, at any rate, to dhatura poison.

The Investigating Police Officer had from the very beginning suspected dhatura poison as the probable cause of the deaths and had worked for a clue upon that suspicion. The viscera of the two deceased women were not forwarded to the Chemical Examiner until the case came up for hearing before the Magistrate and the report of the examination reached the Sessions Court after the trial had begun on the 6th May 1918. The Police had thus no information about the existence of arsenic in the viscera before their investigation was closed, otherwise they would have sought for some clue with regard to the arsenic also. It is regrettable that under the present arrangements as to chemical examinations and the rules as to transmission of articles to the Chemical Examiner, it is practically impossible for the Police to have early information as regards the results of chemical examination. The Officiating Sessions Judge has also omitted to question the Sub Assistant Surgeon examined as P. W. No. 5 in his Court, whether his post mortem examination disclosed any indication of arsenical poisoning or whether any of the symptoms described by the witness could be ascribed to such poisoning. Probably the deaths were due in a minor degree to the effect of arsenic also.

The evidence on which the prosecution rely to prove that the poison was administered by the appellant is as follows. P. W. No. 7, Jani's statement is to the effect that on the evening of the 27th March 1918, while Musammatt Jakhai was sitting in Bulki's hut, the appellant brought food for herself and Jakhai in two separate plates. Bulki also brought her food in a plate and the three sat outside Bulki's hut to take their meals. Some puranpoli formed part of the food in Jakhai's plate. Jakhai, while eating the puranpoli, remarked that it tasted bitter. The appellant explained that it was due to the puran (the sweetened dal filling) having been burnt in the making. Bulki ate some of the puranpoli from Jakhai's plate. The evidence of Poonji (P. W. No. 8) to the same effect may be left out of consideration as it is admittedly hearsay.

P. W. No. 6 (Venkati), P. W. No. 7 (Jani) and P. W. No. 8 (Poonji) were questioned with a view to prove that it was the appellant who had cooked the food brought by her for Jakhai and herself. Their evidence is not of much value, as none of them states that he or she saw the appellant cooking the food.

P. W. No. 1 (the investigating Police Officer), P. W. No. 4 (Laxman Patwari), P. W. No. 9 (Shanker) and P. W. No. 10 (Raghupat Patwari) state that the appellant pointed out a rubbish heap in which she had concealed some capsules of dhatūra fruits and produced them from the heap in their presence.

Ganpat, P. W. No. 2, states that on the Sunday preceding Holi day (Wednesday) the appellant had asked him where she could get dhatūra leaves for application to her throat which was paining. We think it unlikely that the appellant did not know where dhatūra plants were to be found in the village, and it appears to us improbable that she questioned this witness as he deposed she did.

The accused was examined by the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Judge, and we transcribe below both her examinations in extenso:

"Q. You have heard the prosecution witness against you: what have you to say? 01]

A. I know nothing about the allegations made out against me.

Q. Was Musammatt Jakhai related to you?

A. Musammatt Jakhai was my mother-in-law as well as my father's sister.

Q. Was she living with your husband?

A. She was living with me and my husband since I was married.

Q. Do you know how Musammatt Jakhai met with her death?

A. I don't know how Jakhai died.

Q. Who ordinarily cooks food for the inmates of your house?

A. Ordinarily I used to cook food but on festival days Musammatt Jakhai used to cook the food. On the occasion of the last shimga or Holi day Musammatt Jakhai had cooked the food. I had brought water from the well and supplied her fuel on the shimga day.

Q. Whether the deceased Jakhai used to quarrel with you?

A. No. She never quarrelled with me and she used to treat me properly. My husband used to quarrel with me.

Q. Do you know Musammatt Bulki?

A. Yes. She was my husband's cousin sister.

Q. Where did she live?

A. She used to live with her mother in a separate hut close to mine and in the same field in which we were living.

Q. Do you know how Bulki met with her death?

A. I do not know how she met with her death.

Q. Have you got anything more to say?

A. My mother-in-law used to treat me properly. When my husband left me for 2 years she brought me back from my parents. I have to say nothing more except that my husband and my aunt-in-law Poonji had suggested to me to say that I mixed dhatūra with the food, but in fact I did nothing and know nothing about it."

Before the Sessions Judge:

"Q. Is the statement made by you in the lower Court and now read out to you correct and is it true?

A. Yes, that statement is correct and true.

Q. What have you to say about the evidence of Jani and Ganpat that the puranpoli had a somewhat bitter taste and that you had gone out for dhatura seeds? Is it true that the three took their meals together?

A. Yes, what Jani said about myself, Bulki and Jakhai having taken food together on shimga evening in front of Bulki's hut is correct. There was no talk then about puranpoli having tasted bitter.

Q. Ganpat says that he saw you going to bring dhatura leaves. Is this true?

A. No. Ganpat speaks false. He never met me nor did I speak to him that I was going to bring dhatura leaves.

Q. What have you to say about the evidence for the prosecution that you used generally to quarrel with Jakhai and that there was a quarrel on the day previous to shimga?

A. There never has been a quarrel between her and myself.

Q. Can you say how Jakhai and Bulki died?

A. I do not know. My mother-in-law died and I was seated taking hold of her. I do not know how Bulki died. I was sitting near Jakhai at that time.

Q. Have you anything more to say in this case?

A. I have nothing else to say."

In our opinion the examination of the appellant has been defective and there has been no practical compliance with the provisions of section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, the object of which, as explained in Emperor v. Katay Kisan (1), is to

(1) communicate to the accused, to the full extent that may be found necessary in each particular case, what is alleged against him in the evidence for the prosecution; and

(2) ascertain from him what explanation or defence, in law or in fact, he wishes to put forward in respect thereof.

The most important part of the prosecution evidence is that of Jani, which is directed to proving the administration by the appellant of the food containing the poison. Jani's evidence shows that the appellant brought the food in two plates, she gave one plate to Jakhai, and Jakhai and Bulki who ate the food from that plate died. She herself ate from the other plate and nothing happened to her. These circumstances are very much against the accused. It was necessary, therefore, in our opinion to examine the accused and take her explanation with regard to them in detail. The appellant should have been asked the following questions or such of them as became necessary in view of her answers to previous questions: Whether she brought the food for herself and Jakhai; Whether she brought it in two separate plates; whether she gave one plate to Jakhai; whether there was puranpoli in the plate; whether Jakhai and Bulki ate the puranpoli and other food from that plate; whether she herself ate from the other plate; whether there was puranpoli in that plate and whether she ate that puranpoli. She should have been told that under the circumstances stated above presumptions arose that Jakhai and Bulki must have died of eating the food in the plate brought by her for Jakhai, and that the poison must have been put into the food by her, and she should have been asked whether she had any explanation to offer in this connection or as to why Jakhai and Bulki died under these circumstances while nothing happened to herself.

It is contended by the learned Standing Counsel for the Crown that when an accused person is asked the general question: "Have you anything more to say in this case", as by the Sessions Judge in the present case, or "You have heard the prosecution witnesses against you, what have you to say", as by the Committing Magistrate, there is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 342, Criminal Procedure Code, as it is open to the accused in answer to such questions to explain all matters which appear to be against him in the evidence, even though his attention has not been drawn to them by specific questions. It is possible that under certain circumstances—as in the case of an accused person of advanced education and information—such a question may be deemed a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 342 but in this case, as in most cases, the accused is an ignorant person who cannot be expected to know or understand what particular parts of the evidence are, or are likely to be considered by the Court to be, against her: and it was necessary that her attention should have been directed to all the vital parts of the evidence against her. Even where an accused person is capable of understanding what circumstances appear against him, when several details of the evidence form the subject of this examination he may be led to think that other details on which he has not been examined have not been considered to be of any importance by the Court, and he may think it unnecessary to offer any explanation in respect thereof. We consider that the provisions of section 342 are mandatory and non-compliance with them vitiates the trial; Ghulla v. Emperor (2) Emperor v. Savalya Atma Pasty (3). We set aside the conviction and sentence and direct a re-trial.

The Sub Assistant Surgeon should now be questioned in connection with the arsenic found in the viscera of the two deceased women.

In concluding this judgment we express our strong disapproval of the course followed by the investigating Police Officer in connection with the arrest of the accused in this case. He commenced the investigation at 3 P. M. on the 28th March 1918 and closed it for the day at 12 midnight. All this time was taken up with the examination of witnesses in connection with the inquest on Jakhai's body. At the end of the record of this day's proceeding, the Investigating Police Officer writes:

"Suspicion which arises is that death was due to the poison caused by dhatūra seeds."

The examination of the witnesses, one of whom was Musammāt Tani, shows that he suspected her of having administered the poison. He then commenced the inquest on Bulki and examined Tani a second time. This inquest and the investigation were closed at 3 A. M. on the 29th March 1918 with these remarks:—

"As the woman's death has been caused with dhatūra seeds I sent the corpse to Morai for post mortem examination."

It is clear that the Investigating Officer had the fullest justification for arresting Tani at 3 A. M. on the 29th March 1918. So far as he was concerned there was no doubt left that Tani had committed the offence. She was, however, not formally arrested till 6-30 P. M. on the 31st March 1918. Why she was not arrested earlier appears from the case diary No. 2 for 29th March 1918. The Investigating Officer writes therein at page 47:

"I will not register the crime under section 302, Indian Penal Code, until I get a reply from the Sub Assistant Surgeon; and as the remand of Police custody would not be obtained consequent on the arrest of Tani, but another of jail custody would be granted, I, therefore, postponed her arrest on the ground that it may not impede all those necessary particulars which are to come to light in future."

It is again clear from this that the Investigating Officer then considered that Tani should be arrested, but he refrained from doing what he knew he should have done because, if he did so, she would be removed from his custody. If he had arrested the accused and thought it necessary to have her in his custody for a longer time than the 24 hours prescribed by section 61, it was open to him to get an order under section 167 from the Magistrate for further detention in Police custody, but he would have had to give reasons for asking for such an order. Apparently he considered that he had none. In these circumstances we consider that his deliberate failure to make a formal arrest was nothing but a circumvention of the salutary provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code with regard to the custody of accused persons by the Police. We purposely use the expression "formal arrest" because it is difficult to believe that Tani was free from all restraint, or that she was not practically under arrest before 6-30 P. M. on the 31st March 1918, when she is recorded to have been arrested. On the 29th March 1918 the investigating Police Officer left Dhamangaon at 9 A. M.; and went to Rohankhed to investigate into another case, and returned to Dhamangaon at 3 P. M. Had he left Tani free during that time? In view of the evidence available to him at 3 A. M. on the 29th March 1918, he would have been very wrong if he had allowed her after that time to be free to go about as she pleased.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 84—Unsoundness of mind, what amounts to—Offence committed under impulse.

Under section 84, Indian Penal Code, a person is exempt from criminal liability only if by reason of unsoundness of mind he is incapable of knowing the nature of the act done by him or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law. It must, in other words, be shown that the cognitive faculties of the accused had been impaired by the unsoundness of his mind.

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Dera Ghazi-Khan, dated the 17th December 1917.

JUDGMENT.—Ramzan has been convicted of the murder of his wife, Musammât Zohran, and sentenced to transportation for life. He appeals. It is admitted that Ramzan killed his wife, inflicting six wounds with an axe. It appears that a neighbour named Gulu heard cries coming from Ramzan's house and on looking through a window saw Ramzan striking his wife with an axe. Information was sent to the Zaildar, who came to the spot and had the injured woman and the appellant sent to Kot Mithan, where Musammât Zohran died the next day from the injuries she had received. Before her death her statement was recorded, in which she said that she had been massaging her husband's head, that she then spread his bedding for him, that she put a cooking pot on the fire and that she was talking to her husband when he suddenly attacked her with an axe which was lying by him. She said that he had done this in a fit of insanity. The evidence of the Assistant Surgeon shows that the appellant exhibited no signs of insanity during the time in which he was kept under observation in the jail. There is, however, proof that he had been suffering from melancholia for four or five years, that he had been under the treatment of a Hakim named Muhammad Alam and got well, that he had a fresh attack two or three months before the occurrence and again went to Muhammad Alam for treatment and that he returned home about three days before the occurrence. Ramzan appears to have been on good terms with his wife and appears to have killed her under a sudden homicidal impulse without any sane motive.

Dealing with the question of law the learned Sessions Judge has held that the existence of such an impulse will not suffice to absolve the appellant from criminal liability, and that section 84, Indian Penal Code, will not apply to the case, unless it is shown that the appellant's cognitive faculties had been impaired by the unsoundness of his mind. This is a correct view of law and is supported by Queen Empress v. Kader Nasyer Shah (1), to which the lower Court has referred. Under section 84, Indian Penal Code, a person is exempt from criminal liability only if by reason of unsoundness of mind he is incapable of knowing the nature of the act done by him or that he is doing what is either wrong or contrary to law. In the present case, as the learned Sessions Judge has pointed out, there is no evidence to show that Ramzan was subject to any delusions, or that when he attacked his wife he was ignorant of the nature of his act or did not know that he was doing what was wrong. On the contrary, it appears that after the commission of the crime he asked pardon for what he had done. The case is, therefore, not covered by section 84, Indian Penal Code, and we hold that Ramzan has been rightly convicted of murder and we dismiss the appeal. But having regard to the fact that he was suffering from mental derangement, we direct that the record be forwarded to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor with our recommendation that the case be dealt with by the Local Government under section 401, Criminal Procedure Code, in such manner as it thinks fit.

Appeal dismissed.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195—Sanction for prosecution—Petty theft committed thirty-eight years previously, denial of—Sanction, whether should be granted.

Sanction was granted for the prosecution of the accused for perjury in respect of a statement made by him in which he had denied the fact of his having been convicted of petty theft thirty-eight years previously at the age of fourteen:

Held, that the fact which the accused had denied was not relevant to the trial before the Magistrate, and that, therefore, this was not a fit case in which sanction should have been granted.

Criminal revision from an order of the District Magistrate of Fatehpur.

Mr. E. A. Howard, for the Applicant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji (Government Pleader) for Mr. R. Malcolmson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—Some thirty-eight years ago the applicant Gajadhar was convicted on a charge of theft under section 380 of the Indian Penal Code and was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5. In the current year he made a complaint against the opposite party Haribua Chamar. In cross-examination he was asked "whether he had been convicted in Khaki Baba's theft case and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment. His reply was no." Haribua Chamar applied to the Magistrate for sanction to prosecute Gajadhar for perjury, in that he had falsely stated that he had not been sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment in Khaki Baba's theft case. That sanction has been granted and it was upheld on appeal by the District Magistrate. Gajadhar has come to this Court on revision. It has been shown by the production of a public register that Gajadhar was convicted in a theft case some thirty-eight years ago and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine. The record has been destroyed and there is apparently nothing to show who was the complainant in that case, and as the matter stands the register apparently does not prove that Gajadhar was sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment in Khaki Baba's theft case. Even supposing, however, that he did falsely deny this conviction, it is obvious that the Magistrate trying the case ought, in simple justice, to have refused to allow such a question to be put to the witness. The fact that at the age of fourteen the man was convicted of petty theft (while nothing has been shown against him in respect to the intervening years) was quite irrelevant to the trial before the Magistrate. Such a conviction would not be considered by any Court even if Gajadhar had been upon his trial for a subsequent offence. Nor is it fair or just to throw into a man's teeth a petty theft committed by him when he was but a boy. It is difficult to understand how any Magistrate could grant sanction to a private person to prosecute another in circumstances like this, and it is impossible for me to understand the frame of mind of the District Magistrate when he upheld such an order on appeal. It would be obviously persecution, not prosecution, to allow any such trial to go on. I allow the application. I set aside the order of the Court below.

Application allowed.

A Christian marriage is not dissolved by the apostasy of one of the parties. [p. 496, col. 2.]

EMPEROR V. RURI.

Where, therefore, the accused, a Christian wife, renounced Christianity and embraced Islam and then married a Muhammadan:

Held, that according to the Christian marriage law, which was the law applicable to the case, the first marriage was not dissolved and, therefore, the subsequent marriage was bigamous. [p. 496, col. 1.]

The fact that the complaint in respect of an offence under section 494, Indian Penal Code, is written at the suggestion of the Police does not contravene the provisions of section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 496, col. 1.]

Where on a case being called the accused present themselves before the Magistrate, there is no necessity of issuing process to them under section 204 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the mere omission to issue process in such a case does not render the commitment of the accused to the Court of Session illegal. [p. 496, col. 1.]

A commitment once made can only be quashed by the High Court under section 215 of the Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 496, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 10th May 1918; acquitting the respondent.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Diwan Ram Lal (for the Government Advocate), for the Crown.—The learned Sessions Judge was wrong in saying that the proceedings were vitiated by irregularities committed by the Magistrate. In fact, there were no irregularities. The complaint was written by Labhu, the husband of the girl, and addressed to the District Magistrate. The fact that the Superintendent of Police made an endorsement on it made no difference. All that section 198 of the Criminal Procedure Code wanted, was that the person affected should be a willing party. Once the Court became seized of the case, having been satisfied that the complainant was willing to proceed, he was out of it altogether and the case could proceed without him.

As for the fact that the Magistrate did not take the statement of the complainant and did not issue process to the accused, there was no necessity for doing so as the accused was already before the Court. If any irregularities were committed at all, they were not material and were curable by section 537 read with section 215 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The real point at issue was whether the marriage of a Christian wife was dissolved by her embracing Islam. The parties were Christians and were governed by Christian Law, according to which a marriage was indissoluble except by death or divorce. The Christian wife could not be absolved of all liabilities towards her Christian husband by the mere fact of renouncing Christianity. Ram Kumari, In the matter of (1) held that a Hindu wife who embraced Islam and then married a Muhammadan was guilty of an offence under section 494, Indian Penal Code, because according to Hindu Law apostasy did not dissolve marriage. In Emperor v. Lazar (2) an Indian Christian who had a Christian wife living and who married a Hindu woman according to Hindu rites was held to have committed bigamy. Again Jamna Devi v. Mul Raj (3) laid down the principle that the rights of a Hindu husband were not affected in any way by the conversion to Islam of his wife and she could not, therefore, refuse to live with him. On the analogy of all these rulings, Musammatt Ruri's first marriage was not dissolved by her conversion and, therefore, she was guilty of bigamy in marrying Fazal Din.

Dr. Shuja-ud-din (for Mr. Abdul Rashid), for the Respondent.—The procedure adopted by the Magistrate was illegal, because the offence is non-cognizable and not within the jurisdiction of any Court except upon complaint by the person aggrieved by such offence; section 198, Criminal Procedure Code. The person aggrieved in respect of bigamy is the husband of the woman and no other, Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Sarma Kahmi (4). In this case the husband did not lodge any formal complaint. The petition written at the suggestion of the Superintendent of Police was not a "complaint" within the meaning of the Code. The accused was sent to the Magistrate in Police custody and the whole procedure was that of a challan case. The Police had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the matter: they ought to have directed the complainant to seek his remedy in a Court of law.

Again, the provisions of sections 200 and 204 of the Criminal Procedure Code were not complied with by the Magistrate. It was his duty to examine the complainant on oath and then to issue process to the accused. The provisions of the sections were obligatory in their nature and the learned Counsel for the Crown was wrong in saying that the word 'shall' in these sections did not carry the idea of mandate. The non-observance by the Magistrate of these sections was not a mere irregularity curable by section 537 of the Code, but an illegality going to the very root of the matter and vitiated the whole trial.

On the merits, too, the case for the accused was a strong one. In order to secure a conviction the prosecution must prove that the second marriage was void by reason of the subsistence of the first according to the law applicable to the accused. That was the important point. The law applicable is the personal law of the accused. The accused is a Muhammadan, therefore the law applicable is the Muhammadan Law, according to which a Christian's conversion to Islam has the effect of dissolving the Christian marriage. Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, 3rd Edition, Volume II, page 427. All that a convert is required to do is to give her husband, through the Qazi, the option of embracing Islam—if he agrees, well and good, otherwise the earlier marriage is dissolved. In this case the civil law of the land did not allow the accused to seek the help of a Court in asking the previous husband to adopt her new faith and the other side could at best urge that she ought to have waited for the period of iddat. The marriage contracted during iddat may at the most be irregular but was not illegal and the fact remained that conversion to Islam had dissolved the first marriage. The rulings cited by the other side were distinguishable, as they were all cases of conversion from Hinduism according to which a marriage was absolutely indissoluble—not even by death or divorce. The passage relied upon in Emperor v. Lazar (2) was obiter dictum and did not affect the point at issue. On the other hand the case of Emperor v. Antony (5) was on all fours with the present case and following Madras High Court Proceedings, 8th November 1866 (6), it held that conversion dissolved marriage. The learned Sessions Judge was right in holding that the accused had committed no offence.

Diwan Ram Lal replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Local Government from an order of the Sessions Judge of Lyallpur acquitting Musammât Ruri of an offence under section 494, Indian Penal Code.

The facts are not in dispute. Musammât Ruri was the wife of the complainant Labhu. They were Christian and were married according to the Christian rites. Some months ago Musammât Ruri left her aunt's house where she had been staying, became a Muhammadan, and married Fazl Din. She was found by Labhu at Fazl Din's house and taken to the thana at Gojra, where Fazl Din followed them. The Police sent the parties to the thana at Toba Tek Singh, and from there to the Superintendent of Police at Lyallpur. Labhu had a complaint written at the suggestion of the Superintendent, who forwarded it with a slip to the District Magistrate, and the latter sent the case to Mr. Phillips, Honorary Magistrate, who after holding an inquiry committed Musammât Ruri and Fazl Din to the Sessions Court for trial. The learned Sessions Judge acquitted both the accused. The grounds on which he has acquitted Musammât Ruri, with whose case alone we are concerned, are:—

(1) that the provisions of section 198, Criminal Procedure Code, were not complied with, the machinery of law having been set in motion, not by Labhu, but by the Police, who treated the case as though it were a cognizable one, the accused persons having been practically under custody from the time when they were taken to Toba Tek Singh,

(2) that the Magistrate did not follow the procedure laid down in sections 200 and 204 of the Code, and

(5) 8 Ind. Cas. 572; 33 M. 371; 11 Cr. L. J. 632.

(6) 3 M. H. C. R. App. 7; 1 Weir 561.

EMPEROR v. RURI.

(3) that according to the Muhammadan Law Musammât Ruri's marriage to Labhu was dissolved by her conversion to Islam, and she was, therefore, not guilty of bigamy in marrying Fazl Din.

With regard to the first point, we think it is clear that the Magistrate took cognizance of the case on the complaint of Labhu. The fact that it was at the suggestion of the Police that Labhu had the complaint written is immaterial. We hold that there has been no contravention of the provisions of section 193 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

As to the second point, the learned Sessions Judge is mistaken in thinking that the Committing Magistrate started the inquiry without examining the complainant. The record shows on the contrary that the first thing the Magistrate did when the case came before him was to take the statement of the complainant. As to the issuing of process to the accused under section 204, this was unnecessary as the accused were already present when the case came before the Magistrate. The procedure followed by the Magistrate was perfectly regular, and we may note that even if there had been such an irregularity as the learned Sessions Judge thinks there was in the magisterial inquiry, this would not have vitiated the trial in the Sessions Court. The commitment to that Court held good and under section 215 of the Code could not have been quashed except by this Court.

As regards the third point the lower Court has erred in applying the Muhammadan Law to the case. As Labhu and his wife were Christians and were married according to Christian rites, the law applicable is obviously the Christian marriage law, under which a marriage is indissoluble except by death or divorce.

Counsel for the respondent relies on Emperor v. Antony (5) and Madras High Court Proceedings, 8th November 1866 (6), but those were cases of a Hindu convert to Christianity marrying a Christian woman and then relapsing into Hinduism and marrying a Hindu woman, and the ratio decidendi was that a convert from Hinduism re-acquires his right to be a polygamist on ceasing to be a Christian and becoming a Hindu again.

Those rulings are not in point in the present case, which is one of a Christian woman (not alleged to be a convert) becoming a Muhammadan. The law not allowing a plurality of husbands, the respondent's second marriage, having been contracted while her first marriage subsisted, was invalid.

In Ram Kumari, In the matter of (1) and Jamna Devi v. Mul Raj (3) it has been held that a marriage between Hindus is not dissolved by one of the parties thereto embracing Islam, the matrimonial bond being regarded by the Hindu Law as indissoluble. Those authorities are applicable here, the principle being the same where the parties to the first marriage were Christians. Neither in the case of Christians nor in the case of Hindus is the marriage dissolved by the apostasy of one of the parties. Musammât Ruri cannot by renouncing the Christian religion cast off the obligations which she contracted at the time of her marriage to Labhu.

We hold, therefore, that Musammât Ruri's marriage to Labhu was not dissolved by her becoming a Muhammadan, and that by marrying Fazl Din she committed an offence under section 494, Indian Penal Code.

We accept the appeal and convict Musammât Ruri of an offence under that section, and sentence her to three months' simple imprisonment.

Appeal accepted.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 146—Possession of fishery extending over several miles, dispute as to—Magistrate unable to satisfy himself as to possession of whole fishery—Procedure—Local investigation, whether necessary in every case.

In a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, regarding the possession of a fishery extending over several miles in length, if on the evidence the Magistrate is unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the whole length in question, he should ascertain, so far as he can, the possession of some portion or portions thereof. As to the portion of which he is able to say "so and so is in possession" he should proceed under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and only as to the remainder should he proceed under section 46, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 498, col. 2; p. 499, col. 1.]

There is no hard and fast rule of law that in every case under section 45, Criminal Procedure Code, a local investigation must be held, whether the parties desire it or not [p. 499, col. 1.]

A Magistrate who attaches the property in dispute under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, without holding a local investigation, cannot be said to have exercised his jurisdiction erroneously. [p. 499, col. 1.]

In a proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate attached the property in dispute under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, on a finding arrived at by him which was expressed in these terms: "It is very difficult to come to a decision about the possession of the whole jalkar in dispute from the evidence adduced".

Held, that although "difficulty" was not synonymous with "impossibility" as contemplated by the second part of section 145 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, yet the judgment of the Magistrate might be read as meaning that on the evidence adduced, he was unable to satisfy himself as to which of the contending parties was in possession of the property in question. [p. 498, col. 2.]

Mr. Gibbons, Advocate-General (with him Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Urukramdas Chakrabarty), for the Petitioner.—The question is whether the Court below has failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law in holding that, on the evidence adduced by the parties, it is difficult for him to come to a finding as to which party was in actual possession of the disputed property within the two months next before the institution of the proceeding under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The section provides that the Magistrate can attach the disputed property under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code, only when he is unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of either party. As the learned Magistrate has not come to any finding according to the provisions of section 146 (1), Criminal Procedure Code, he is not competent to attach the property. Refers to Somnath Madhavi, In re (1) and Sanganbasawa, In re (2). The learned Magistrate says: "It is difficult for him to come to a decision as to the actual possession of either party." When he finds that difficulty in his way, he should have ordered a local enquiry before proceeding to attach the property under section 146. Refers to Sheikh Mansar Ali v. Muliullah (3) and Sheobalak Rai v. Bhagwat Panday (4). In a case like this where the Magistrate cannot come to a definite conclusion because it is difficult for him to do so, it is the duty of the Magistrate to surmount the difficulty by ordering a local investigation in the manner laid down in section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. If that course were taken, the report of the investigating officer, which would have been a very important piece of evidence in the case, would have enabled the learned Magistrate to come to a definite finding on the question of possession. The Magistrate has also found that on the evidence he could not come to a decision as to the possession of the whole of the jalkar which extends over six miles in length. If that were so, he should have at least made some attempt to ascertain which party was in possession of what portion of the jalkar.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with him Babu Debendra Narayan Bhattacharjee), for the Opposite Parties.—The order of attachment made by the learned Magistrate under section 146 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure is perfectly right and proper and it cannot be said that he has in any way erred in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

UPENDRA NATH BHATTACHARJEE v. PRASANNA KUMAR GHOSH.

The decision of the learned Magistrate cannot be said to have been vitiated by the mere fact that in ordering attachment the Magistrate has not quoted the wording of section 146 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code. The order means in substance that having regard to the conflicting nature of oral and documentary evidence produced in the case he was unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of either party. The Magistrate having ordered the attachment of the property for the reason that he finds great difficulty in finding the possession of the jalkar, he cannot be said to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law. As regards the cases reported as Somnath Madhavji, In re (1) and Sanganbasawa, In re (2) referred to in support of the case for the petitioner, my submission is that those cases have no bearing at all upon this case because there the Magistrate without deciding the case upon possession decided the case upon the rights of the parties and so the High Court held that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to do so. As regards the cases reported as Sheikh Mansur Ali v. Matiullah (3) and Sheobalak Rai v. Bhagwat Panday (4), I submit that the facts of those cases do not apply to this case and those cases, therefore, are no authorities for the proposition that upon the facts and under the circumstances of this case the Magistrate should have ordered a local investigation. In those cases regular procedure was not followed by the Magistrate and the parties were not allowed an opportunity to produce evidence, and so it was held that the Magistrate ought to have granted time to allow regular proceedings to be followed or he might have informed himself of the facts of the case either by local investigation under section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, or in other ways. But in this case the parties did produce evidence and on that evidence the Magistrate could not decide the case and, therefore, he was fully competent to attach the property.

Mr. Gibbons, in reply.—The judgment of the learned Magistrate is one from which it is very difficult to say what he really means. The Magistrate cannot say that there is an insurmountable difficulty in his way in coming to a definite conclusion unless he resorts to all available means for getting rid of the difficulty.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule arises out of proceedings taken under Chapter XII of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In the order initiating the proceeding the subject-matter of the dispute is described as a fishery in the river Amra extending from a point named Bara Peer Dara on the north and a village Anantapur on the south. After a hearing extending over some 14 days the conclusion arrived at by the Magistrate is expressed in these terms:—"It is very difficult to come to a decision about the possession of the whole jalkar in dispute from the evidence adduced." This finding is attacked in the first place on the ground that "difficult" is not synonymous with "impossibility" and that the finding therefore does not satisfy the provisions of the second branch of section 146 (1), Criminal Procedure Code. No doubt it is the case that difficulty is not necessarily synonymous with impossibility, but we think that in the present case we may read the Magistrate's judgment as meaning that on the evidence adduced he was unable to satisfy himself as to which of the contending parties was in possession of the property in question. But a further difficulty arises, inasmuch as he says that he is unable to come to a decision about the possession of the "whole of the jalkar" which extends over a stretch of river some six miles in length. His difficulty in this connection appears to have arisen in part from the fact that both parties sought to extend their boundaries. The first party wished to extend their possession to some point on the south spoken of as Kabra Daha and two points on the north named Malpuria and Gena Dahas. The second party similarly desired to extend their possession from Anantapur on the south to a point called Itagahati which appears to be towards the north of Bara Peer Dara. But if on the evidence the Magistrate was unable to satisfy himself as to the possession of the whole of the six miles in question, that did not relieve him from the duty of proceeding further and ascertaining, in so far as he could, the possession of some portion or portions thereof. As to the portion of which he was able to say "so and so is in possession", he should have proceeded under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and only as to the remainder should he have proceeded under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code.

We may note further that it has been suggested that the Magistrate should have proceeded under the provisions of section 148, Criminal Procedure Code, to have a local investigation, and in support of that contention reference has been made to the case reported as Sheikh Mansar Ali v. Matiullah (3). But we do not read that decision as laying down a hard and fast rule of law that in every case a local investigation must be held, whether the parties desire that such local inquiry should be held or not. In the present case notwithstanding the fact that the hearing extended over 14 days neither party, it appears, prayed to the Magistrate that a local enquiry should be had. We cannot, therefore, say that in this case the Magistrate has erroneously exercised his discretion in not holding such a local investigation. But when the case goes back and further proceedings, if any, are taken, and if a local investigation will for instance assist in the determination of the points Bura Peer Dara, Mulpuria, Gena Daba, Kabra Daba and Itagahati, obviously it will be desirable that such investigation should be had.

For the reasons we have given we make this Rule absolute and set aside the order complained of. If a dispute likely to occasion a breach of the peace still exists it will be open to the District Magistrate to take such further proceedings as he may consider necessary.

Rule made absolute.

The High Court has no power under section 433 of the Criminal Procedure Code to set aside an Criminal revision from an order of the Cantonment Magistrate, Meerut.

Mr. Satya Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji (Government Pleader), for Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which this revision on the criminal side has arisen are as follows:—Pending in the Court of the Cantonment Magistrate of Meerut in his capacity as a Small Cause Court was an execution case. The decree-holder was directed to deposit the diet money of his judgment-debtor who was about to be arrested. He was ordered to do so within three days and the order was passed on the 9th of July 1918. The 10th, 11th and 12th of July were holidays, so that the only two days on which he could possibly deposit the money were the 9th and the 13th of the month. On the 15th of the month he made a complaint to the Cantonment Magistrate that although he had tendered the money to the Civil Ahlmad Mul Chand, the latter had refused to take it and had made it impossible for him, the decree-holder, to comply with the order. On the 15th of July the Cantonment Magistrate made the following report to the Collector for orders: "The Civil Ahlmad Mul Chand admits that the decree-holder tendered the fees but that he, Mul Chand, did not accept them at the instigation of the Chaprasi Sharfu who, it appears, is related to the defendant." Assuming that this report is correct, and there is absolutely no reason to doubt it, on the 15th of July the Civil Ahlmad Mul Chand did admit to the Cantonment Magistrate that the money had been offered to him and that he had refused to take it. I gather that it was the Cantonment Magistrate's object in making this report to get the Ahlmad punished. On the 30th of July the Collector wrote an order which goes to show that Mul Chand at his departmental enquiry had not admitted that the money had been tendered to him. Though this is not really stated in the order, it is a natural inference from the language of that order, for the Collector came to the conclusion that the charge made against Mul Chand was untrue and he sent the papers back to the Cantonment Magistrate with the following remarks: "If you agree with me, I think that you should recommend the prosecution of the decree-holder under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code as reckless complaints of this kind are far too common, and I think that it is our duty to protect our subordinate officials from them." On receipt of this the Cantonment Magistrate passed his order of the 31st of July 1918, which the applicant Ram Prasad now seeks to have revised in this Court. In that order the Cantonment Magistrate remarked as follows:—"In consequence I reported Mul Chand to the Collector, who has enquired into the case and finds that the complaint is a false one. I concur in the Collector's finding and I, therefore, sanction the prosecution of Ram Prasad under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code under the provisions of section 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure." These are the facts as they stand before me, I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that if sitting as a Criminal Court I had power to revise this order, I should at once set it aside in view of the Cantonment Magistrate's order of the 15th of July 1918, mentioned above, but it seems to me that I have no authority or jurisdiction whatsoever sitting on the criminal side to interfere with this order. It amounts to a complaint made by a Civil Court against a certain person for having given to that Court false information in regard to a certain matter. The order cannot be brought to this Court on the criminal side. At the utmost it could be brought up before this Court on the civil side and even in that aspect also it would be impossible to interfere under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The order I am afraid will stand, not because I would not set it aside, but because I am unable to do so. The application is rejected.

Application dismissed.

Where in a trial before the Court of Session the Judge, disagreeing with the verdict of "not guilty" returned by the Jury, referred the case to the High Court under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code:—

Held, that as there was evidence on the record which would support the conclusion arrived at by the Jury, though there was evidence also the other way, the verdict of the Jury could not be said to be perverse or erroneous; that on the contrary it may have been correct, so that the accused must be acquitted. Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Rajshahye, dated the 2nd January 1918.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee, for the Accused.

Mr. Orr, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, five accused persons Asgar Mandal, Nasir Pramanik, Mahir Pramanik, Masir and Rahim Baksh were put on their trial before the Sessions Judge of Rajshahye and a Jury on charges under sections 147, 148, 326, 307, 326/109 and 326/149, Indian Penal Code. The Jury returned a unanimous verdict of "not guilty" on all the charges. As the charges under sections 147, 148 and 149, Indian Penal Code, turned upon the question of possession of the land where the occurrence took place and the evidence on that point was conflicting, the learned Judge accepted the verdict with regard to those charges and acquitted all the accused of offences under sections 147, 148 and 149. This had the effect of acquitting Masir and Rahim Baksh altogether. The learned Judge was of opinion that the verdict on the charges under sections 326, 307 and 326/109 was erroneous. He has accordingly referred the case of the three accused Asgar Mandal, Nasir Pramanik and Mahir Pramanik to this Court for decision under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code.

The case for the prosecution was that in the village of Chak Mahadeb there were two factions, the co sharers-in-interest in that village being on bad terms. The party headed by Elahi Bux (P. W. No. 1) claimed to have been in possession of a small piece of land, on which a cow-shed had existed up to two-years ago and which since then had been cultivated by them by growing ole, man and other vegetables. The other party headed by the accused Nasir Pramanik claimed to have been in exclusive possession of this piece of land and they alleged that they had on the Wednesday before the occurrence in question erected a hut on that land. The prosecution case was that it was only on Friday, i. e., the day of the occurrence, that the accused's party came to erect the hut bringing poles, ropes and axes in order to put it up. Undoubtedly a dispute arose with regard to the erection of the hut, and, according to the prosecution case, Asgar Mandal, who was with Nasir Pramanik and his party, struck at Karim Baksh (P. W. No. 2) and felled him to the ground.

The injury inflicted was somewhat serious. Karim Baksh was in hospital for over a month, and at one time his life was in danger and his declaration was accordingly recorded by a Magistrate. The medical evidence shows that, though the injury to his head was cured, he was suffering from facial paralysis which will probably be permanent and his left ear which was cut in two will always bear the scar.

The prosecution version of the story indicated an unprovoked attack by Asgar Mandal on Karim Baksh, who was doing no more than taking hold of a post and preventing the accused's party from erecting the hut. That, however, depends on which party was in possession. Now, though this question of possession was not clear upon the evidence, still evidence was given on both sides with regard to it and the question was rightly left to the Jury by the Judge. It may be, therefore, that the Jury considered that the possession of Nasir and his party had been established. There was certainly evidence on the record which would account for such a conclusion, though there was evidence also the other way.

Assuming that the Jury was of opinion that possession was with the accused, the question would arise, and that would also be within the province of the Jury to decide, whether the accused were exercising a right of private defence. The right of private defence of property would extend to the causing of hurt by Asgar Mandal on any person who was committing one of certain offences with regard to that property. The offence in this particular case would be, no doubt, that of mischief, and would fall within the section. The evidence shows that Karim Baksh was wounded while he was actually attempting to remove the post. If that was so, the right of private defence against such mischief, would continue as long as Karim Baksh continued in the commission of that mischief and the Jury may have thought that that was the case here. Subject to the provisions of section 99, which lays down that the right of private defence in no case extends to the inflicting of more harm than it is necessary to inflict for the purpose of defence, the right of private defence would extend to the voluntarily causing to the wrong doer a harm such as was caused in this case. So far as Karim Baksh was concerned, the act of Asgar had the effect of defending the property against his possible wrongful act. Can it be said that that right was so exceeded as to make Asgar's attack on Karim an offence? It appears to us to be a matter of some difficulty. It is certainly not clear that it was an offence. The question was left—and properly left—to the Jury and they came to the conclusion, if we may judge by the verdict of not guilty, that it was not. It appears impossible to say that that verdict was clearly and undoubtedly wrong. It would appear that so far as Karim Baksh was concerned, the defence of the property succeeded; but, so far as the other members of that party were concerned, it would appear that they went on with what they were doing and either pulled down the hut if it was completely erected, (as to which there is some doubt) or, at any rate, removed the posts and other portions of it and threw the chals into the tank. The defence, therefore, of the whole property cannot be said to have been altogether successful.

DULLI v. EMPEROR.

Taking this view of the case, we must hold that the verdict of the Jury cannot be said to be perverse or erroneous; on the contrary, it may have been correct.

It is not necessary to discuss the question whether the act of Asgar was abetted by Nasir and Mahir, having regard to the view which we have taken of the act of Asgar Mandal himself. We accordingly acquit all the three accused.

Accused acquitted.

Where several persons attack another with lathis and cause his death, they are all guilty of the offence of murder. [p. 503, col. 1.]

Where a trial has ended in the complete acquittal of the accused person, it is not open to the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction to convict him of any offence. The utmost that it can do, in the absence of an appeal against the acquittal by the properly constituted authorities, is to order a new trial. [p. 503, cols. 1 & 2.]

An appeal against a conviction, however, opens out the entire case, and the Appellate Court, being empowered to alter the finding by section 423 (1) (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code, may record a conviction in respect of an offence of which the trial Court has found the accused not guilty. JUDGMENT.—In this case Dulli Kurmi was tried upon a number of charges, one of which was a charge of robbery, incorrectly framed under section 397 of the Indian Penal Code, which section, as this Court has repeatedly remarked, does not in itself constitute any offence but merely conveys a direction to the Court in the matter of sentence in respect of certain aggravated forms of robbery or dacoity, while there was also a charge of murder under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts deposed to by the prosecution witnesses are as follows:—The complainant Sehdu was sleeping in his field to watch over the crop which was ripe or ripening. Shortly before dawn, three men entered the field and proceeded to plunder it of its crop. Sehdu came upon them after they had cut a certain amount of the crop and had made it into bundles for convenience of removal. The thieves set upon him and he shouted for help. He himself received severe injuries from the lathis of the thieves and his neighbour Charittar, who pluckily came to his rescue, was felled to the ground and received such injuries that he died on the spot. The medical evidence shows that Charittar's head had been terribly shattered by a number of blows, which the evidence proves must have been inflicted by the lathis of the thieves. Sehdu's evidence is corroborated by Muhammad Ali and Gopi; each of these men names the thieves who committed this offence and positively identifies the accused Dulli as having been one of them. There was practically no defence, beyond a bare denial and a plea of alibi wholly unsupported by evidence. Moreover Dulli was nowhere to be found when the Police enquiry into this matter was taken up, and he has offered no reasonable or credible explanation of his absence from his home and from the neighbourhood for several months following the affray in which Charittar lost his life. He has appealed against his conviction by the Sessions Court, but his participation in the offence or offences committed under the circumstances above stated is established by overwhelming evidence. The learned Sessions Judge upon this evidence, which he accepted as true, came to the conclusion that the thieves could not be convicted of robbery, because the hurts caused to Sehdu and Charittar had not been inflicted in carrying away or in attempting to carry away the crop which had been cut from Sehdu's field. He may be justified in his opinion that when they inflicted these injuries, the thieves were merely resisting their own arrest and had abandoned any intention of removing the stolen property, and in that case no conviction of robbery can be recorded. Further, the learned Sessions Judge, by a somewhat involved process of reasoning into which it does not seem necessary for us to enter in detail, arrived at the conclusion that the men who inflicted these injuries upon Charittar neither intended to cause his death nor knew that they were likely to do so. He has accordingly acquitted Dulli of the charge under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and has convicted him of offences punishable under sections 325 and 382 of the same Code. The sentences which he has passed are substantial; but nevertheless the learned Judge of this Court, before whom his petition of appeal came up for consideration was of opinion that the order of acquittal on the charge of murder required to be considered by this Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. Notice has gone to Dulli to show cause and the whole matter is now before us.

On the facts of the case we are unhesitatingly of opinion that Dulli was guilty of the murder of Charittar and liable to punishment under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code. The nature of the injuries observed at the post mortem examination puts it beyond doubt that the men who inflicted those injuries intended at the time to cause death, or such injury as they must have known to be likely to result in death. The mere fact that it was impossible for the witnesses to say which of the three robbers inflicted any particular injury on the person of the deceased is, under the circumstances of this case, wholly irrelevant. They were all three of them striking him with lathis and between them they caused his death in the manner already stated. They are all of them equally guilty of the offence of murder.

We have had to consider one further question, namely, the limitation imposed upon the revisional jurisdiction of this Court by the fourth clause of section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. There is some difference of legal opinion on this point. There is no doubt whatever that, when a trial has ended in the complete acquittal of the accused person, it is not open to this Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction to convict him of any offence. The utmost that this Court can do, in the absence of an appeal against the acquittal by the properly constituted authorities, is to order a new trial. It is, however, open to argument whether this clause is intended to apply to cases in which an accused, who has been tried upon more than one charge under the provisions of section 235 or 236 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, has been acquitted upon one charge but convicted upon another. In the present case this question does not arise for determination. We have before us an appeal by Dulli against his conviction, as well as the notice of enhancement issued by this Court. It is, therefore, open to us to exercise any of the powers conferred by section 423 (1) (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as well as any of the powers specified under section 439 of the same Code. It has repeatedly been held by various High Courts that an appeal against the conviction opens out the entire case, and that the Appellate Court, being empowered to alter the finding by section 423 (1) (b) above referred to, may record a conviction in respect of an offence of which the trial Court has found the accused not guilty. It is quite true that under this section, considered by itself, the finding can only be altered without enhancement of the sentence; but the power to enhance the sentence is separately conferred upon this Court by section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It follows that in the case now before us there can be no question that we have authority to record a conviction under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and to pass an appropriate sentence. Accordingly we dismiss the appeal of Dulli. We alter the conviction of the said appellant from one under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code to one under section 302 of the same Code, and we enhance the sentence by passing upon Dulli the minimum sentence which the law authorises us to pass in respect of the offence of which we have found him guilty; that is to say, we sentence him to undergo transportation for life. This sentence will run concurrently with the sentence passed by the learned Sessions Judge on the conviction under section 382 of the Indian Penal Code.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 25, 30—Excise Officer, whether Police Officer—Confession, admissibility of, against co-accused—Statement made by accused exculpating himself, whether confession—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 362—Magistrate, duty of.

Excise Officers cannot be said to be Police Officers, so that a confession made to an Excise Officer is not inadmissible in evidence under section 25 of the Evidence Act. [p. 506, col. 2.]

In order that a confession made by one of several accused may be taken into consideration under section 30 of the Evidence Act against his co-accused, it is not necessary that the confession should be one in which the maker of it persists up to and at the time of the trial [p. 506, col. 2.]

A confession, made before a case comes up for trial but withdrawn at the time of the trial, would still be admissible against the other accused under section 30 of the Evidence Act. [p. 506, col. 2.]

But under section 30 of the Evidence Act, the Court cannot take into consideration statements made by one of several accused against his co-accused, where such statements are consistent with an attempt on the part of the maker of them to exculpate himself from the charge which has been or which is likely to be made against him. For the purpose of seeing whether statements made by an accused are confessions or not it is essential, first of all, to consider the nature of the offence with which the accused has been charged or is likely to be charged, and secondly, the whole of the statements must be read for the purpose of seeing whether in the opinion of the Court they are confessions or not. [p. 507, col. 1.]

Statements made by an accused which are consistent with an attempt on his part to exculpate himself from the charge which has been or which is likely to be made against him cannot be regarded as confessions. [p. 507, col. 1.]

It is the duty of the Magistrate in a case which comes within section 362, Criminal Procedure Code, to take a note of all the material facts stated by a witness, whether they appear in the course of the examination-in-chief or in the course of the cross-examination. [p. 509, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 1st March 1918.

The Advocate General and Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Ram Taran Chatterjee and Gyan Chandra Guha, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Ah Foong Chinaman, who was charged along with two others with an alleged offence under section 9, clauses (c) and (d) of the Opium Act of 1878. The appellant was called the third accused in the Trial Court.

The facts of this case may be shortly stated as follows:—The Excise Officers apparently had got information about a contemplated dealing with some opium and having engaged two Taxi Cabs they proceeded to a place called Ghusrury, and having stopped at a certain place near the Durga they waited; and presently another Taxi Cab drove up, and the Excise Officers ran out and seized the persons who were in that Taxi Cab—one was the first accused who was sitting inside the Taxi Cab; the other was the second accused who was the driver of the Taxi Cab. They then found inside the Taxi Cab three gunny bags:—the first accused was sitting in the cab with his feet either on or over the bags. The bags were taken out and opened in the presence of the first and the second accused, as I understand the evidence on the record, and they were found to contain opium; it appears that the total amount of the opium was about 52 seers. I ought perhaps to have stated that this was on the 14th of November 1917, and the time the Taxi Cab drove up near the Durga at Ghusrury was, according to the evidence of the Inspector of Excise, about 10 o'clock at night.

The first and the second accused made statements to the Excise Officers.

The first accused according to the evidence of the Inspector of Excise said, "he was at New Market that evening and was called by a Chinaman to a house, he said, he could point out. He went with the Chinaman to the house and saw two other coolies there. This Chinaman gave these three bags to the three coolies and asked the first accused and the other two coolies to go to Free School Street with the Chinaman. When they all got there they found the Taxi Cab waiting there. Under instructions of the Chinaman they put the bags into the car and the first accused was asked to go in this Taxi, and he did so and came to Ghusrury. The second accused stated that he was at Free School

AH FOONG CHINAMAN V. EMPEROR.

Street at 8 P. M., where the Chinaman came with 3 coolies and asked him to take the bags to Ghusray with this cooly, the first accused. Both accused said they would point out the Chinaman. The second accused also stated that the Chinaman said that on his return from Ghusray this cooly would point out the Chinaman's house who would pay the fair, etc." It was stated in the evidence that the cooly was wearing clothes—I think he was wearing a Dbuti and a shirt, and learned Counsel described him as dressed like a Babu. The first and the second accused were arrested and they were taken by the Excise Officers to a place, No. 5, Alimuddin Street, where the opium was deposited and placed under lock and key for safety. Then the following facts may be taken from the Inspector's evidence: "Then we all with the accused went to Chandney. The first accused showed us the way. Then he took us to Temple Street and asked to stop the car there. Then he took us to Gumgar Lane."—[Gumgar Lane is a lane which runs at right angles with Temple Street and seems to connect with Temple Street on the south and Chandni Chowk Street on the north] "and pointed out a house. We had got out of the car in Temple Street. Petty Officer Ram N. Lal went with the two accused and stood near the door of 2, Gumgar Lane."—That is, a house on the east side of the Gumgar Lane, not very far from the southern end of the Gumgar Lane—"I, with Sub-Inspector B. C. Banerjee, stood about 3 or 4 yards from the door. After a minute or two, the third accused, i.e., the present appellant, opened the door. No one called out. The car was 12 or 15 yards from the door of No. 2, and 5 or 6 yards from a room in that house. The third accused opened the Sudder door of 2, Gumgar Lane, and said in Hindustani Pauhunchaya"—which has been translated by the assistance of the learned Counsel at the Bar and also with the help of my learned brother to mean, Have you caused it to arrive or, it may mean, have you got there and have you come back. "The first and the second accused were in front of the door and he addressed them. Thereupon, Ram N. Lal arrested him. I went up and saw the third accused drop some papers which he had in his hand, I picked them up. They were 1 note of Rs. 100 and 10 of Rs. 10 notes, Rs. 200 notes altogether. We took all the accused inside No. 2 and searched it but found nothing." I do not think I need read the cross-examination except this, "we passed ahead of Gumgar Lane and stopped a few paces to the east of it. The Chinaman's house is to the left in Gumgar Lane entering from Temple Street"—that I think must be a mistake and must be to the right side as you enter from Temple Street—"The first two accused came up with Ram Narain and almost immediately the third accused; Chinaman, appeared. He was arrested as soon as he said Pauhunchaya. The two accused never knocked at the door before the third accused came. The third accused denied the whole thing. M. Ibrahim gave his address as 7 Chandney Chowk. He attended Court with subpoena on the 16th November. There are no windows on the Temple Street side of the Chinaman's house."

Now, those are the facts. The evidence of the Inspector is corroborated by the Sub-Inspector and also by Ram Narain Lal.

Then came a witness whose evidence has been the subject of comment by the learned Counsel for the appellant and by the learned Advocate General. It is not long and I propose to read it: "My name is Muhammad Ibrahim. I am by occupation Hide Broker. My maternal uncle lives at 1, Gumgar Lane. I know third accused. He lives at No. 2 opposite my uncle's house. I have known third accused for 5 or 6 months. I remember the day the Inspector arrested third accused about 2 months ago. But the Inspector and Sub-Inspector were not dressed as they are now. I saw the motor later. About 7-30 or 8 P. M., as I stepped out of my house on the same night of the arrest I saw the 3rd accused with three coolies, one of them the first accused, coming out of the third accused's house. All three coolies had baskets on their heads, each basket containing a bag of this colour tied like this (Exhibits I to III). They went towards Temple Street Hospital. I told this Inspector about that at about 12 P. M. At that time I saw two motor cars. This was after I had returned from the Dewali Mela and was purchasing cigarettes from a Panwala. I then saw two motor cars and the accused in custody and I enquired what was the matter. I was told opium had been seized at Ghusray. I asked, was it in gunny bags. The Inspector asked how I knew. Then I made the statement above-mentioned to him." The cross-examination is as follows:—"I get commission for sales from my employer Keramat. I don't keep accounts. I live with my uncle. The motor was to the east of the Lane." The cross-examination commenced on the 7th of February and was continued on the 8th—"All coolies do not have baskets. I had no talk ever with these accused. The Mela lasted three days. I was going off and on all three days." There were four sentences taken down on the first day of the cross-examination and four sentences on the second day of the cross-examination—that is the whole of the record of the cross-examination.

I think I have stated all the facts upon which the prosecution relies. I should also refer to the fact that when the Excise Officers went to Gumgar Lane on this night, one of the important points was that the third accused came out without any summons as if he were expecting the return of the first and the second accused and that he had in his hand notes which amounted to Rs. 200; and addressing the first and the second accused he immediately said Paunhchaya. The third accused was arrested and he was subsequently charged with the offence to which I have referred. The three accused were tried jointly for the alleged offence before the learned Magistrate.

The 1st accused was convicted, the second was acquitted the third accused was convicted and he alone has appealed to this Court.

The 1st accused was sentenced to 6 months' rigorous imprisonment and the appellant was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Now, there have been several points raised in this case on behalf of the appellant, with which I must deal—some of which in my judgment are not good ones, and some of which are good.

The learned Magistrate has relied to a large extent upon the statements made by the first and the second accused as being matters which he was entitled to take into consideration as against the third accused, the appellant in this case. He has also relied upon the evidence of the 4th prosecution witness, M. Ebrahim.

The first important ground upon which the learned Counsel for the appellant has relied is that the learned Magistrate was wrong in taking into consideration the statements of the first two accused against the appellant. I propose to deal with that question first.

One of the points Mr. Das; the learned Counsel for the appellant, urged was that, assuming that these two statements of the first and the second accused were confessions, they were not admissible in evidence, inasmuch as they were made to people who were in reality Police Officers, although not called Police Officers; and that consequently under the provisions of section 25 of the Evidence Act, these statements ought not to have been admitted. In my judgment that is not a good point. I do not think it is possible that the Excise Officers in this case could be said to be Police Officers and that the statements made by the first and the second accused were not admissible by reason of the fact that they were made to Police Officers.

Another point raised by the learned Counsel was that inasmuch as the first and the second accused had at the trial made statements which were quite inconsistent with those which they were alleged to have made to the Excise Officer, the statements in question should not be admitted under section 30 of the Evidence Act. The language of section 30 which is material to this point is—"the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession." As I understand, the learned Counsel's point was that in order that the confession should be admissible it must be a confession in which the maker of it persists upto and at the time of the trial, and that if he had made a confession before the case came up for trial and withdrew it and did not continue to make the confession at the time of the trial then it would not be admissible. I do not think that point is a good one. I think the meaning of the section is clear, the wording is that "when more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence, and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against the person who makes such confession." I think the use of the word "makes" in the present tense there does not mean anything more than this—that it may be taken into consideration as against such other person as well as against the maker of such confession. I think that is the common sense view of the construction of the section and the ground upon which the learned Counsel relied was not a good one.

Now, I come to a more substantial ground. The learned Counsel argued that these statements made by the first and the second accused were not confessions at all. For the purpose of seeing whether they are confessions or not, it is essential, first of all, to consider the nature of the offence with which the accused had been charged or were likely to be charged. The second matter is that the whole of the statements must be read for the purpose of seeing whether in the opinion of the Court they are confessions or not—whatever I say in this case is confined to the particular statements which were made in this case, and having regard to the facts of this case; and, it is not necessary for me to say more than this, that having read these statements more than once and considered the points put forward by the learned Advocate-General and the learned Counsel for the appellant, my learned brother and I are agreed that these statements are not confessions. Speaking for myself, I think they are consistent with an attempt on the part of the makers of the statements to exculpate themselves from the charge which had been or which was likely to be made against them, and, consequently I think that they ought not to have been taken into consideration against the appellant.

Then with regard to the other matter upon which the learned Magistrate relied, namely, the evidence of M. Ebrahim, my learned brother and I have come to the conclusion that it would not be safe for us to rely upon the evidence of this man. Judging as far as we are able from the record which is before us, it is quite clear that the learned Magistrate understood his evidence to be to this effect that at 7-30 or 8 in the evening on the date of the occurrence, this witness was going out of a house which was opposite to No. 2, Gumgar Lane, and as he came out he saw the appellant with three coolies carrying bags in baskets on their heads and that he was in a good position to see exactly what was taking place. In order to make my meaning clear, I will read a few sentences from the learned Magistrate's judgment. "Mohammed Ebrahim, a Hide Broker, states that he lived at 1, Gumgar Lane"—(which is opposite to No. 2, Gumgar Lane) "and knew the third accused for 5 or 6 months, and that on the day of his arrest about 7-30 or 8 P. M. he saw the third accused come out of his house with the first accused and two coolies; each of the three latter was carrying a basket in which was a sack like those containing the opium." Then he described how the party went towards Temple Street. Then he said: "M. Ebrahim in his evidence stated he lived at 1, Gumgar Lane. The defence have called a woman named Caldem, who says she lives there and he does not. Fakiruddin the landlord supports her. He, however, stated to me that it was a large house so that it was quite possible that other people live there without his being aware of it."

Now, the first point to which I wish to draw attention is this:—The Magistrate says that M. Ebrahim stated that he lived at No. 1, Gumgar Lane. I do not find in his evidence anything to justify that conclusion. What he did say was "my maternal uncle lives at 1, Gumgar Lane;" and, the evidence of the first prosecution witness, the Inspector, was that M. Ebrahim gave his address as 7, Chandney Chaw, which is a street to the north of Gumgar Lane. It may be that the witness intended that the Magistrate should believe that he lived at 1, Gumgar Lane, and it is obvious to my mind that the Magistrate was under the impression that this is what he had stated—I quite appreciate what the learned Advocate-General said about the maternal uncle and the paternal uncle:—but even then I do not think that that justifies the conclusion that the learned Magistrate has come to, namely, that this witness lived at 1, Gumgar Lane. I think that is a serious matter when we are considering the evidence of this witness. The record shows that he did not live at 1, Gumgar Lane, but that he lived at 7, Chandney Chawk. If it be true that he was in fact coming out of the house where he lived, viz., 7, Chandney Chawk and that he was endeavouring to lead the Court to believe that he then could see what the third accused was doing opposite to the 2, Gumgar Lane, then I think that we should come to the conclusion that the witness should not be relied on.

In those circumstances, having regard to the fact that we are of opinion that the statements made by the 1st and 2nd accused to the Excise Officers ought not to have been taken into consideration against the appellant and having regard to the fact that we think that the evidence of the 4th prosecution witness, M. Ebrahim, ought not to be relied on, and having regard to the state of the evidence on the record, the question arises, ought this conviction to stand.

There are certain material facts still left. They are the facts—assuming them to be proved by the prosecution—that the first and the second accused were found in possession of opium, that they went with the Excise Officers to No. 2, Gumgar Lane, that the third accused came out without any knocking or summons, that he had Rs. 200 in his hand, and that addressing the first and the second accused he immediately said, "Paunhchay". Although these facts may give rise to grave suspicion in our minds as to whether the third accused was innocent of the offence charged against him, there is a doubt arising in our mind for this reason, that it may be that the third accused was never in possession of the opium, and it may be that he never took any part in the transport, and it may be that he was only a person who was to pay the remuneration which had been agreed upon in respect of the transport of the opium. If that view is a possible view, and if that view is consistent with the evidence which remains in this case after we have eliminated the statements of the first and second accused and the evidence given by the fourth prosecution witness, then I think it is right for the Court to say that the appellant ought to get the benefit of the doubt and this conviction ought to be quashed.

I desire to make one or two observations about the method of procedure followed in this case.

It seems obvious to us that there have been irregularities in the procedure in this case. Section 312 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides as follows: "For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may, at any stage of any enquiry or trial, without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary and shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence." It does not appear that the procedure which is there laid down was carried out in this case; I quite agree with what the learned Advocate General said that inasmuch as the first and second accused put in written statements, with regard to these accused there would not be so much in that point. So also with regard to the third accused, it may be that in this case he may not have been prejudiced by this procedure not having been carried out. But to my mind that is no excuse for not carrying out the plain provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Another matter to which I wish to refer is that my learned brother and I think that the record of the evidence in this case is not satisfactory and the Court has been placed in a position of difficulty by reason of that fact. Section 362 of the Code of Criminal Procedure Code, which is applicable to this case, provides that: "In every case in which a Presidency Magistrate imposes a fine exceeding two hundred rupees, or imprisonment for a term exceeding six months, he shall either take down the evidence of the witnesses with his own hand, or cause it to be taken down in writing from his dictation in open Court. All evidence so taken down shall be signed by the Magistrate and shall form part of the record." With regard to the evidence of M. Ebrahim, the learned Counsel for the appellant stated that the record of the cross-examination was unsatisfactory and incomplete. He alleged that the third accused was defended by a learned Pleader of position, and that he had a note of the cross-examination by that learned Pleader; and, we adopted the somewhat unusual course of looking at the note of the learned Pleader's cross-examination which was taken, as I understand, by his junior. For the purpose of seeing, whether it was substantially accurate—we compared the note of the evidence-in-chief with that on the record and, we found that there was substantially no difference between the evidence-in-chief as recorded by the Magistrate and the evidence-in-chief as taken down by the learned Pleader. But when we came to look at the cross-examination we found there was a serious difference. I have already pointed out that the only note the Magistrate had of the cross-examination was in our opinion unsatisfactory—it consisted of 8 sentences of the cross-examination which took place on two days, and the learned Pleader's note of it occupied two pages. Several material facts were referred to in the learned Pleader's note of the cross-examination, of which there is no sign in the learned Magistrate's note.

Now, I wish to draw attention to the fact that it is the duty of the Magistrate in a case which comes within section 362 to take a note of all the material facts, whether they appear in the course of the examination-in-chief or in the course of the cross-examination; and, in this case it was especially necessary, because this was the only independent witness, the other witnesses being Excise Officers (I say nothing whatever against them, but they were the people who were engaged in the arrest of this man), and it was also especially necessary in such a case as this where there was an appeal upon facts; and it is impossible for the Court to deal with these cases, unless the learned Magistrate in the first instance takes a full and proper note of all the material facts. I wish to say that we have not formed an opinion about the inadequacy of this note solely from the fact that we looked at the learned Pleader's note and compared it with the record of the evidence by the Magistrate. We looked at the Pleader's note, because we thought that the record which was before us, in itself bore sufficient evidence that the record was not satisfactory. But for that we should not have looked at the learned Pleader's note. When we thought, judging from the record itself, that it was not satisfactory then we looked at the learned Pleader's note, and our impression was confirmed by that note.

The result is that this appeal should be allowed, the conviction of, and the sentence passed on, the appellant set aside, and if in custody, he should be discharged or if on bail, his bail-bond should be discharged.

BACHCROFT, J.—It is not necessary for me to say much, as I agree substantially with the remarks made by the learned Chief Justice.

With reference to witness No. 4, I need only say that it seems to me to be clear that he desired to give the Court the impression that he lived at 1, Gumgar Lane. He gave the Magistrate that impression; and, it is also clear to my mind that he gave the defence that impression, who took steps to call a witness to prove that he did not live at that house, whose evidence would not have been relevant for any other purpose.

Then, one remark I should like to make with reference to the procedure adopted in connection with accused No. 2, who was acquitted. The Magistrate charged him on the 15th of February. Between that date and the completion of the trial I can see nothing in the evidence which would tend in any way to minimise the effect of the evidence as against that accused. The only thing on the record, namely, the accused's own written statement, would rather go against him, as that is in some respects obviously false. That being so, and the Magistrate considering the evidence not sufficient at the end of the trial to convict this person, he ought not in my opinion to have charged him with this offence. If the evidence was not sufficient at the end of the trial, it was equally insufficient on the 15th of February. The course which the Magistrate ought to have taken was to discharge the accused and to examine him as a witness in the case.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 423 (1), (4), 522—Order restoring property to person entitled thereto, nature of—Appellate Court, whether can pass order.

An order under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the restoration of immoveable property to the person entitled thereto, cannot be regarded as a consequential or incidental order within the purview of section 423 (1), clause (4) of the Code.

An Appellate Court is not competent to make an order under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the restoration of immoveable property to the person entitled thereto, where the trial Court has for some reason or other refrained from taking action under the aforesaid section.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for consideration is whether the Appellate Court was competent to make an order under section 522, Criminal Procedure Code, directing the restoration of the possession of immoveable property to the person entitled thereto, when the trial Court had for some reason or other refrained from taking action under the aforesaid section. Now, a Division Bench judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Bhagbat Shaha v. Siddique Ostagar (1) answers that question in the negative, and no authority has been cited on the other side which lays down that an Appellate Court can pass an order of that character. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court hold that such an order cannot be regarded as a consequential or incidental order within the purview of section 423 (1), clause (4), Criminal Procedure Code; and this view is, in their opinion, supported by the fact that the Legislature considered it necessary to enact a special section in order to confer the necessary authority upon a Criminal Court so that it may exercise the power of restoring possession.

The matter is not entirely free from doubt, but I am not prepared to dissent from the view taken by the Calcutta Court. The judgment in Ujir Sheikh v. Syed Ali Sheikh (2), relied upon by Mr. Ganpat Rai, lays down that an Appellate Court can set aside an order made by the Court of first instance under section 522; but this judgment has obviously no bearing upon the question before me. The same remarks apply to the judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Manki v. Bhagwanti (3).

Accordingly I accept the application for revision so far as to quash the order of the District Magistrate directing the restoration of the possession of the property. In all other matters the application for revision is rejected.

behaviour. The fact that the persons proceeded against are already registered under the Criminal Tribes Act, may be a factor and an important factor which the Magistrate should take into consideration before he makes any order against them under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. [p. 511, col. 2; p. 512, col. 1.]

The High Court does not, as a rule, interfere in any pending proceeding unless there is some strong ground for intervening. [p. 512, col. 1.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmohan Nath Mukherjee (with him Babu Panna Lal Chatterjee), for the Petitioners.—The fact that these persons have been registered under the Criminal Tribes Act is sufficient to quash proceedings taken against them under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The fact that such persons have been registered shows that they have given security for good behaviour in future, and bonds of the worst possible kind have been taken from them and their movements are being watched. If proceedings under section 110 are taken against them, they would not be able to furnish security under that section.

[RICHARDSON, J.—Do you mean to say that proceedings under section 110 are illegal?]

Yes, my Lord, I say so. The proceedings are not only illegal and without jurisdiction but are also inexpedient.

Act III of 1911 has been enacted to prevent repetition of crimes and not for harassing men.

[RICHARDSON, J.—But if the Code distinctly says that certain persons are to furnish security and if they cannot furnish security they are to be sent to jail?]

In Rajendra Narayan Singh v. Emperor (1) it is laid down that if it is made to appear to your Lordships that proceedings are merely to harass the men, then your Lordships would interfere in those cases. There was a difference in that case between Mr. Justice Chowdhury and Mr. Justice Imam. In this case, what further object would be gained by binding down such people and asking security from them knowing fully well that all the members of their family are registered under the Criminal Tribes Act and the meaning of such registration is to prevent them from committing dacoity and so forth? It was never intended by section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, that when certain restrictions have been placed upon a certain person he should be bound down and proceedings under section 110 should be drawn up against him. I refer your Lordships to section 24 of the Act.

[RICHARDSON, J.—Section 3 of the Criminal Tribes Act (III of 1911) refers to the whole gang.]

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The petitioners are persons against whom proceedings have been taken under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. A Rule was issued upon the District Magistrate to show cause why those proceedings should not be quashed on the grounds, firstly, that in consideration of certain proceedings under the Criminal Tribes Act and of the result of the inquiries made into certain cases of alleged dacoity, there was no material disclosed in the Police report on which the proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, could be based and, secondly, that in view of the sentences of imprisonment which the petitioners Nos. 1, 11, 12, 14 and 15 are undergoing under the provisions of the Criminal Tribes Act the proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, against them cannot stand.

In his argument before us to-day the learned Pleader for the petitioners has confined himself to those petitioners who have been registered under section 4 and the following sections of the Criminal Tribes Act. Moreover, he has confined himself to contending that those petitioners cannot or ought not, having been so registered, to be proceeded against under section 110. The learned Pleader concedes that there is no express provision in the Criminal Tribes Act or in any other Act which has the effect of making it illegal for the Magistrate having jurisdiction to proceed under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, to so proceed against a person who has been registered under the Criminal Tribes Act. He has argued, however, that once a man has been registered under the Criminal Tribes Act the authorities have so much control over his movements and his conduct that it is entirely superfluous to take proceedings against him under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. Now, in every case there is a question of discretion whether the person proceeded against under section 110 should or should not be bound down to be of good behaviour under that section. The fact that the persons proceeded against are already registered under the Criminal Tribes Act may be a factor, and an important factor, which the Magistrate should take into consideration before he makes any order against them under section 110. But, in my opinion, we should be going beyond our duty as Judges. We should be elevating ourselves into a Legislature if we were to lay it down as a fixed, and immutable rule—a rule from which there can be no departure under any circumstances or whatever the circumstances of a particular case may be—that a man who has once been registered under the Criminal Tribes Act cannot be proceeded against under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. The proceedings which we are asked to quash are proceedings pending before the Court below. This Court has, as a rule, refrained from interfering with any pending proceeding unless there was some strong ground for intervening. The facts of the present case have not been gone into in the Court below and evidence has not been taken; when evidence is taken other matters may come to light which are not now before us. In the circumstances, in my opinion, it would not be right for us to interfere at the present stage. The Magistrate will, no doubt, consider the facts of the case of each of the petitioners before passing any order against him under section 110. At this moment, it is not for us to say that he will not exercise his discretion properly and reasonably. In my opinion, therefore, this Rule should, in the present stage of the proceedings, be discharged.

HODA, J.—It seems to me that there are essential differences between persons against whom action is contemplated by the Criminal Tribes Act and those who come within the purview of section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The former Act contemplates joint action against a group of persons forming a tribe, gang or class, whereas the latter contemplates action against individuals. The group of persons contemplated by the Criminal Tribes Act are persons addicted to the systematic commission of non-bailable offences generally, whereas the individuals against whom action under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code may be taken are persons who habitually commit the particular offences mentioned in the section and persons who are so desperate and dangerous as to render their being at large without security hazardous to the community.

It will thus appear that the mere fact that a group of persons have been registered under the Criminal Tribes Act would not necessarily render the individual members of it liable to be proceeded against under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code and vice versa. It cannot, therefore, be said that, as a matter of law, action under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, cannot be taken against a person registered under the Criminal Tribes Act, and I agree in holding that the present proceedings under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code against those who have already been registered, as belonging to a criminal tribe, are not illegal. I have, however, been very much impressed by the arguments put forward before us regarding the expediency of taking such a proceeding. It seems to me that as soon as a man is brought under the Criminal Tribes Act, the control obtained over his movements under that Act should ordinarily be sufficient to attain the objects aimed at by proceedings under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, and it should not be necessary to proceed further against such a person under that section. One objection to the adoption of such proceedings is this. Having been declared a member of a criminal tribe, it is unlikely that any one would stand surety for such a person and the inevitable consequence would be imprisonment for failure to furnish security. Section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, I need hardly say is not meant to be a penal provision but is a preventive measure. I would have been prepared as a matter of expediency to quash these proceedings, but the evidence has not been gone into and we are not aware of any special circumstances that may exist for taking these proceedings. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother that at the present stage it would be inexpedient for this Court to interfere with the order complained of.

Rule discharged.

Pre-emption suit—Price entered in sale-deed, fictitious —Burden of proof.

Where a pre-emptor pleads that the price entered in the sale-deed is fictitious and is able to put forward a prima facie case to that effect, the burden of proving that that price represents the real price of the property is thrown on the vendee. [p. 513, col. 1.]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 15th December 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, Utraula (Gonda), dated the 15th December 1916.

Mr. Basdeo Lal, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Mr. Gokaran Nath Misra and Mr. Harkaran Nath Misra, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for pre-emption. The appellants here are the purchasers. The document of sale was executed on the 30th of January 1915 and purports to convey to the vendees a 6 pies share in a village called Lohrauli. According to the terms of the deed the consideration for this sale was a sum of Rs. 1,400 which was made up of four items. The plaintiffs came into Court alleging their right to pre-empt and further pleading that the price entered in the document was fictitious. It was the plaintiffs' case that the property transferred by this deed was not worth anything like the sum of Rs. 1,400. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that the price stated in the deed is fictitious, and with that finding of fact I agree. It is quite clear that the plaintiffs-pre-emptors were able to put forward a prima facie case which threw upon the other side the burden of proving that the money entered in the deed represented the real price of the property. It is argued that the decision of the Courts below ought to be revised here on account of their misunderstanding of the effect of certain documents to which I will now refer.

In this sale-deed it was stated that out of the fourteen hundred rupees an item of Rs. 675 5-5 was due to the purchasers on a mortgage held by them, dated the 5th of July 1911. It is recited that this mortgage deed was with possession and the sum just mentioned was stated to be due in respect of the balance of principal and interest. The Courts below have found that this item is entirely fictitious. It is a most extraordinary circumstance that when the burden of proof was thus shifted to the purchasers they failed to put into Court either the original document of mortgage, dated the 5th of July 1911, or a certified copy of it. The learned Advocate who appears here for the appellants was under the impression that a certified copy of this mortgage was on the record, but I find that this is not so. The result, therefore, is that we really know nothing about this mortgage of the 5th July 1911. Probably there was such a document, inasmuch as we find a reference in the sale deed to the pages of the register in the Sub-Registrar's Office on which the document was copied at the time of registration, but the fact remains that neither the document itself nor any copy of it was before the Court so as to enable it to form any opinion as to whether any money was or could be due on account of principal or interest or both.

The defendants could have summoned the original document from the vendors, for the story is that this document was returned to them, and in default of its being produced they could have given secondary evidence. So far, therefore, as we are concerned with this item the judgment of the Court below appears to me to be quite correct. I can see no reason for disturbing it. The next items to be referred to are one item of Rs. 400 and one item of Rs. 125-5-4. It is stated in the sale-deed that these two sums are owing to two persons Badri and Ram Sunder under mortgages with possession executed in their favour and the arrangement come to between the vendors and the purchasers was that these two mortgages were to be discharged. One of these mortgagees Badri appeared in Court and produced a receipt for the full amount of these sums, that is, Rs. 528-5-4. He further deposes that the mortgage-deeds had been returned to the purchasers after the money was received. He also produced a receipt which the Courts below have rejected on the ground that it was not registered.

It has been argued here that the statement of Badri ought to be accepted as sufficient proof that the money was paid to him, but it seems to me to be clear that if the pre-emptor is to be entitled to stand in the shoes of the purchasers, he is entitled to have the mortgages discharged, and the fact that they had been discharged could only be proved by proper evidence. The production of an unregistered receipt does not, I think, amount to legal proof that the mortgages in favour of Badri and Ram Sunder had been lawfully discharged, and again there is only the statement of one of the mortgagees, namely, Badri, to the effect that the money had been received. Here again the appellants seem to have been singularly negligent in the matter of prosecuting their case. Badri deposed that these mortgages had been returned to the purchasers. Why they were not produced before the Court is not explained. If the purchasers had produced the original mortgage deeds, then no doubt it might have been held in their favour that these two sums had been paid and the mortgages had been redeemed.

But if parties do not choose to produce the best evidence, in their favour, they cannot complain if the decision of the Court is given against them. In the absence of this evidence, which it was incumbent upon these defendants-appellants to produce, it seems to me that the judgment of the Court below is correct. I am satisfied, therefore, that there is no ground upon which I can interfere with the decision of the Court below. The price was fictitiously entered. The Courts have arrived at what they held to be the genuine price of the property and they have directed the redemption of the two mortgages in favour of Badri and Ram Sunder, the balance of the pre-emption money being handed over to the purchasers. These are the only grounds which I have been called upon to consider. I decide them all against the appellants and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92—Religious Endowments Act (XX of 1863), s. 14, scope of—Suit to recover trust property from persons claiming as trustees, maintainability of.

Plaintiff, who claimed to be the representative of the original donor of a Hindu temple and to be interested in the property dedicated to the temple and also claimed to be the Muktesar appointed by the Temple Committee in place of the defendants, sued the latter for (a) possession of what should be found to be the trust property on enquiry by the Court; (b) an account of the trust property, both capital and income, come to the hands of the defendants; (c) an account of all expenses properly incurred by the defendants; and (d) damages for breach of trust. The defendants claimed to be trustees entitled to hold the property from generation to generation subject to the due fulfilment of the trust:

Held, that the suit, being one practically for the removal of the defendants from their position as trustees, for the restoration of the trust property to the plaintiff as the Muktesar appointed by the Temple Committee, for taking accounts and for damages for breach of trust, was governed by section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and could only be brought in conformity with the provisions of that section. [p. 516, col. 1; p. 519, col. 1.]

Per Marten, J.—There is much which is in common between section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 14 of the Religious Endowments Act, but the former is substantially the wider section and provides inter alia for settling a scheme which is a jurisdiction of a very wide and beneficial nature. A plaintiff may proceed for appropriate relief under either section, and the opening words of section 92 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code mean only that if he elects to proceed under the Religious Endowments Act he is not to be prevented from so doing by section 92. [p. 518, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Karwar, in Appeal No. 192 of 1913, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Kumta, in Civil Suit No. 238 of 1911.

Messrs. G. P. Murdeshwar and Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. S. Mulgaokar and A. A. Pais, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 7.

JUDGMENT.

SHAH, J.—The question of law that arises in this second appeal is whether the plaint.

HANSRAJ LADDASHET V. ANANT PADMANABH BHATT.

iff's suit is barred by the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The plaintiff filed his suit in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Kumta in the District of Kanara. The suit relates to a public Hindu temple known as the Gopal Krishna Temple of Gore. The plaintiff claims to be the representative of the original donor, Damodar Sheth, who purchased certain lands from one Ramkrishnabhatta and endowed the temple therewith, and to be interested in the property dedicated to the temple. He also claims to be a Muktesar appointed by the Temple Committee duly constituted for the Kumta Taluka under the Religious Endowments Act, XX of 1863, read with Bombay Act VII of 1865. The defendants Nos. 1 to 7 are the representatives of Ramkrishnabhatta, the original owner of the lands, and defendants Nos. 8 and 9 are the representatives of another family, who with the defendants Nos. 1 to 7 claimed to be the hereditary Archakas of the temple.

The plaintiff has set forth briefly the history of the endowment in the plaint and alleged that Ramkrishnabhatta accepted the endowment for the temple as a trustee and undertook to perform the services in the temple as an Archaka, that he was appointed a Muktesar by the Temple Committee, that subsequently defendants Nos. 1, 8 and 9 were appointed Muktesars, that they were ultimately dismissed from their office as Muktesars, and that he himself was appointed a Muktesar in November 1910. He has further alleged in the plaint as follows:—

"In addition to the lands which have been from times immemorial in the possession of all the defendants as worshippers for purposes of nandadeep, worship and food offerings, although defendants Nos. 1 to 9 are liable to deliver over possession of the tastik due to the God, and the possession of the moveable and immoveable properties charitably given by the above-mentioned and other persons and although they are liable to make good the loss caused by them to the God and to pay the value of the articles appertaining to the buildings of the God's right and appropriated by them for their own use and to deliver the balance of the principal and interest after deducting from the income of the God the actual expenses incurred together with an account (in respect of the same), they did not do so although demand for them was made ever since 1910."

He prayed for

(a) possession of all the lands that may on inquiry be found to belong to the God,

(b) mesne profits,

(c) accounts, and balance that may be found due after deducting the expenses in respect of the profits of the land, the income in respect of karnika and tastik, etc., due to the God, and the value of the property appropriated by the defendants out of the God's property, since their appointments as Muktesars to the date of the suit,

(d) Rs. 1,000 as damages for the wrongful acts of defendants Nos. 1 to 9, and

(e) for the moveable property of the God in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 9.

Defendant No. 10 was stated to have been appointed a co-Muktesar with him but not to have been given the usual Sanad of his appointment and was joined as a defendant formally. This fact need not be noticed further as it does not touch the point which we have to consider.

Apart from the defence on the merits which it is not necessary to notice for our present purpose, it was contended by defendant No. 1 that the effect of the documents referred to in the plaint was that the property was to continue in his family from generation to generation and that his family was to receive the profits, and to perform the daily and occasional viniyogas and ear festival from generation to generation. He pleaded that he did not hold the lands as a Muktesar of the temple and that he had not neglected to perform the services, and that the suit was not maintainable in virtue of the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the trial Court several issues were raised including the issues as to section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure and section 14 of the Religious Endowments Act. The trial Court was of opinion that the claim as to damages was covered by section 92 of the Code or section 14 of Act XX of 1863, and was quite distinct from the other claims.

HANSRAJ LADDASHET V. ANANT PADMANABH BHATT.

As to the rest of the suit, the trial Court held that it was not a suit contemplated by either of the two sections and that it was maintainable. On the merits it held that the defendant No. 1 had committed a breach of the trust. It passed a decree allowing the defendants to continue as trustees and to remain in possession of the property on certain terms.

Both parties were dissatisfied with this decree and preferred cross-appeals to the District Court of Kanara. The preliminary question as to the jurisdiction was raised before that Court, which held that the suit was barred by section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Accordingly the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

In the appeal before us the learned Pleader for the plaintiff has questioned the correctness of this view, mainly on the ground that the suit is to recover possession of the trust property from persons, who are in the position of strangers, after they are properly dismissed by the Temple Committee from their office as Muktesars.

From the allegations in the plaint and the nature of the reliefs claimed it is clear that the suit is one contemplated by section 92, Civil Procedure Code. It is common ground that the trust was created for public purposes of a religious nature. The plaintiff also alleges a breach of trust. The relief as to account is clearly covered by clause (d) of section 92, sub-section (1). The relief as to possession also involves an inquiry as to what are trust properties. Taking the plaint as a whole it seems to me that it is a suit for the removal of the defendants from their position as trustees, for the restoration of the trust property to the plaintiff as the Muktesar appointed by the Temple Committee, for taking accounts, and for damages for their wrongful acts as trustees. Such a suit would be clearly within the scope of section 92 of the Code. The character of the suit is not changed either by omitting the prayer as to damages as distinct from other prayers, as suggested by the trial Court, or by omitting the prayer for accounts and for the balance that may be found due, as suggested by Mr. Murdeshwar for the appellant here. The plaint must be taken as a whole for the purpose of determining the question of jurisdiction and whether we look to the allegations in the plaint or to the reliefs claimed, it is clear that the suit is one contemplated by section 92 of the Code.

This is not a suit against strangers as contended by Mr. Murdeshwar. It is not necessary to refer to the decisions cited by him. The question is whether in the present suit the defendants are in the position of strangers. In my opinion they are not. They are really trustees under the documents referred to in the plaint, and they claim to be trustees entitled to hold the lands from generation to generation subject to the due fulfilment of the trust. This position they came to occupy quite independently of their being Muktesars appointed by the Temple Committee and they are not strangers claiming to hold the lands adversely to the trust, though they may not agree as to their obligations under the trust.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that in virtue of their having accepted the office of Muktesars they ceased to be trustees and that having been properly dismissed from that office they were in the position of strangers. It is not alleged in this case that they accepted the trust and acquired the right to hold the property from generation to generation subject to the trust as Muktesars. No authority is cited in support of the view that a Muktesar cannot be a hereditary trustee independently of his Muktesarship and I do not see anything either in the scheme of the Religious Endowments Act or in its provisions which lend support to such a position.

The suit being of a character contemplated by section 92 it cannot be entertained by the Second Class Subordinate Judge. Sub-section (2) of section 92 clearly provides that save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section. Admittedly the present suit is not brought in conformity with the provisions of sub-section (1) and cannot, therefore, be entertained.

It is also clear that the present suit is not filed as provided by the Religious Endowments Act. It is not filed in the District Court as provided by that Act, and the leave required by section 18 of the Act is not obtained. It is not necessary to express any opinion as to whether the plaintiff can file a suit under the Religious Endowments Act as a person interested in the temple in the performance of the worship or service thereof and in the trust relating thereto after obtaining the leave of the District Court under section 18 and whether under the circumstances the reliefs that he can get in a suit under section 14 of the Act will be sufficient to meet the requirements of the trust. It is clear, however, that any suit filed in accordance with the provisions of the Religious Endowments Act will not be open to the objection based on the provisions of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It remains to notice the argument urged on behalf of the plaintiff that a suit filed by a properly appointed Muktesar to recover the property which is held by the ex-Muktesars who have been properly dismissed from their office by the Temple Committee, does not fall under section 14 of the Act. The decision in Virasami Nayudu v. Subba Rau (1) is relied upon in support of the argument. This argument does not help the plaintiff in this suit, as it is a suit not merely by a Muktesar but by a person who also claims to be interested in the temple and its worship or service. The defendants, as I have pointed out, are not merely ex-Muktesars but also hereditary trustees. The Temple Committee have no jurisdiction to remove such trustees. It is not alleged that the defendants were trustees whose nomination was vested in or might be exercised by or would be subject to the confirmation of the Government or any public officer as provided by section 3 of the Religious Endowments Act. The defendants would be trustees contemplated by section 4 of the Act. Under the circumstances it would not be easy to hold that section 14 would not apply to a suit like the present suit, if it were filed in the proper Court with the necessary leave. But on the facts of this case it is not necessary to pursue the point any further.

(1) 6 M. 54; 6 Ind. Jur. 629; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S. 316,

The result, therefore, is that the appellant's contention must be disallowed and that the present suit must be held to be not maintainable in virtue of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is to be regretted that the present suit, which was filed in September 1911, has failed on a preliminary point and that the allegations as to the breach of trust and the misuse of the trust property cannot be dealt with on their merits.

Having regard to all the circumstances I think that each party should bear his own costs throughout.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the decree of the lower Court except as to costs. Each party to bear his own costs throughout.

I agree with my learned brother that copies of the judgments and of the printed paper-book in this second appeal should be sent to the Advocate General in order that he may take such action as he thinks proper with reference to this trust. The Registrar may also furnish copies of such documents in the case as he may require before returning the record to the lower Appellate Court.

MARTIN, J.—The question before us is whether the lower Appellate Court was right in dismissing this suit on the preliminary point that it was not maintainable without the written consent of the Advocate-General under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It is clear that we have here a trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature within the meaning of section 92. It is also clear that the Hindu temple in question and its endowments which are all situate in North Kanara, are within the operation of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, but that the suit is not maintainable under section 14 of that Act as the requisite preliminary leave of the Court under section 18 has not been obtained. Consequently I think that in section 92 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code the opening words: "Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act" may in effect be disregarded in the present case. I apply those words here as meaning: "Save in so far, if at all, as the plaintiff may institute his suit in accordance with the provisions of the Religious Endowments

HANSRAJ LADDASHEE v. ANANT PADMANABH BHATT.

Act" and not as meaning that all suits within the operation of the Religious Endowments Act shall be brought as provided by that Act and that Act alone. There is much which is in common between the two sections, but section 92 is substantially the wider and provides inter alia for settling a scheme, which is a jurisdiction of a very wide and beneficial nature. I think, therefore, that a plaintiff may proceed for appropriate relief under either Act, and that the opening words in section 92 (2) only mean that if he elects to proceed under the Religious Endowments Act, he is not to be prevented from so doing by section 92.

Turning to the plaint in the present suit, it is hardly an artistic specimen of pleading and it derives no assistance from an indifferent English translation. But I think we can see what the parties were aiming at, and we get assistance in this respect from the course the case took at the trial. As I read the plaint, it in effect charges defendant No. 1 and others with breach of trust, and claims—

(1) an enquiry as to what the trust property now consists of;

(2) possession of what should be found to be the trust property as the result of that enquiry;

(3) an account of the trust property, both capital and income, come to the hands of defendants Nos. 1, 8, and 9 or any of them from 1889 (when the lands were released by the Collector on defendant No. 1 attaining his majority, see Exhibit 67) to date;

(4) an account of all expenses properly incurred by defendants Nos. 1, 8 and 9;

(5) damages for breach of trust.

The plaintiff sued as one of two co-Muktesars appointed by the Temple Committee in the place of defendants Nos. 1, 8 and 9, who had been dismissed "on account of their wrongful acts." The other co-Muktesar was alleged in paragraph 4 to be "under the constraining influence of the other defendants" and was accordingly added as defendant No. 10. The plaintiff also sued as heir of the original donor Damodar Shet (see plaint paragraph 2 and reply Exhibit 42, paragraph 9). Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 8 and 9 put in written statements and defendants Nos. 1 and 2, if not the others, pleaded section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code in Bar. In his reply, Exhibit 42 (paragraphs 9 and 10), the plaintiff pleaded in effect that the suit was by a trustee against servants and dismissed trustees and that no consent under section 92 was necessary. At the trial only defendants Nos. 8 and 9 appeared, but issues Nos. 2 and 4 raised section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 14 of the Religious Endowments Act respectively.

At the trial the trust was found by the learned trial Judge to be in a lamentable state. In paragraph 31 of his judgment the learned Judge stated as follows: "There is, in my opinion, abundant evidence to prove that defendant No. 1 has been guilty of serious neglect of duty and breach of trust, that amounts to sacrilege at least from a Hindu point of view towards the deity for whose vinayogas thousands of rupees had been sacrificed by Damodar Shet and his family and that defendant No. 1 was rightly dismissed from his trusteeship." The dismissal thus referred to was a sequel to a report by the Temple Committee, Exhibit 149, which, after finding that defendant No. 1 had appropriated temple lands to his own use and had removed stones and timber of the temple to build a house for himself elsewhere and that none of the defendants Nos. 1, 8 and 9 had kept any trust accounts, concluded as follows:—"It is apparent from this that Anant Padmanabh (defendant No. 1) has caused a great loss to the God for his self benefit. The other two Muktesars, as they belong to Anant Padmanabh's family, did not prevent him from doing that. From all this the Committee thinks that all the three are not fit to be the Muktesars of the temple."

The result, however, which the learned trial Judge arrived at was hardly calculated to remedy these gross breaches of trust or to put the trust on a proper footing. In paragraph 37 he found himself constrained by section 92 to dismiss the claim for damages or compensation as being outside his jurisdiction in the absence of the requisite consent of the Advocate-General. He, however, thought he had jurisdiction to deal with the rest of the case and eventually arrived at a conclusion which, I think, he had no power to do unless he was settling a scheme or administering the trust.

HANSRAJ LADDASHET v. ANANT PADMANABH BHATT.

The conclusion was in effect this. On defendants Nos. 1 and 2 undertaking to perform their religious duties in future, they were to remain trustees of the temple endowments but with a liability to be dismissed by the Temple Committee for future breach of duty. If, however, this undertaking was not given within six months, plaintiff could apply for possession and was then to be at liberty to appoint new trustees preferably from among the family of defendants Nos. 1 to 7.

The result of this decision was in effect to leave defendant No. 1 in possession of much of the alleged plunder and to restore this alleged fraudulent trustee to his office on a mere promise of future good behaviour. I use the word "alleged," because we are not now hearing the appeal on its merits. But the trial Judge found these allegations proved and having regard to the admission made by defendant No. 1 before the Temple Committee and to his non-appearance at the trial, it would seem unlikely that the findings of fact by the trial Judge are incorrect.

I have dealt with this judgment at some length, because it is absolutely inconsistent with the plaintiff's theory that the suit is one for ejectment by trustees against mere trespassers.

To my mind it seems clear that the Judge could give no directions about the future trusteeship without in effect administering or executing the charitable trusts. Further the suit was by one Muktesar alone, the other one being a defendant. This would cause no difficulty in a suit for execution of the charitable trusts. I think, however, it might cause difficulty in a mere ejectment suit, for the Court could hardly decree possession to one of two Muktesars, and could not settle any dispute between them except by administering the trust. In England this difficulty could be got over by an application to the Chancery Court administering the trust for leave to sue in the names of both trustees.

The conclusion, therefore, which I have arrived at is that the plaint is clearly within section 92, and that the relief granted at the trial is also within section 92.

Under these circumstances I can deal shortly with the somewhat narrower ground relied on by the lower Appellate Court, viz., that the suit was in effect a suit for the removal of a trustee, as the offices of trustee and Muktesar were in the present case distinct and the Temple Committee could not remove defendant No. 1 from the trusteeship. This point depends on the true effect of the four documents Exhibits 60, 61, 64 and 65 set out in paragraph 10 of the judgment of the trial Judge. These documents seem to me rather confused. They extend over some nine years and give interests both to Damodar and to Ramkrishna, and it is not easy to answer the question in whom was the legal ownership of the land upon trust for the God. Both Courts below have, however, held that Ramkrishna and his heirs became hereditary trustees, though the lower Appellate Court would appear to confine this trust to income, as it finds that the "tenant Ramkrishna became trustee of the proceeds of the land for the benefit of the God."

For the present purposes it seems to me unnecessary to determine the precise nature of this hereditary trust. It is sufficient, I think, to say that such a trust existed, and that defendant No. 1 was not and could not be removed from it by the Temple Committee when they dismissed him from his office of Muktesar.

I agree, therefore, with the lower Appellate Court in thinking that the suit was in effect a suit for, inter alia, the removal of a trustee.

The result is that the preliminary point under section 92 is, in my opinion, fatal to the plaintiff's suit and accordingly the appeal must be dismissed. I am, however, very dissatisfied with the position in which the trust is thus left after some seven years' litigation—a result which is largely due to the plaintiff's obstinacy in persisting that the consent of the Advocate-General was unnecessary. Further as a rule the Court insists on at least two trustees and does not direct delivery of possession of trust property to a single plaintiff as is claimed here. I think, therefore, that the best course in the interest of the trust is to direct that the case be laid before the Advocate General as representing charity for his consideration as to what steps, if any, should be taken by him in the matter of this trust. In the meanwhile the record will be retained in the High Court.

As regards costs we have a judicial discretion under section 35 of the Civil Procedure Code, although in our view the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the suit. I think on the whole that the proper order here is to direct that each party bear his own costs throughout. The actual order of this Court will be as indicated by my learned brother.

Appeal dismissed.

—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage, suit on—Plea that fictitious property was included in deed to evade provisions of Registration Act—Burden of proof—Estoppel, whether can defeat provisions of Statute.

A mortgage-deed in which the properties hypothecated were stated to be a house in Calcutta and a small plot of rent-free land in Burdwan, was registered at Burdwan. In a suit on the mortgage the defendant, who was one of the representatives of the mortgagor, pleaded that the mortgage was invalid, having been registered at Burdwan where no such rent-free plot as mentioned in the mortgage ever existed or belonged to the mortgagor:

Held, that the onus lay upon the defendant to disprove the existence of the rent-free plot as described in the mortgage at the time when it was executed. [p. 525, col. 1.]

The general rule is that the principle of estoppel cannot be invoked to defeat the plain provisions of a Statute. [p. 524, col. 2.]

Semle.—Once the execution of a mortgage is proved, it is not open to those claiming under the mortgagor to allege or to adduce evidence to show that any of the properties purported to be mortgaged was either non-existent or not owned by the mortgagor at the date of the mortgage. [p. 524, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 15th March 1915.

FACTS of the case will appear from the following judgment of

GREAVES, J.—By a document, dated the 15th April 1902 and made between Syed Moulvi Sayad Saderuddin Ahmed and Sayadani

AimanaBibi of the one part and Mrinalini Dasi and Kadambini Dasi of the other part, Saderuddin and his wife Aimana mortgaged 10, Wellesley Square, Calcutta, and one bigha more or less of rent-free land in the village of Bohar proper in the district of Burdwan, whereof the four boundaries were, on the north, Belghoria tank, on the east, Mir Kamaladdin's land, on the west, a public road and on the south, Karim garden (the two properties as therein set forth being owned by and possessed by Aimana, she having got the same by gift from her husband) in consideration of an advance of Rs. 4,000 made to them by Kadambini and Mrinalini to secure such sum and interest at the rate of 12 annas per mensem. The execution of the mortgage was proved before me by Sarat Kinkar Mookerjee, a Pleader of Burdwan and one of the attesting witnesses, who also proved that the consideration-money passed in his presence and that he was present at the registration of the mortgage, the execution and registration of the mortgage both taking place at Burdwan. The mortgage document bears upon it the endorsements of various payments made from time to time on account of the principal moneys due thereunder amounting to Rs. 710, the last of such payments having been made on the 16th Sraban 1311, and this action is brought to enforce payment of the balance due under the mortgage. Kadambini died on the 6th September 1909 having by her last Will, dated the 30th August 1909 and proved on the 27th January 1910, appointed the plaintiff Sudhir Chandra Sett executor thereof and he and Mrinalini Dasi are the plaintiffs in this suit. The premises No. 10, Wellesley Square, were, on the 26th June 1902, mortgaged to Surendranath Srimani, defendant No. 5, to secure Rs. 1,000 and interest at the rate of 12 per cent.

On the 11th January 1903, Aimana assigned her interest in 10, Wellesley Square, to her son Abdul Wares who by an indenture, dated the 5th May 1911, (Exhibit C) conveyed his interest in 10, Wellesley Square, to Rakhal Das Mukhopadhyaya (defendant No. 6) absolutely. Saderuddin died on the 26th July 1905 leaving him surviving two widows, Aimana above-mentioned and Alema, who are both now dead. By Aimana he had one son, Abdul Wares before mentioned, who died on the 26th September, 1911 leaving a widow Ummay Syeda Khatoon the 2nd defendant, and the heirs of Abdul Wares are his widow and the defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4. By his wife Alema, Saderuddin had three children, Abdulla, Afifa and Zakia who are the defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4. Alema is now dead but she survived Aimana and Abdul Wares.

Service of the plaint was proved on the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 but they put in no written statement and did not appear before me. The first defendant appeared and put in a written statement and contested the suit before me. By his written statement he denies that Saderuddin and Aimana had any rent-free land at Bohar as described in the mortgage and denies the existence of any such plot of land and submits that it was mentioned in the mortgage in fraud of the law of registration and that the registration was, therefore, invalid; he also denies that the premises No. 10, Wellesley Square, even belonged to Aimana and states that Zakia is dead and predeceased Abdul Wares. Other matters are referred to in the written statement but they are not material for the purposes of this decision.

It is proved in evidence before me that the 1st defendant Abdulla is in possession of 10, Wellesley Square, and that he has been in possession thereof since his father's death.

The following issues were settled, namely:—

(1) Was the Burdwan property mortgaged at all by the deed of the 15th April 1902?

(2) Is there any such property in existence as the Burdwan property purported to be mortgaged?

(3) Was the mortgaged property registered?

(4) Is the suit bad for non-joinder of parties?

(5) Was the mortgage executed by the mortgagors and was there any consideration?

With regard to issue (1) this issue was not raised by the written statement specifically but I ruled that it was a necessary issue, as I was bound to satisfy myself before passing a decree which would affect the property that it was in fact properly charged by the mortgage. In my opinion, upon the true construction of the mortgage of the 15th April 1902, the Burdwan property is mortgaged to secure the sum referred to in the mortgage. The document is not artistically drawn, but it recites the two properties, namely, that at 10, Wellesley Square, and the Burdwan property, that they belong to Aimana, that the money to be lent was required to pay off a mortgage on 10, Wellesley Square, and on paying this off and redeeming the aforesaid Calcutta property from the mortgage they mortgage the same—the mortgage goes on to declare that the aforesaid two properties are not already charged or encumbered. In my opinion, upon the true construction of the whole document, the words "We mortgage the same" refer to as well the Burdwan property as the property at 10, Wellesley Square, and accordingly I decide the first issue by declaring that upon the true construction of the mortgage the Burdwan property was mortgaged by the deed or document of the 15th April 1902.

Before dealing with issues Nos. 2, 3 and 4 which are the main issues, I decide with regard to issue (5), upon the evidence of Sarat Kinkar Mookerjee above referred to which evidence I accept as entirely trustworthy, that the mortgage was executed by the mortgagors and that the full amount of the consideration, namely, Rs. 400 was paid by and on behalf of the mortgagees to the mortgagors, and I decide that the whole amount of principal, except a sum of Rs. 710 remains unpaid and unsatisfied and that the sum of Rs. 4,000 was lent and advanced as to Rs. 3,000 by Kadambini and as to Rs. 1,000 by Mrinalini.

With regard to issues Nos. 2 and 3, my own view, apart from authority, would be that once the execution of the mortgage is proved, it is not open to those claiming under the mortgagors to allege or adduce evidence to shew that any of the property purported to be mortgaged was either non-existent or not owned by the mortgagors at the date of the mortgage. Mortgagees who get a decree get it for what it is worth, and it may well be that having got a decree they may find themselves unable to execute it by reason of the non-existence of the property to which it relates or other reasons. Numerous cases were cited before me to shew that there can be no estoppel against an act of the Legislature, notably the cases of Jagadbandhu Saha v. Radha Krishna Pal (1), Abdul Aziz v. Kanthu Mullick (2) and Madras Hindu Mutual Benefit Permanent Fund v. Ragava Chetti (3), and of course this proposition is not open to doubt, but the principle of those cases does not seem to me applicable here. In the case of Jagadbandhu Saha v. Radha Krishna Pal (1), there was no registration at all and in the case of Abdul Aziz v. Kanthu Mullick (2), there was no registration on the part of the person who claimed to set up the estoppel and the case of Madras Hindu Mutual Benefit Permanent Fund v. Ragava Chetti (3) deals with the powers of an illegal association, but in view of the decision in Joginee Mohun Chatterjee v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (4), where the express point which arises here was raised and decided against the view which I have expressed above although the point was left open on appeal: see Jogini Mohan Chatterji v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (5), and also in view of the recent decision of the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Srimati Hari Dasi Debi (6), although in that case both mortgagor and mortgagee were parties to the fraud on the Registration Law, the principle of estoppel does not consequently apply. I do not decide this case on any principle of estoppel, but on the evidence which was given before me to prove the existence or non-existence of the land at Burdwan purported to be mortgaged. Evidence on this point (excluding that of the 1st plaintiff Sudhir Chandra Sett on this point which, in my opinion, is not admissible and which I allowed subject to objection and to which I do not propose to refer) was given on behalf of the plaintiffs by Mir Muhammad Shafi (witness No. 3), who stated that from a date some 7 years ago he lived at Bohar for 5 or 6 years, that he knew Belgoria tank, that there was land to the south which belonged to Abdulla, son of Abdulla Meah, who was also known as Sudderuddin Ahmed. This witness stated in cross-examination that he was not a ryot of Sudderuddin; that there was a public road to the south of the tank and a road to the west but not for carriages or carts, and that he did not know if there was any rent-free land on the side of the tank. This witness was not a very satisfactory witness, and I cannot accept his evidence as throwing any light on the question I have to decide. The result is that apart from the mortgage itself, the plaintiff adduced no evidence to show the existence of the Burdwan property.

The burden of proof undoubtedly lay with the defendant No. 1 to disprove affirmatively the existence of this land in 1902. To establish this he gave evidence himself, stating that the boundaries as described made it physically impossible that so small a quantity as 1 bigha of land could be contained therein, that the land contiguous to Belgoria tank never belonged to his father, although Belgoria tank and the banks thereof which enclosed the tank and which were higher than the level of the ground did belong to him, the defendant No. 1—that he, the defendant No. 1, had no rent-free land adjoining the tank, that no public road lay to the west of Belgoria tank and that this was the state of things in 1902. In cross-examination this defendant stated that he was not prepared to question the correctness of the description of Belgoria tank in Exhibit C as being 2 bighas in extent and rent-free.

The other witness who gave evidence on this point on behalf of the defendant No. 1 was Shaik Abdul Latif, who stated that he had property at Bohar and was employed at the Bohar Branch Post Office, that he served under Sudderuddin for 6 or 7 years, that the tank was on rent-free land, but that no rent-free land adjoins the tank, and that to the south of the tank is the land of Abdul Haiy or Abdul Meah.

Both these witnesses were, in my opinion, reliable witnesses, and I accept their evidence as accurate. This being so, the only point which I have to decide is whether their evidence is sufficient to rebut the presumption raised by the mortgage that the mortgagors had at the date of the mortgage the land at Burdwan which they purported to mortgage and to establish affirmatively that no such land belonged in 1902 to the mortgagors.

The evidence on the point is not entirely convincing having regard to the fact that the mortgagors did own land in the neighbourhood and also Belgoria tank, but I am bound on the evidence before me to come to the conclusion that there was in fact no such land at Burdwan, the property of the mortgagors, as the mortgagors purported to mortgage by the document of April 15th, 1902, and that consequently the registration of the mortgage was bad. I should add that the plaintiff No. 1 stated that he had no documents of title in his possession relating to the Burdwan property.

The result is that I answer issues Nos. 2 and 3 in the negative.

In view of my decision it is not really necessary to decide issue No. 4, but, as evidence was called on the point, I think it right to say that I am satisfied that the lady who appeared before me in a Palki and was examined and cross-examined was not the defendant Zakia, and I accept the evidence of the defendant No. 1 and of Syed Abdul Razak that Zakia the daughter of Sudderuddin and Alima died in 1314, some 7 years ago, leaving as her heirs after the death of her husband Elias—who survived her—Syed Muhammad Mahmud and Khatoon Bibi, neither of whom are parties, and the defendants Nos. 1 and 3, although in view of the decision reported as Davalata v. Bhimaji Dhondo (7). I should not have been prepared to say that the suit was bad for non-joinder of parties. The result will be that the suit will be dismissed, but I make no order as to costs except for taxation of the costs of their respective attorneys as between solicitor and client against the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

WOODROFFE, J.—This is a suit on a mortgage, dated the 15th of April 1902, executed by one Syed Moulvi Saderuddin Ahmed and his wife Sayadani Aimana Bibi in (7) 20 B. 338; 10 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 787.

favour of Srimati Kadambini Dasi and Srimati Mrinalini Dasi. The 1st plaintiff is the sole executor of Srimati Kadambini Dasi. The mortgage was to secure the sum of Rs. 4,000 and the security was the house No. 10, Wellesley Square, in Calcutta, and a piece of rent-free land, one bigha in area, in Bohar in the district of Burdwan, butted and bounded in the manner stated in the first paragraph of the plaint.

The Muhammadan defendants are the representatives of the mortgagors. The defence of one of them is that his father, the mortgagor, and his step-mother, Sayadani Aimana Bibi, never had any rent-free land (measuring one bigha or otherwise) in Bohar in Pergana Ranibati in the District of Burdwan; as referred to in the first paragraph of the plaint and described in the deed of mortgage. He denies that there was any such plot of land, and suggests that it was a fictitious plot mentioned in the deed of mortgage in fraud of the law of registration and that the registration of the mortgage being invalid, the plaintiff cannot get relief in respect of the same. He further does not admit the receipt of consideration.

The issues were: Whether the suit was bad for non-joinder of parties. We are not concerned with this now. This was the fourth issue. The fifth issue raised the question whether the mortgage was executed by the mortgagors and there was any consideration. This issue was decided in favour of the plaintiffs by the learned Judge, and there has been nothing said against his decision on this point. There is no question in this appeal about the merits of the appellants' case.

The first issue raised the question whether the Burdwan property was mortgaged at all by the deed of the 15th of April 1902. This issue was decided in favour of the appellants, though the respondents here have sought to persuade us to hold that the learned Judge's decision was wrong. The mortgage (though, as the Judge pointed out, it might have been in some respects more clearly drawn) states that "the mortgagors executed this bond to the following effect:" It then sets out both the Calcutta and the Burdwan property, thereby indicating that both these properties were the subject of the mortgage. It then recites the ownership of these two properties and it states that neither of the properties are charged or encumbered by mortgage or attachment, which would be unnecessary if one of them was not intended to be mortgaged. Moreover, the case made is that the Burdwan property was inserted in order that the Registering Court of Burdwan might have jurisdiction by reason of the fact that one of the mortgaged properties was in that district. I am, therefore, of opinion that upon a true construction of the whole document, the Burdwan property was mortgaged.

There remain then the second and the third issues, namely, (second)—Was there any such property in existence as the Burdwan property purported to be mortgaged, and (third)—Was the mortgaged property registered?

These questions involve a determination of the contention whether the appellants can invoke any estoppel. Section 115 of the Evidence Act would prima facie apply, as there has been here a representation of fact and an alteration of position. The question arises—is an estoppel being invoked to defeat the provisions of a Statute, namely, the Registration Act? The learned Judge indicates that his own view, apart from authority, would be that once the execution of the mortgage was proved, it was not open to those claiming under the mortgagor to allege or to adduce evidence to show that any of the property purported to be mortgaged was either non-existent or not owned by the mortgagors at the date of the mortgage. But the learned Judge, by reason of the decision of the original Court in Joginee Mohan Chatterjee v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (4) and in view of the recent Privy Council decision in Harindra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Srimati Hari Das Debi (6), decided that the principle of estoppel was not applicable. He has, however, himself pointed out that in the Privy Council case, both the mortgagor and the mortgagee were parties to a fraud on the Registration Law, and in the case reported as Jogini Mohan Chatterji v. Bhoot Nath Ghosal (5), Chief Justice Maulean expressed himself as disposed to take the view that the defendant was estopped, although the question was actually left open and not decided.

There can be no doubt about the general rule that the principle of estoppel cannot be invoked to defeat the plain provisions of a Statute in the sense in which that rule is properly understood. The question is, however, whether the estoppel has been invoked for such a purpose here. This is not like the cases cited in the judgment of the learned Judge in which there was either no registration at all, or in which it was alleged that both the mortgagor and mortgagee were parties to a fraud, nor is it a case of agreement. We cannot further assume that there was an attempt to defeat the Law of Registration except by also assuming that there was in fact no property in Burdwan, which is the point in question. If we assume that, there is an end of the case. If then it be said that to apply an estoppel would be to shut out the attempt of the defendants to prove the true facts, there is no reason why it should not be so shut out, unless we can say that we are applying the provisions of estoppel to defeat the provisions of a Statute. I am disposed to hold that the defendants are estopped: but it is not necessary to rely on this, as, on the evidence, my opinion is that the appellants should succeed.

The facts show that the mortgagor Syed Moulvi Saderuddin Ahmed was a man of property, position and character for honesty. There is no evidence of an intention on his part to commit fraud. What is shown is, that the document was to be registered in Calcutta, but a few days prior to registration Syed Moulvi Saderuddin Ahmed on account of ill-health of his wife was not able to come to Calcutta, and, therefore, in order to register the mortgage at Burdwan he included the property belonging to him, which was situated in Bohar in that district. It is admitted that he had other property in the neighbourhood. Therefore, the position is that he desired to found jurisdiction in the Burdwan Registration Court and that he actually had property in Burdwan available for that purpose. It is to my mind, therefore, inconceivable under these circumstances that the mortgagor should either deliberately or through carelessness insert in the mortgage-deed property he had not got,

SUDHIS CHUNDER SETT V. ABDULLA-UL-MUSAVI.

Then, upon the evidence, even if the defendants are not estopped, there is no question but that the statement in the mortgage is very strong evidence against them. No one is more likely to know whether the property is held by him and what is its position than the alleged owner, and the statement that there was such a property at Burdwan, and its boundaries are set out in the document signed by Syed Moulvi Saderuddin Ahmed and his wife. The onus, therefore, lay upon the defendants to disprove the existence of this land in 1902. The learned Judge in his judgment holds that the onus was on the defendants and states that the question was whether the evidence given for the defendants was sufficient to rebut the presumption raised by the mortgage that the mortgagors had at the date of the mortgage the land at Burdwan which they purported to mortgage, and to establish affirmatively that no such land belonged in 1902 to the mortgagors. The learned Judge on this says:—"The evidence on the point is not entirely convincing having regard to the fact that the mortgagors did own land in the neighbourhood and also Belgoria tank." Notwithstanding this, however, he held that he was bound by the evidence to come to the conclusion that there was in fact no such land at Burdwan. If, however, the evidence was not entirely convincing and the onus lay upon the defendants, the decision should upon the learned Judge's findings have been the other way. But apart from this, and upon examination of the evidence, I think that the defendants have not established that which lies upon them. Had the onus been upon the plaintiff, it may be conceded that it might be difficult to hold that he made out the existence of the land with the boundaries as stated. But that is not the case here. It starts with the strong evidence of the statement in the mortgage, and, I think, Mr. Sarkar has shown a case for identifying, to some extent at least, two of the boundaries; and, as regards another of the boundaries, the defendants' evidence would not appear to be true. In any case, I am not prepared to hold that the defendants have established that the mortgagors had no land at Burdwan and that there was no such land as described in the mortgage. It may be that when the plaintiff endeavours to execute this mortgage decree, he may not be in a position to satisfactorily identify the boundaries of this land so as to enable him to sell the same either due to original misdescription or change in the surroundings during the past fifteen years. That is a different case from the one before us, which is whether or not the defendants have established that the mortgage is invalid by reason of the fact that there was no land at Burdwan.

In my opinion the respondents fail in this case: and I would answer the issues Nos. 2 and 3 in the affirmative, namely, that there was such property in existence at Burdwan as alleged and that the mortgage was properly registered. In the result the suit must be decreed. Mr. Sarkar on behalf of the appellants states that he is not seeking for a personal decree. Therefore, there must be a decree against the mortgaged premises only.

An objection was raised by Mr. Das on behalf of the respondents that there could be no decree against them until it was determined whether the decree could be sustained against the heirs of Zakia Bibi. But this contention is without basis, having regard to the fact that no personal decree is sought against anybody, but merely against the mortgaged property itself. As against the heirs of Zakia Bibi, if they desire to contest the plaintiffs' suit, then, in that case, they having been added after the determination of the suit in the first Court, evidence will have to be given, and a trial held as against them.

Upon these terms, in my opinion, the appeal should be decreed with costs as against the respondents except the heirs of Zakia, Mr. Sarkar on behalf of the appellants having agreed to pay the costs of one day's hearing to the heirs of Zakia Bibi. Mr. Sarkar's client will pay the costs of the guardian ad litem of the daughter of the 2nd defendant and may add them to his own costs. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs in the first Court against all the defendants appearing in that Court.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), ss. 2, 13—Joint family property, undivided share in, whether “property”—Receiver, appointment of.

A Receiver cannot be appointed under section 13 of the Provincial Insolvency Act in respect of an insolvent's undivided share in the property of the joint family of which he is a member. Such undivided share is not “property” as defined in section 2 of the Act.

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 13th April 1917.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Babu Basudeo Lal, for Respondents Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 8.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is directed against an order made by the District Judge of Sitapur in his insolvency jurisdiction. It appears that the opposite party Kalka Singh filed an application to be adjudged insolvent. His application was accepted and an adjudication order was passed. It was made to appear to the Court below that the chief property of the insolvent consists of an area of 400 kham bighas of land, which he held as a guzaradar. The learned Judge in his judgment refers to a decision of this Court, in which it was held that this property which was granted to the grandfather of the insolvent was granted for the maintenance of the family and was not alienable and in that judgment, a copy of which has been produced before me, I find that we refused to recognise alienations made in favour of mortgagees. What the learned Judge in his order says is this. His argument is that the usufruct of the property was transferred to the insolvent and that this usufruct may be alienated for the purpose of paying off his debt, subject to any rights which his sons may have to be maintained out of the property; and taking this view of the law he has directed the appointment of a Receiver and ordered him to take over this property and arrange for a lease of the same. The contention in appeal here is that it was not competent to the Court to order the appointment of a Receiver for the purpose of dealing with property which is joint family property and, further, property which has been declared to be incapable of alienation. It seems to me that this objection must prevail. Looking at the definition of the term “property” in the Provincial Insolvency Act (Act III of 1907), section 2, we find that it includes property over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. If it is the fact, and it does not seem to be disputed, that Kalka has got 8 sons who with him constitute a joint family, then it is impossible to describe any portion of this 400 bighas area or the usufruct of 400 bighas as property within the meaning of the definition just quoted. The case from the legal point of view is very much the same as the case in which it has been held that a guardian of the property of an infant member of a joint Hindu family cannot properly be appointed in respect of the infant's interest in the joint family property, because the interest is not individual property and, therefore, not property with which the guardian, if appointed, would have anything to do; on similar principles it seems that a Receiver cannot be appointed in respect of the undivided share of the property of a member of a joint Hindu family. Further it may be pointed out that to vest the property in a Receiver and to direct the Receiver to grant a lease of the same is to treat this property as being capable of alienation. It has already been decided that it is not. On this ground, too, I think the order of the Court below is not correct. I allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Court below. I make no order as to costs. 0

Bengal land law—Ghatwali tenure—Rights of ghatwal and his family over property subject to tenure, nature of.

In the Zemindari of Kharakpur in Bengal the ghatwali tenure is ordinarily hereditary, the estate descending to such male member of the family as the Zemindar approves as competent, and it is the right of the family, so long as they have male members competent to perform the duties, to have one or more of them appointed ghatwals, but the incidents of the tenure are not such as to give the family any rights over the property while it is in the hands of the ghatwal. [p. 550, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where the Zemindar on being released from the performance of ghatwali duties gave a pattah to four ghatwals, members of a family, granting the lands (which were till then subject to the ghatwali tenure) in perpetuity at an annual fixed jama:

Held, that the members of the family other than the four grantees took no beneficiary interest in the lands granted. [p. 532, col. 2]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, at Calcutta, affirming a judgment and decree of a Subordinate Judge.

FACTS.—In 1873 the Zemindar of Kharakpur, Raja Lela Nund Singh, who was released from the performance of the Ghatwali duties, granted a Mokurari Pattah of certain lands to four persons, who were till then the Ghatwals of the lands granted. By a sale deed, dated the 9th April 1907, the plaintiff-appellant purchased certain shares in the Mokurari lands from persons who alleged that they or their predecessors and the four grantees were members of the same family, that the Ghatwali lands had been in their family from time immemorial, and that the Mokurari grant was made to the said grantees on behalf of the family. The plaintiff sued on the 15th March 1908 to eject the first nine respondents to whom the interest of the grantees had passed. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, holding that the four Mokuraridars alone were the owners of the Mokurari lands. On appeal the High Court affirmed that decree, holding that the plaintiff had failed to prove that his vendors had any title to the Mokurari lands or that they had possession thereof ever since 1873. The plaintiff thereupon appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. O., DeGruyther, K. O., and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellant.—The Mokurari lands were before the grant Ghatwali lands, which had been in the family of the plaintiff's vendors and the grantees from time immemorial. The Zemindar appointed Ghatwals from the members of the family, which had the right to ask the Zemindar to appoint a fit person or persons as Ghatwals. The Ghatwals for the time being held the lands on behalf of the family. The Mokurari was granted to the four persons who happened to be the Ghatwals at the time of the grant. They took the grant on behalf of all the members of the family. The Ekarnama of 1872 showed that the lands had been ancestral Ghatwali lands of the family, and that though the grant was made to four members of the family all the members of the family had an interest in the grant. The Rumford Market Case, Keech v. Sandford (1) was relied on. Reference was made to Raja Lelanund Sing Bahadoor v. Government of Bengal (2) and Raja Lilanand Singh Bahadur v. Thakur Munorunjun Singh (3). The Court below had not appreciated the plaintiff's evidence. There was reliable evidence to establish that the plaintiff's vendors received their shares of the profits of the village and that they had held kamat lands. The Ekarnama of 1873, which was a declaration against the interest of, or one by an occupier qualifying his estate, established the general claim of the family, and the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to recover at least that 1-anna share.

Mr. Dube, for the Respondents.—There were concurrent findings of fact that the plaintiff's vendors had no title and that they had never held possession of the Mokurari lands; and these findings should not be disturbed: Sajjad Husain v. Abid Husain (4). The Mitakshara Law of inherit-

Kali Prasad Singh* (6), Kali Perhad v. Anand Roy (7) and Ohhatradhari Singh v. Saraswati Kumari (8). The title to the lands was in the four grantees. The Courts below have agreed in finding that the plaintiff's vendors had never enjoyed the lands since 1873, and that the suit was, therefore, barred by limitation.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., replied.

JUDGMENT.

LORD PHILLIMORE.—The suit to which this appeal relates is brought to recover certain lands formerly held under Ghatwali tenure in the Zemindari of Kharkapur in Bengal.

These lands were originally held by the Zemindar under the ruling power upon terms that the Zemindar should perform by himself or his tenants the duty of guarding the Ghats or passes against marauders and preserve the peace of the district, and discharge other Police services.

In the year 1838 the Government, being of opinion that these duties could be, and indeed were being, better performed by their own officers, and that the Government was entitled to resume these lands, as the services for the performance of which they were originally held were no longer needed, claimed to resume them accordingly.

Litigation ensued, and the Government was successful in the Courts in India, but the decision was reversed on appeal to the Privy Council, and the Raja Zemindar was quieted in his possession.

The case was decided in 1855, and is reported as Raja Lelanund Sing Bahadoor v. Government of Bengal (2).

As it was still possible that the Government might insist upon the Zemindar performing certain of the original duties, a compromise was entered into, and a settlement was arrived at by which the Zemindar paid a jama of Rs. 10,000 per annum, and was released from further performance of these duties.

Thereupon he in turn endeavoured to resume their tenures from the several Ghatwals on the ground that their services were no longer required. This led to much litigation with varied fortune. In two cases reported together in the Supplemental Volume of Indian Appeals, page 151, the first being Raja Lilanand Singh Bahadur v. Thakur Munorunjun Singh (3), the Ghatwals were successful both in India and before the Privy Council. In a third case heard at the same time the Ghatwal got better success before the Privy Council than he had in India. These cases were decided in 1873. Further, it appears from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge that there were some other cases, apparently not reported, in which the judgments in India were in favour of the Zemindar but the decisions in the Privy Council in favour of the Ghatwals.

In the case of the particular lands now in dispute, they were held by four Ghatwals and the decision went against them and in favour of the Zemindar in the High Court at Calcutta, and they appear to have neglected to appeal in time; but on learning that other Ghatwals in a similar position had been successful before the Privy Council, they became dissatisfied and were endeavouring to see if they could not by some means re-open the question when a compromise was arrived at, and the Zemindar gave a pattah to the four Ghatwals granting the lands in perpetuity at an annual uniform jama of Rs. 1,031.

This pattah is dated the 6th July 1873. The grantees Dharmu Roy, Chaman Roy, Gokul Roy and Mangal Roy are described in it as former Ghatwals of the Mouzahs named in the pattah, and it is recited that "the said Mouzahs, original with dependency, had from the time of the former Rajas been in the possession and occupation of you and your ancestors by virtue of Ghatwali right." The litigation and the agreement of the parties to come to an amicable settlement are then recited, and the Raja proceeds to make the grant in the following words: "Therefore, I have made in favour of you the permanent Is-tamrari Mukurari settlement in perpetuity descendible to progeny and generation after generation in respect of Mouzba Khādwa, etc., original with dependencies in existence from before.....at an annual uniform jama of Rs. 1,031.

The four grantees thereafter dealt with the property as their own as property held by each severally, in respect of his 4-anna share, as a member of a Hindu family holding jointly with his sons and grandsons.

The four grantees, as managers or Kartas of a Hindu family, jointly made mortgages and leases, and in particular, in the year 1884 they, with their sons and other descendants, executed two mortgages in favour of Shitabi Singh. Upon these mortgages decrees were ultimately obtained, and the villages were sold in execution to the first party defendants, whose representatives are the respondents appearing before the Board to support the judgments under appeal. Delivery of possession was made on the 6th March 1897. It should be added that since the date of delivery the first party defendants or their predecessors have been in possession.

The case made for the plaintiff-appellant accepts a large part of that of the defendants-respondents. The pattah is admitted, as also are the apparent title thereby created in favour of the four grantees, Dharmu, Chaman, Gokul and Mangal, the title deduced from them to the first party defendants, and the possession by the latter from the date of delivery upon the sale. The case made is that the pattah was granted to the four grantees as representatives of one great family descended from a common ancestor, and that all the male descendants have beneficiary interests in the several Mouzahs according to their respective shares per stirpes, and that the plaintiff is the assignee of interests of several of these descendants in respect of shares amounting to 7-annas and a fraction or nearly half. A short pedigree will show the origin and nature of the several interests which he claims to have bought:—

DURGA PRASAD SINGH v. TREBINI SINGH.

On the assumption made on behalf of plaintiff, Rupdeo, a brother of Chaman, and his descendants have a claim in some beneficiary share, presumably a 1-anna share, Chintaman, brother of Dharmu and uncle of Chaman, and his descendants would have a 2-anna share; in the other line, Ajit and his descendants would have a 4-anna share and Chauthi and his descendants a 2-anna share. The plaintiff has bought up all these shares, except those of some of the descendants of Chauthi.

Lachman Roy, the common ancestor, flourished about 1750. He was probably in his day the Ghatwal. His son Bahore was Ghatwal; so was Bahore's son Ajit. Sakhdeo, the grandson by the other line, was Ghatwal apparently with Bahore, and later on with the latter's grandson Anandi. In 1854, Digan, father of Mangal, was Ghatwal in conjunction with some member of the other line, probably Dharmu, and then in 1864, when the Zemindar sought to eject them, the four grantees were the Ghatwals.

The plaintiff suggests that they were chosen as the representatives of the several branch families and held their shares of the family estate on behalf of all the male members. This case is rested upon three grounds; the nature of the Ghatwali tenure as determined by the several decisions of the Privy Council, the alleged enjoyment by the beneficiaries of their respective shares from the grant of the pattah to the sale by the Court, and upon an Ekrarnama executed on the 22nd September 1873, that is, between two and three months after the pattah.

As regards the first ground there are several decisions of the High Court and of this Board on the nature of this tenure.

Some have been already cited, and in addition special reference may be made to Nilmoni Singh Deo v. Bakranath Singh (5), decided in 1882, a case not so much in point as the Ghatwali lands were in another Zemindari, and to Kali Pershad v. Anand Roy (7), decided in 1887, concerning other lands in the Zemindari of Kharakpore.

The result of the decisions is that the Ghatwali tenure is ordinarily hereditary, the estate descending to such male member of the family as the Zemindar approves as competent, and that it is the right of the family so long as they have male members competent to perform the duties to have one or more of them appointed Ghatwals. It was certainly an advantage to the whole family that one of their members should hold the office and the tenure. He could put other members of the family into minor offices and grant them subordinate interests commonly called jotes, and he could and would generally provide for the family in the manner expected of its head. But this is a long way off making him a trustee for the family or treating the Ghatwali estate as possessed by the family and reducing the Ghatwal to the position of Karta or managing head of the family. Their Lordships do not find that the incidents of Ghatwali tenure are such as to give the family any rights over the property while it is in the hands of the Ghatwal and they find themselves upon this point in full agreement with the Courts in India. So far, therefore, if the assumption were to be made that the scheme of the pattah was to preserve family rights, there would still be no reason for holding that they extended so as to give any beneficiary interest in the Mauzabs to the male members of the family other than the actual grantees.

The plaintiff, however, relied upon an ancestral actual possession and the receipt of their share of the rents and profits by his vendors or their predecessors-in-title, and he called several witnesses to depose to this. He laboured under an initial difficulty in stating what those shares were, as they had been variously stated in his plaint and in a previous plaint in a suit brought by his vendors in March 1898 and discontinued by them, it was said, on account of poverty, and again differently stated in other proceedings. But it is unnecessary to discuss this matter at length. The Subordinate Judge who saw and heard the witnesses for the plaintiff did not accept their testimony, and the High Court saw no reason for differing from him. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the Judges of the High Court made no independent examination of this evidence and that their Lordships are, therefore, not bound to treat the case as one of concurrent findings of fact, and their Lordships permitted the Counsel for the plaintiff to read and comment upon this evidence. But the result is that their Lordships see no reason for differing from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge upon this point: and it must be taken that the plaintiff did not succeed in proving that his vendors or their predecessors-in-title were ever in possession or in the enjoyment of shares in the rents and profits since the grant of the pattah.

There remains for consideration the argument for the plaintiff founded upon the Ekrarnama. This argument was rejected by the Subordinate Judge and by the High Court, and their Lordships, as it will be seen, have come to the same conclusion in the end. But the point is not altogether easy to decide, for there is prima facie some weight in the contentions founded upon this document.

The grantor is one of the four grantees under the pattah, Dharmu Roy. He describes himself as son and heir of Sukhdeo Roy and recites that the four Mouzahs form an ancestral Ghatwali Mahal, which have "since olden times been in our possession and occupation." He then recites that the Rajah had taken possession of them and done away with the Ghatwali tenure and that thereafter by amicable settlement the Mouzahs were obtained "under a Mokurari pattah, at an annual jama of Company's Rs. 1,031 in the name of the four grantees."

"As this Mahal is our old ancestral Ghatwali, and although our names are recorded in the Government Office, etc., yet all the heirs who are the heirs of the common ancestor, have been in equal possession thereof in the Moffusil, and all the heirs have been and are supported and maintained thereby in the Moffusil, and whereas one set of these Moffusil co-sharers, namely, Ganpat Roy, Gurdayal Roy, Gopi Roy and Sri Roy, the four brothers and the own nephews of me, Dharmu Roy is not satisfied unless their names are recorded or they obtain a deed, therefore, of my own accord and free will, with a view to put a stop to disputes in future, I do hereby make a valid declaration and give out in writing that, after paying the rent mentioned in the said Mokurari pattah and the village and Court expenses, Ganpat Roy, Gurdayal Roy, Gopi Roy and Sri Roy shall get 1-anna share out of the share of me, Dharmu Roy and the said four brothers will divide equally amongst themselves the said 1-anna share; that although the names of us, the said Mokuraridars, are recorded in the Suddar Serishta of the said Rajah Saheb, still the said Ganpat Roy and others, the four brothers, shall always continue to hold possession in the Moffusil to the extent of 1-anna share, and that all the co-sharers and co-partners shall have to pay all expenses which have been incurred in obtaining the Mokurari pattah of the aforesaid Mouzahs, as also the expenses which may be incurred in future in connection therewith, in proportion to their respective shares."

The other three grantees were witnesses to the execution.

It appears that when the document was presented for registration, Dharmu opposed the registration stating that he had not executed the deed and that he did not know how to write, but that eventually it was registered under an order of the District Judge. Dharmu, however, was illiterate and had signed by the pen of a scribe.

It could not be disputed that this document constituted an admissible and relevant piece of evidence, and that both the recitals and the operative part have to be considered. But the two do not stand upon the same footing. The recital that all the heirs of the common ancestor have been in equal possession of the Mouzahs is larger than is necessary for the operative part of the deed; and it may be that whereas Dharmu was content to settle a 1-anna share for the benefit of the sons of his deceased brother, and the deed in its operative part was, therefore, a true expression of his will and rightly registered, yet that he being illiterate had not understood or intended the terms of the recital or that his co-grantees did not approve of them, and that this was the explanation of the opposition to the registration.

The draughtsman may have thought it expedient to insert something in the nature of a consideration so as to take the deed out of the category of voluntary settlements and he may have been carelessly or wrongly instructed.

The learned Subordinate Judge endeavoured to cut the knot by inferring that some other members of the family fraudulently introduced this recital. But there is no warranty in the evidence for inferring fraud and no suggestion of it appears to have been made to any of the plaintiff's witnesses. All that can be said is that it is possible that such was the case.

There is, however, a stronger comment which was also made by the Subordinate Judge, and that is that the recital is not only larger than the operative part, but inconsistent with it. On any theory of descent per stirpes the descendants of Sukhdeo would have an 8-anna share and each of the four sons a 2-anna share. The four sons of Chintaman in whose favour the deed is made would have their father's 2-annas and Dharmu would have 2 annas and no more. But he is parting with a 1-anna share only and keeping 3, on the theory, for himself.

The suggestion made on behalf of the plaintiff to meet this difficulty was that it was intended, that the other grantee of the Sukhdeo line, Chaman, son of Lachman, should give out of his 4 annas a second anna to the sons of Chintaman, and apparently that Dharmu and Chaman should further contribute a 1-anna share each for their brother Rang Lal, who was then living and ultimately died childless.

On this theory Chaman would further have to denude himself of another anna share to his brother Rupdeo whose descendants are some of the vendors to the plaintiff.

Ingenious as these suggestions are, they are without warrant in the evidence or the documents and wholly fanciful.

This being so, the recital in the Ekrarnama, though not without weight and not to be wholly put aside as a piece of evidence, cannot, in their Lordships' opinion, as it did not in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge, or in that of the High Court, outweigh the mass of evidence, which makes against the very difficult legal title which the plaintiff seeks to establish.

It remains, however, to consider the operative part of the document, which is in terms a grant of a 1-anna share to the sons of Chintaman, through whom among others the plaintiff claims, and to see whether, though the plaintiff fails in his claim to the larger share (7-anna and a fraction) of the estate, he yet could succeed in respect of a 1-anna share. Many answers have been made to this claim. It is not that put forward by the plaintiff in his plaint. He did not rely upon the Ekrarnama as a conveyance of this 1-anna share, but as a declaration against interest, or one by an occupier, qualifying his estate, establishing the general claim of the family. The document was conditional only. If, as is probably the right construction, the pattah is a grant to the four grantees, each taking in respect of their separate shares as members of a joint Hindu family with their sons and grandsons, Dharmu could not convey away a part of his estate to the prejudice of the other members of his joint family, and the deed could only operate quoad his life-interest, which has expired.

It was suggested as an answer to this last argument that it would be within the authority of the karta or head of a family to make compromises.

But the one conclusive answer to any case in respect of this 1-anna share is the Statute of Limitations. The learned Subordinate Judge in his very careful judgment considered this plea, but upon the whole rejected it on the ground that the suit was instituted on the 16th March 1908, and the date from which the twelve years began to run was when the auction-purchasers took delivery of possession, that is, the 6th March 1897. And the High Court in the view which it took of the case found it unnecessary to express any opinion upon this plea.

Inasmuch, however, as none of the vendors to the plaintiff or their predecessors-in-title have been in possession of any shares in the property including therein this 1-anna share, it must be taken that the Statute began to run at least from the time when the sons of Chintaman did not receive the benefits which the Ekrarnama purported to give them, that is, from the year 1873.

Upon the whole, therefore, the plaintiff has failed to prove title to any portion of the property in suit, and the decrees of the Subordinate Judge and the High Court dismissing his suit were right, and their Lordships will humbly recommend His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Administration suit, decree in, directing administration under supervision of Court—Court, power of, to grant allowances to beneficiaries pending administration—Discretion, exercise of.

Where the administration of an estate is being carried on under the supervision of a Court, that Court has power, in a proper case, to grant an allowance, pending the administration, to any of the parties who will eventually be entitled to share in the property. That power ought, however, to be exercised with proper discretion and having regard to the claims that are likely to be made upon the estate, and the Court ought not to grant to any of the beneficiaries properties by way of an allowance unless it is satisfied that the assets will be sufficient to satisfy the creditors. JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an application on behalf of the representatives of some of the children of the late Musammât Bibi Fasihan in the course of administration proceedings in respect of her estate. It appears that she died leaving 4 daughters and 3 sons. To some of them she had by deeds of gift transferred certain portions of her property. The validity of these deeds of gift was called in question by the remaining heirs and after some litigation all of them were set aside and this Court ordered, in view of the somewhat complicated circumstances that had arisen by reason of the dealings with the shares which had been given to some of the children by the deeds of gift, that the whole estate should be administered under the supervision of the Court and directed a preliminary decree to be drawn up in accordance with that decision. In the course of the administration proceedings a Receiver was appointed and from time to time various applications were made to the District Judge under whose charge and supervision the estate was being administered. On the 23rd March 1918, Kali Muzaffar, one of the sons of Musammât Fasihan Bibi whose share of the estate was a 7-anna share and who had incurred certain costs in connection with an appeal from the decision of this Court to the Privy Council, applied to the District Judge by petition that those costs should be advanced to him out of his share and charged to his account and further that an allowance should be paid to him pending the administration of the estate. In the result the learned District Judge ordered that the costs incurred by Kali Muzaffar in prosecuting his appeal to the Privy Council from the decision of this Court might be advanced to him and charged to his account out of the share which would ultimately come to him when the estate had been administered. With regard to the allowance he said: "Receiver should submit a scheme for the payment of the debts due by the estate and an estimate of the mesne profits due by and to each party in order that it may be possible to fix the amount of the allowance." In pursuance of that order a report was made by the Receiver, which dealt with the assets and liabilities of the estate which was a large one, amounting to some 10 lakhs. The report also dealt with the mesne profits which Kali Muzaffar and one or two of the other heirs had received out of that portion of the estate which they had been dealing with under the deeds of gift and before the deeds were set aside. It appeared from that report, which was not final as the assets and liabilities had not then been entirely ascertained, that there would be due from Kali Muzaffar to the estate a sum of something between Rs. 70,000 and Rs. 90,000 in round figures. It further appeared, as far as can be ascertained at present, that making a liberal estimate for the debts and liabilities of the estate, something like 7 or 8 lakhs (take it at 7 lakhs) would be left representing the assets distributable amongst the various heirs. Of this sum Kali Muzaffar will be entitled to a 7-annas share. Out of that 7-annas share he will have to pay a sum of not less than Rs. 73,000 and not more than Rs. 94,000. Taking it even at a lakh, that would leave Kali Muzaffar's share at something like 2 lakhs and in the meantime, of course, he would be entitled to the interest on that property in addition to the capital which will eventually become his. In these circumstances the learned Judge, having received the report and presumably considered it, made another order on the 10th April 1918 when the previous petition was considered together with a petition made by the other members of the family dealing with various matters. In the course of that order he stated that an allowance of Rs. 400 a month be made to Kali Muzaffar for the present and added: "It does not seem possible to grant an allowance to the other parties at present." The other parties who were apparently asking for an allowance were the daughters of the deceased lady. The learned Judge allowed the application of Kali Muzaffar fixing his allowance at Rs. 400 and refused the application on behalf of the daughters. We have been asked by the petitioners to say that this order made by the learned Judge was without jurisdiction or that under the provisions of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code was made illegally or contained some material irregularity. In the alternative the petitioners ask us to say that an allowance should also be made to the three daughters who have moved this Court.

The ground upon which we are asked to exercise our powers of revision are those which I have already stated. It is contended that under the preliminary decree the Court has no power to order any portions of the assets to be distributed at all, but merely has power to make enquiries in order to ascertain what the liabilities were and what the shares of each of the claimants of this estate are after the debts have been ascertained. I cannot accept that interpretation of the decree which has been put before us, for this reason. By the order of this Court a general administration of the estate was ordered and the case was sent down to the District Judge to prepare a decree in accordance with those directions. Whilst it is quite true that the great bulk of the different paragraphs in the decree deals merely with enquiries that have got to be made and accounts which have to be taken as to the ascertainment of the debts and the shares of the different heirs and as to their rights and liabilities, it was nevertheless a decree made in an administration suit and it is provided in that decree that the Commissioner or the parties or any of them are at liberty to apply to the Court for the appointment of a Receiver or for other directions from time to time as they may be advised. A Receiver has been appointed and the administration of this estate is apparently taking longer than was anticipated, and I can see no reason why any of the parties who will eventually be entitled to share in the property should not apply to the Court under whose direction the estate is being administered, asking that they should be granted an allowance, certainly not a very excessive allowance, pending the time when they will come into their own. It seems to me that that is one of the powers which the Court exercising control over the administration of the estate is certainly entitled to exercise. I quite agree that that power ought to be exercised with proper discretion and having regard to the claims that are likely to be made upon the estate, and that the Court ought not to grant to any of the beneficiaries properties by way of an allowance unless it is satisfied that the assets will be sufficient to satisfy the creditors. Having regard to the report of the Receiver which I have already referred to it, seems to me that it is quite clear that the share of Kali Muzaffar will be able to bear the liability that may attach to it in respect of this advance of Rs. 400 per month. It seems clear that if he gets his share of the income that share of income alone will be in excess of Rs. 400 per month, and moreover the order which was made was merely an order that he should be paid that sum for the present. If owing to the administration being protracted or for any other reason it should appear to any of the parties interested that this allowance should cease, they will certainly be entitled to make another application to the District Judge and he can then consider the question in the light of the altered circumstances which may have arisen.

The alternative suggested by the applicants is that the whole of the assets of this estate should be locked up in the pocket of the Receiver and not a penny piece should be paid to anybody whatever their ultimate rights thereto may be, until the whole of the somewhat complicated set of circumstances has been ascertained and everybody's definite share has been apportioned. If that were so, it would follow that those who were certainly entitled to share in this estate might be kept out of their only means of subsistence for a considerable time, and I have no hesitation whatever in coming to the conclusion that the administrator has ample power to make an order such as this and there is no lack of jurisdiction nor is there any illegality or irregularity in the order which has been made.

The other question which we have been asked to decide is that if Kali Muzaffar is granted an allowance, then the three surviving daughters ought also to be granted a similar allowance. This is a matter for the discretion of the learned Judge. He is not bound in any case to grant an allowance to any one of the parties and no doubt he has exercised his discretion in this matter, and speaking for myself I can see very good reason why Kali Muzaffar, one of the sons who probably is dependent upon the income of his mother's property for his livelihood, should be granted a small allowance such as this merely for his everyday expenses, whereas the daughters who are married have other means of subsistence and there is nothing to show that they are in immediate want or necessity. That is one of the reasons which I imagine affected the decision of the learned Judge in coming to the conclusion at which he arrived,

In any case I do not think that this Court sitting in revision ought to substitute its own discretion for that of the Court below in such matters where discretion has to be exercised. That being so, it seems to me that this application must fail and ought to be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee two gold mohurs.

At the same time it does appear that the Receiver, who was appointed by the decree to make enquiries and take accounts and ascertain the assets and liabilities of this estate and the shares of the different heirs, was ordered to have his enquiries and accounts and other matters completed and present a certificate ready for inspection by the parties by the 31st March 1918. We are now in November, and it does not appear that the accounts have been completed and it is impossible to say how far from completion they are even at the present moment. This has been put before us as a grievance on behalf of the applicants. It is not a matter with which we are in a position to deal, not knowing what the actual facts are, nor would it be a matter with which we would be entitled to deal in an application of this sort. At the same time in dismissing this application I think perhaps it might be advisable to bring this matter to the notice of the District Judge in order that he may, so far as he can, take steps either on his own initiative or if an application should be made to him by the parties to see that this administration is pushed on without any unnecessary delay.

suit—Exemption of property from liability—Appeal—Court-fee payable.

The plea raised by one of the defendants to a mortgage suit was that certain property, which was alleged to be covered by the mortgage-deed, was not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree by reason of certain transfers which had been made in his favour before the mortgage-deed in suit was executed. The trial Court held a part of this property to be liable for the mortgage debt. The defendant appealed:

Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 6th June 1917.

Syed Zahur Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I have heard the learned Counsel in support of his objection to the office report in this case regarding the question of Court-fee. The matter is a simple one. The suit was a suit on a mortgage and the appellant here was impleaded as one of the defendants. Her plea was that certain lands, which are said to be covered by the mortgage-deed, were not liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree by reason of certain transfers which had been made to her before the mortgage-deed in suit was executed. The Court below has held a part of the property to which this appellant lays claim to be liable for the mortgage debt, and now she comes here in appeal claiming that the Court below ought to have exempted from the operation of the decree an area of 109 bighas. Only a Court-fee of Rs. 15 was paid in respect of the relief claimed in appeal. The office reports that an ad valorem fee is chargeable and has cited three decisions of this Court and a decision of the Madras High Court reported as Venkappa v. Narasimha (1). It has been argued here that the relief which the appellant is asking here is in the nature of a declaratory relief. But I do not think that argument can be maintained, for clearly consequential relief is also aimed at, namely, the exemption of the property from sale in pursuance of this mortgage decree. The whole matter has been discussed in a fairly recent ruling of their Lordships of the Madras High Court. [See the case reported as Kesavarapu Ramakrishna Reddi v. Kotta Kota Reddi (2) which is a Full Bench ruling.] That has been followed by the Calcutta High Court in another ruling to be found reported as Jugal Pershad Singh v. Parbhu Narain Jha (3). The authorities are all against the contention which is put forward by Mr. Ali Mohammad, Counsel for the appellant. I hold that the office report is correct and that there is a deficiency of Rs. 65. Mr. Ali Mohammad states that he is ready to deposit this amount. Let it be received. The appeal will be admitted on payment of the deficiency in the Court-fee.

Order accordingly.

The defendant co-sharer landlord, being unwilling to recognise one of the judgment-debtors as his tenant, refused to accept that decree and brought a separate suit for his share of the rent for the same period:

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Pabna, dated the 17th April 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 1st Court, Serajunj, dated the 29th June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mohini Mohan Ohakerbutty (with him Babu Phanindra Kumar Sinha), for the Appellant.—The suit out of which this appeal arises is for the recovery of arrears of rent for the last 3 kists of 1317 B. S., for 1318 and 1319 B. S. and the first three kists of 1320 B. S. The plaintiff as common manager of Fatehpur Estate sues for 14-annas 1-ganda share of the total arrears, the remaining 1-anna 19-gandas share belonging to pro forma defendant No. 13.

The pro forma defendant Swarnamoyee Dasi brought a suit for the recovery of the arrears of rents of the jote for 1318 and 1319 B. S. In that suit the entire rents were claimed and the share of Swarnamoyee (1 anna 19 gandas) was decreed ex parte in her favour and the rest in favour of the co-sharers owing 14-annas 1-ganda share. The present plaintiff was made a party to that suit but he did not appear. The lower Courts have held that so long as the decree in the suit brought by Swarnamoyee stands and is not set aside, the present plaintiff cannot claim rents for the years 1318 and 1319 B. S.

The claim for the last three kists of the year 1317 B. S. has been dismissed, because some of the heirs of the original tenant have been brought on the record after the period of limitation. The claim for the first three kists of 1320 B. S. has only been decreed.

The lower Courts have dismissed my claim for the years 1318 and 1319 B. S. because the decree in the suit brought by Swarnamoyee, my co sharer landlord has not been set aside. I was a pro forma defendant in that suit. I did not pray for any relief in that suit. It is doubtful if I can at all execute that decree.

[NEWBOULD, J.—The decree is allowed to stand and if you get a decree, then there will be two decrees in a case.]

If I execute that decree the tenant, who has purchased part of the holding, might say that there was recognition. I may not recognise him because he is a man of my co-sharer. Moreover, the decree is now barred and it is doubtful whether a defendant can execute a decree against the other defendants. In equity and good conscience I am entitled to a decree for my share of the rent.

As to my claim for 1317 B. S., the lower Appellate Court has dismissed my claim relying on a case reported as Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhadro (1). There are also cases which are in my favour. Referred to Jogendra Nath Roy v. Nagendra Narain Nandi (2).

I am at least entitled to a money-decree. Referred to Chamatkarini Dasi v. Triguna Nath Sardar (3).

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit is common manager on behalf of Zemindars and Putnidars owning shares totalling 14-annas 1-ganda in an estate. The pro forma defendants own the remaining 1-anna 19-gandas share. He brought the suit out of which this appeal arises to recover rents from the principal defendants for the last three kists of the year 1317 B. S., for the whole of the years 1318 and 1319 B. S. and for the first three kists of the year 1320 B. S. He claimed Rs. 757.11.9 as his share of the rent and in the alternative asked that a decree might be passed for Rs. 862.14.3 for the 16-annas rent, awarding him his share. He was granted a decree for rent of the three kists of the year 1320 B. S. only, the decree being for the 16-annas rent for this period. He appealed without success to the Subordinate Judge of Pabna and has now preferred this second appeal to this Court, his contention being that his claim for rents of the years 1317, 1318 and 1319 should have been allowed.

As regards the arrears of the years 1318 and 1319 B. S., it appears that the pro forma defendant Swarnamoyee Dasya previously brought a suit for these some arrears making the plaintiff in this suit a pro forma defendant. In that suit a decree was passed for the entire rent in favour of Swarnamoyee and the plaintiff in respect of their respective shares. The plaintiff in the present suit is unwilling to execute that decree, because one of the judgment-debtors claims to have purchased part of the holding and the plaintiff refuses to recognise this transfer. The plaintiff might have avoided this difficulty by contesting that suit but as long as that decree stands, he cannot obtain a second decree for the same arrears of rent.

The claim for rent of the last three kists of 1317 B. S. has been dismissed on the ground that it is barred by limitation. Four of the heirs of the original tenants of the holding were omitted from the list of principal defendants when the plaint was filed and were subsequently added as defendants after the period of limitation for this portion of the claim had expired. Both the lower Courts have held, on the authority of the decision in Kashi Kinkar Sen v. Satyendra Nath Bhadro (1), that as the claim against these defendants is barred the remaining tenant defendants cannot be made separately liable for the entire rent. This decision was followed in the ruling Shaik Sahed v. Krishna Mohan Basak (4), to which one of us was a party. The case of Jogendra Nath Roy v. Nagendra Narain Nandi (2), on which the learned Pleader for the appellant relies, was there distinguished on the ground that it did not appear to be the case of an inherited contract. Reliance is also placed on the decision in Chamatkarini Dasi v. Triguna Nath Sardar (3), as supporting the contention that the appellant was at least entitled to a money-decree against those tenants against whom the claim is not barred. But in that case a decree had been obtained against one of several joint tenants and the Court had not to determine whether that decree had been rightly granted but what was the effect of a sale under that decree. In the case mentioned above, Shaik Sahed v. Krishna Mohan Basak (4), a money-decree had been granted and it was held that as there was no joint contract that decree must be set aside. Under certain circumstances one of several joint tenants may be made liable for the whole rent, but it has not been shown that the facts of the present case make it distinguishable from the two above mentioned cases in which the contrary was held. We accordingly hold that the lower Courts were right in dismissing this portion also of the plaintiff's claim.

These were the only two points argued at the hearing of the appeal. We hold that the appeal fails on both points and accordingly dismiss it. As the respondents did not appear we make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Babu Ohhail Bihari Lal, for the Appellants, (4) 35 Ind. Cas, 563; 24 C. L. J. 371,

MAHRAJ LAL BIHARI v. ANJUMAN-UN-NISA.

Mr. Haider Husain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for foreclosure, brought by the plaintiffs-appellants in respect of a mortgage effected by Fida Husain, the ancestor of defendants Nos. 1 to 4, and Raza Husain, who is defendant No. 5. The appeal is illustrative of the difficulties which mortgagees experience in proving the due attestation of registered documents, the execution of which is incapable of being seriously disputed. As is usual in such cases, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 pleaded that they were not aware whether Fida Husain had executed the mortgage bond in suit. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 absented themselves.

The Court below held that the mortgage bond in suit was not proved to have been duly attested in the manner required by law and passed a decree for money against defendants Nos. 1 to 5, regardless of the fact that defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were only impleaded as heirs.

The mortgage bond purports to have been attested by four witnesses, two of whom Sher Andaz Khan and Ganesh Prasad, as is also the scribe, are stated to be dead: the other two Syed Zakir Husain and Syed Zahid Ali are alive and have been examined. Syed Zakir Husain is related to Raza Husain. Raza Husain and Fida Husain were brothers. Syed Zakir Husain states that Fida Husain and Raza Husain did not sign the deed in his presence, that he attested the deed outside the Registration Office and that he did not remember whether the other attesting witnesses attested the deed in his presence or not. Syed Zahid Ali is similarly related to the wife of Raza Husain. He admits that the mortgage bond in suit was executed by Fida Husain and Raza Husain, and that he attested it. But he asserts that Fida Husain and Raza Husain did not sign the deed in his presence and that he must have signed the deed at their request, but was not sure of it. None of those witnesses was asked whether any personal acknowledgment was made to them by the executants: Raghobar Dayal, one of the plaintiffs in the suit, went into the witness-box and stated that the attesting witnesses, Syed Zakir Husain, Syed Zahid Husain and Ganesh Prasad, attested the deed in his presence and that Fida Husain and Raza Husain signed it in his presence and the presence of these and other witnesses.

As pointed out in Brahmadat Tewari v. Chauden Bibi (1), the mere fact that the attesting witnesses to a document repudiate their signatures or make statements suggesting that they attested at the instance of persons other than the executant does not invalidate the document, if it can be proved by evidence of a reliable character that they have given false testimony. In discussing the evidence adduced in support of a Will, which was attested by four witnesses, two of whom had died and the other two deposed practically in favour of the objector, Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., observed: "This, however, does not compel the Court to pronounce against the Will. It was ruled...in the case of Nubo Kishore Doss v. Joy Doorga Dossee (2) that the mere fact that attesting witnesses to a Will have repudiated their signatures, does not invalidate the Will, if it can be proved by evidence of a reliable character that they have given false testimony. To the same effect is the decision of the Judicial Committee in Cooper v. Bockett (3). The principle is well settled that when the evidence of the attesting witnesses is vague, doubtful or even conflicting upon some material point, the Court may take into consideration the circumstances of the case and judge from them collectively whether the requirements of the Statute were complied with; in other words, the Court may, on consideration of the other evidence or of the whole circumstances of the case, come to the conclusion that their recollection is at fault, that their evidence is of a suspicious character or that they are wilfully misleading the Court, and accordingly disregard their testimony and pronounce in favour of the Will [Young v. Richards (4) and Burgoyne v. Showler (5)]." Where there is one class of evidence showing that a document was properly attested and another class of evidence suggesting that it was not so, it is open to the Court on a consideration of the probabilities of the case to reject the one and accept the other. The fate of a document is not necessarily at the mercy of attesting witnesses.

This case was moreover decided before Act XXVI of 1917 came into force. By that Act it has been provided that instruments of mortgage or gift, executed prior to the 1st January 1915, shall not be deemed to be invalid by reason only that any person, who purported to attest such instrument as a witness, did not see the executant sign it, provided that such person before signing his name on the instrument received from the executant a personal acknowledgment of his signature to the same. It is possible that the plaintiffs might be able to prove such a personal acknowledgment and we consider that an opportunity should be given to them to do so. The proof of such a personal acknowledgment might render an examination of the other evidence unnecessary.

We direct the Court below accordingly to determine, after taking such relevant evidence as the parties may adduce, whether the document in question was properly attested or, valid within the meaning of section 2 of Act XXVI of 1917. Three months' time will be allowed for return of the finding and 10 days from the date of the finding will be allowed to the parties for filing objections.

Those who claim the property of a deceased separated Mitakshara Hindu as his reversionary heirs, must show that they are both his next heirs and within fourteen degrees. [p. 542, cols. 1 & 2.]

On the death of a separated Hindu, his estate was taken possession of by the defendants. The plaintiffs, fifty-nine in number, who claimed to be the reversionary heirs of the deceased, brought an action in ejectment, the scheme of which was to bring into Court a large number of persons more or less remotely akin in blood to the deceased, in the hope of ousting the defendants by a mass attack, and afterwards to assign the fruits of victory to the parties entitled by further litigation inter se.

Held, that such a plan embarrassed the Court as well as the opposite party and obscured the issues and was, therefore, much to be condemned. [p. 541, col. 1.]

Consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court of Allahabad, dated the 7th April 1913, reversing those of the Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 29th May 1909.

FACTS.—The suits giving rise to the appeals were brought by the plaintiffs-appellants as the nearest reversioners (with the pro forma defendants) to the estate of a separated deceased Mitakshara Hindu, Nihal Singh, at the death of his surviving widow. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suits, but the High Court reversing those decrees dismissed them, holding that the plaintiffs had not proved the alleged relationship.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C., and Dube, for the Appellants, referred to the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887 (XVII of 1887), sections 31, 34 and 44; and Ohuni Lal v. Nanda (1) and submitted that the alleged relationship was proved.

Mr. De Gruyther, K. C. (with him Mr. E. B. Raikes), for the contesting Defendants-Respondents, referred to Prathiyadi Bhayankaram v. Rangayya Appa Rao (2) and submitted the plan of action was bad. The plaintiffs must allege and prove that they are the nearest reversioners within fourteen degrees, but their plaint contained no such allegations.

He was stopped.

MEWA SINGH v. BASANT SINGH.

wrong in holding that the plaintiffs had not proved their case. They reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge; but, as he appears to have failed to deal with the real question, his conclusion need not be pursued. The plaintiffs sought declarations of their right to inherit certain properties in the districts of Amritsar and Saharanpur, which were in the defendants' possession. They claimed to be the reversionary heirs of one Tika Nihal Singh, who owned these properties till his death in 1864. The life-interests of his surviving widows did not determine till 1907. The question was one of fact and the burden of proof was on the plaintiffs. Their Counsel frankly admitted that their case must rest on certain family pedigrees—the other evidence, which had been put in, being inadmissible or inconclusive.

There were fifty-nine plaintiffs, and nearly twenty other parties in addition to the persons in possession were joined pro forma, as being members of the family, though they advanced no claims. The case was not one of the joint property of a Hindu family. If the case were proved, some one person or some few, standing in the same degree of genealogical propinquity, would alone succeed, but the scheme of the action has been to bring into Court a large number of persons, more or less remotely akin in blood, in the hope of ousting the defendants by a mass attack, and afterwards to assign the fruits of victory to the parties entitled by further litigation inter se. Such a plan is inconvenient and is much to be condemned. It is not a mere question of swollen expenses, which might be cured by an order to pay costs thrown away. The Court, as well as the opposite party, is embarrassed and the issues are obscured. The case can be disposed of on other grounds, but their Lordships do not think it right that this objectionable feature of the case should be passed over in silence.

Among the properties held by this very extensive family there were two, called, respectively, Wuin Puin and Raja Sansi; the former is one of the subjects of the present litigation, the latter is not. In 1865, when Raja Sansi was dealt with under the Revenue Settlement then proceeding in the Punjab, a wajib ul-arz was drawn up, which in the regular course embodied a shajra, or pedigree, of its proprietors. This was put in by the defendants. About the same time and under similar circumstances a pedigree was no doubt enrolled, when Wuin Puin was dealt with, but this was not forthcoming. It must, however, have been the basis of the pedigree, which was embodied in the wajib ul-arz, drawn up when Wuin Puin was dealt with in the next Revenue Settlement in 1891, and the official, who produced the pedigree out of the proper custody, deposed that it consisted "of two parts, viz., (1) the genealogical table prepared in 1865, and (2) the addition made to it after 1865. The genealogical table was prepared for the first time in 1865." This pedigree, of 1891 was put in by the plaintiffs. No objection was taken to the admissibility of either pedigree.

With the assistance of Counsel, their Lordships have carefully examined these two pedigrees. They do not agree with one another. Not merely does one contain matter which the other omits. This may be accounted for by the fact that one branch of the family was at the date of the pedigree interested in one Mouzah and another in the other. Not merely are names, which from their position in the tree might be supposed to represent the same person, nevertheless very differently spelt: this may be due to want of uniformity in the system of transliteration adopted, or of want of skill in applying it. There are further inconsistencies so serious that, without explanations from other sources, which are not forthcoming, they shake the credit of the whole family tree.

Though, as it happens, the defendants are members of this family themselves, they do not stand or fall by any pedigree, nor does the evidence of it bind them any further than it would bind a stranger. Their case is possession. They put in the pedigree of 1865, not for the purpose of proving that it was accurate, but for the purpose of contesting the plaintiffs' case, by showing that pedigrees of this family, drawn up in similar circumstances and from similar sources and possessing equal authority, are so discrepant that no trustworthy inference can be drawn from either for the purposes of the present case. On the other hand, the plaintiffs may resort to the 1865 pedigree if it supports them, and are not bound to that of 1891 alone, if a legitimate conclusion can be got out of a combination of the two. What the plaintiffs cannot do is to eke out the defects of either by mere conjecture as to both, and this, in the opinion of the High Court, was all that in substance they were able to do.

It is not suggested that there were any records of any kind which were or could have been made use of in the preparation of these pedigrees. They appear to have been simply handed down by tradition and to have been preserved by memory and by oral communication inter vivos. As is well known, in social conditions where a people has not yet learnt to place exclusive reliance on written and printed records, and where family pride or family rights encourage the maintenance of a body of oral family history, memory, unaided by permanent materials, is often a very sufficient medium of record, and oral communication often preserves the record with singular uniformity. Nor does a pedigree necessarily lose its value in proportion to its remoteness from the present time, at least as far as names and kinship are concerned. The oldest names in a pedigree are naturally the first to be learnt and the first to be recited, and the names of the earliest generations may well survive in their proper order long after all trustworthy memory of their lives has passed away. Their Lordships approach these pedigrees with every disposition to give them such evidentiary value as can be justly claimed for them. It is, however, right to observe that the best preparation for such a critical task is familiarity with the customs and thoughts of the communities among whom these materials have been handed down—an advantage which not all of their Lordships have enjoyed, and one, furthermore, which they recognise as more fully possessed by the High Court, whose judgment is under appeal. Accordingly though they have subjected this evidence to an entirely independent scrutiny, they are loth, and as they think rightly loth, to review the conclusion so arrived at, unless some error can be plainly established.

The family in question is governed by the Law of the Mitakshara. Those who claim to be the reversionary heirs must bring themselves within the necessary number of pedigrees, viz, fourteen. They must show that they are both next heirs and near enough. The common ancestor is one Khokar or Kharku; of him nothing is known, not even his date, but, according to the pedigree of 1891, his fourteenth descendant in a direct line was then traceable, so he must have lived long ago. According to the plaintiffs, he begot three sons: Tehraj the first, and a second Tehraj, and Mahraj. From Mahraj, they say, descended Nihal Singh, whose death in 1864 extinguished the whole of the Mahraj stock, and thus entitled some of the plaintiffs, most of whom descend from Tehraj the first, though about five descend from Tehraj the second. The first observation, which arises on the face of this pedigree, is that the house of Mahraj appears not to be exhausted. It shows one Sarup Singh, who is not described as childless and is not even stated to be dead. It is true that, if he left male issue, whose line continued, Nihal Singh ought not to have been proprietor in 1864, as he was, since Sarup Singh was the elder brother of Nihal Singh's great-great-grandfather; but the circumstance illustrates the imperfect way in which these pedigrees are made out.

Let it, however, be taken, as the Judges in the High Court took it, that with Nihal Singh his house came to an end. Tehraj the second is said by the plaintiffs to have had a grandson, Ghazi, the direct ancestor of the smaller group of the claimants. Who was Ghazi? According to them he was first cousin once removed of Lal, son of Mahraj, and he had a second cousin, named Saidu, grandson of Tehraj the first through whom, as their direct ancestor, the larger group of the plaintiffs come in to claim. Now, according to the pedigree of 1865, Ghazi was the grandson of Hathraj, one of Khokar's sons. Under this pedigree Khokar had only two sons: Hathraj and Bhiraj. If Hathraj is Mahraj the whole descent is at once in confusion; if Hathraj is Tehraj, which Tehraj is he? If Ghazi, Lal, and Saidu were brothers, as they are in the older pedigree, the house of Saidu must stand aside, and only some member of the house of Ghazi can claim. If Hathraj be Tehraj, or rather be both the Tehrajs, then either there was no Mahraj, or Mahraj is Bhiraj. But Bhiraj had no issue. Hence he is not Mahraj, or at any rate is not the plaintiffs' Mahraj, and the plaintiffs are no relations at all of Nihal Singh, who, came of other stock. It was argued that the two Lals are one and the same person, that the one Lal was really Ghazi's younger brother, and that so far the defendants' pedigree is an improvement on the plaintiffs'. One effect of this contention is that there is no necessity to go back to Khokar as the common ancestor, or to reach him through Mahraj and to trace down from him through Tehraj, whether Tehraj be one person or two. Wega or Bela then becomes the common ancestor, for he was the father both of Ghazi and Lal, which upsets the plaintiffs' whole claim. As a conjectural emendation this may be right, but it is guess-work. It may do for those who pronounce the verdict of history, but an action of ejectment is a serious matter.

Tracing down through Ghazi we come in the direct line at the eighth remove to one Mahtaba, who is described in the pedigree of 1865 as being then alive. He had a first cousin, the son of his father's younger brother, also described as then being alive. These persons or their children (for they are not entered as childless) would be nearer to Nihal Singh than the Ghazi plaintiffs. On the plaintiffs' pedigree, however, they do not appear at all. Moreover, after Bhara or Behara, Ghazi's grandson according to the earlier and his great-grandson according to the later pedigree, the two pedigrees become hopelessly irreconcilable.

On the other hand, if the consanguinity has to be traced through a common ancestor further back than Wega, alias Bela, namely, through Khokar, which is the plaintiffs, case, then the Saidu branch is the elder, and according to the pedigree of 1891, which alone records this branch, and by no means clearly, one person at least—Partab Singh—not then marked as childless and not accounted for, would be senior to all others of that branch in the same degree of consanguinity. Now Partab Singh is not a party to these proceedings.

It may be that these puzzles and others, which need not be detailed, were capable of solution. Unfortunately the explanations were not forthcoming. The plaintiffs themselves were sensible of their difficulties, for they incorporated in their pleadings a pedigree of their own, which does not agree with either of those proved. It was argued that the pedigree of 1891 should be preferred to that of 1865, since the former refers to Wuin Puin, while the latter refers to Raja Sansi, with which the branches now claiming were not closely connected, if at all. This explanation seems insufficient. If the family tradition was correctly preserved, then since both pedigrees and all the branches went back to Khokar and his immediate descendants, they should have given the same account of the part, which was common to both, and was for both the beginning of all things. In fact they differ. Either may be right or both may be wrong, but there is nothing to show what the link really is, which is needed to make good the plaintiffs' claim, and it is the weakness of this link which is the weakness of that claim.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Title, division of, whether distinguishable from division of property—Separation—Joint management by manager for all members—Partition by metes and bounds—Enquiry, nature of—Manager, liability of.

In cases of joint Hindu families, a division of title is distinguishable from a division of property, the former being a matter of individual decision, the desire on the part of one member to sever himself from the joint family and to enjoy his hitherto undefined or unspecified share separately from the others, without being subject to obligations which arise from the joint status of the latter, being the natural resultant from his decision, namely, the division and separation of his share by metes and bounds. But a separation of one branch of the family from another does not necessarily put an end to the joint management of the estate by the manager on behalf of all, for a partition by metes and bounds may not take place till several years later. In an ordinary suit for a partition of the joint family property, where there has been no previous separation, the enquiry is, in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct, directed to ascertain the divisible assets, the manager not being liable to account for his past dealings with the family income. He cannot, however, escape liability to account for the income once a separation has taken place. [p. 545, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—These are cross-appeals arising out of a final decree for partition. On the 20th June 1905 Suraj Narain and his son Kailash Narain filed a suit for partition of their half share in the joint family property and for their share of the mesne profits from October 1901, alleging that they had separated from the remaining members of the family at that time. The Court of first instance decreed the claim, but on appeal this Court held that there was no evidence of any separation prior to the institution of the suit and that the plaintiffs were not consequently entitled to claim accounts or mesne profits for the period during which they were joint. The decree granted by this Court was in the following terms:—

"The Court (below) should endeavour to divide the said property in two equal lots and to assign one lot to each party by mutual consent or otherwise. Compensation in cash can of course be ordered to be paid in the event of a precisely equal division of property being found impossible. In this connection, and as part of the enquiry into the divisible assets of the joint family under the head of moveable property, the Court should take an account of the income, enjoyed by the defendants (and by Pandit Bakht Narain before his death), from the date of the institution of the plaintiffs' suit on June 20th, 1905, to the date on which possession was given to the plaintiffs under the decree now appealed against, from the immoveable property of the joint family, in respect of which the plaintiffs have been found to be entitled to a half share. The defendants will be entitled to set off against such income, not only the expenses of management, but all expenditure which the Court may find to have been properly incurred on objects to which the income of the joint family may properly be applied by the manager of the same. The balance, if any, will be treated as part of the divisible assets of the joint family, under the head of moveable property, in the hands of the defendants, and the plaintiffs will be awarded one-half of the same." This decree was subsequently confirmed on appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council [Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (1).]

It is admitted that the plaintiffs got possession on the 9th March 1909. The Court below has taken an account of the income derived from the immoveable property belonging to the family from the 20th June 1905 to the 9th March 1909 and of the expenditure incurred during the said period; and allowed the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 12,409-1-4½ exclusive of a share in the grain recovered by the defendants and in the debts due to the joint family.

Both the parties have taken exception to different items entered in the accounts. The main objection of the plaintiffs is directed against the method adopted by the Court below in debiting the plaintiffs with liability for a share of the expenses incurred solely for the benefit of the defendants after the institution of the suit.

It is unquestionable that if the plaintiffs be deemed to have continued joint till the 9th March 1909, when they got possession in pursuance of their decree for partition, they would be liable for the expenditure incurred for family purposes or in discharge of a common obligation; but if the branch of the family, represented by the plaintiffs, be deemed to have separated from the date of the institution of the suit for partition, the plaintiffs' share of the income from the joint property will be liable for all legitimate expenses or obligations connected with their branch of the family and the defendants' share of the income will be liable for all legitimate expenses and obligations connected with their branch.

The judgment of this Court is far from clear on the point but reading it in the light of the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, by which it was affirmed, there can be little room for doubt that the propriety of the expenditure was to be judged with due regard to the position each party occupied after the institution of the suit, that is, from a standpoint different from that which they occupied prior to the suit, for no accounting was allowed for the period preceding it. In other words, the manager was not required to justify what he had spent prior to the suit, but to justify what he had spent after its institution. That justification can only be shown by establishing that what he had spent was spent for the benefit of the entire family, and not of any particular branch or in discharge of a common burden; for if that were not so, it would be within his power to reduce the divisible assets, existing on the date of the suit, materially by spending recklessly for his personal ends or for the benefit of his own issue to prejudice the other side.

In their judgment in the suit, out of which these proceedings have arisen, their Lordships say that the question for determination before them was whether the plaintiffs had separated, as they alleged, in October 1901 or whether they continued joint in property, if not in food and worship, up to the institution of the suit in 1905. Their Lordships, agreeing with this Court, held that the plaintiffs had failed to establish their separation in October 1901 or their exclusion from that date, and on that ground they upheld the decree passed by this Court, dismissing the claim for mesne profits prior to the date of the institution of the suit and allowing it after that date. The separation of the plaintiffs from the date of the institution of the suit was thus in effect affirmed. In fact in their later decision in Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj (2), their Lordships, referring to their decision in Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (1), pointed out that a division of title was distinguishable from a division of property, the former being a matter of individual decision; the desire on the part of one member to sever himself from the joint family and to enjoy his hitherto undefined or unspecified share separately from the others without being subject to obligations which arise from the joint status of the latter, being the natural resultant from his decision, namely, the division and separation of his share by metes and bounds. A similar view of the said decision was taken in Soundararajam v. Arunachalam Ohetty (3).

It is obvious that a separation of one branch of the family from another does not necessarily put an end to the joint management of the estate by the manager on behalf of all, for a partition by metes and bounds may not take place till several years later. In an ordinary suit for a partition of the joint family property, where there has been no previous separation, the enquiry, as explained in Balakrishna Aiyar v. Muthusawny Aiyar (4) and Porneshwar Dubey v. Gobind Dubey (5), is, in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct, directed to ascertain the divisible assets, the manager not being liable to account for his past dealings with the family income. He cannot, however, escape liability to account for the income once a separation has taken place.

The result of the procedure, adopted by the Court below, is that while the defendants have been allowed all the expenses incurred by them on objects personal to them or in which the plaintiffs had no concern, no such allowance has been made in favour of the plaintiffs. The defendants have kept their personal or separate income to themselves and have charged the family funds in their possession with all expenses personal to them or their branch of the family during the progress of the suit. We cannot, however, ignore the altered position created by the suit for partition, and have, therefore, to examine in the case of each disputed item, whether the expenditure was incurred by the defendants for the benefit of their branch or for the common benefit of the entire family.

The first item in dispute is that shown under head 15, being a sum of Rs. 2,750 said to have been paid to Pandit Bihari Lal Raina on account of a deposit made by him prior to the institution of the suit for partition. The contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs is that the total amount deposited by Bihari Lal Raina was Rs. 13,737-0-6, while the amount advanced on his account or repaid to him from time to time was Rs. 11,787-0-6, the balance due to him being only Rs. 1,950. The defendants, on the other hand, have filed an extract from their account books, stating that Rs. 13,737-0-6 were deposited by Bihari Lal Raina and Rs. 5,450 were advanced on his account or repaid to him. In his deposition of the 2nd November 1907, Bihari Lal Raina stated that out of the money deposited by him Ram Narain advanced some loans and sent him the deeds obtained in lieu thereof. In the absence of the original account books, which are not on the record, it is difficult to say how much was actually left uninvested and how much remained due to Bihari Lal Raina. The only objection taken by the plaintiffs in the Court below under this head was that the alleged deposit or amanat by Bihari Lal Raina was fictitious. They admitted that if the deposit was shown, they would have no objection to the amount paid to Bihari Lal Raina being debited in the account. The amount of deposit being no longer in dispute, it was for the plaintiffs to show that Bihari Lal Raina has been overpaid. They have given no evidence on that point. The receipts filed prove that Rs. 2,750 have been paid to Bihari Lal Raina between the 27th June 1905 and the 3rd May 1908 and the Court below has rightly included the said payment in the debit side of the account.

The second item in dispute is that entered in head 17, being payments made on account of hundis drawn by Pandit Bakht Narain after the institution of the suit. Some of these hundis were drawn before the date of the suit and the money borrowed by means of them was credited in the joint family funds. The validity of the transactions represented by those hundis cannot be questioned in the case. Out of the five hundis drawn by Pandit Bakht Narain after the institution of the suit, one for Rs. 2,000 in favour of Mahadeo Prasad is shown to have been drawn for the payment of revenue, another for Rs. 2,500 in favour of Govind Prasad for the payment of the decree for profits obtained by the co-sharers of Jaliamau. The remaining three hundis, that is, one for Rs. 2,500 and another for Rs. 1,000 both in favour of Govind Prasad, dated the 23rd July 1905, and another for Rs. 5,000 in favour of Mahadeo Prasad, dated the 29th July 1905, are not shown to have been drawn for joint family purposes. These hundis were drawn within nine days of the institution of the suit for partition. The purposes for which these loans were taken not having been established, they cannot be charged against the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to have the said hundis excluded from the account, that is, from the debit and credit sides, or, in other words, to have Rs. 903-2-6 on account of interest paid on them deducted from the expenditure shown under this heading.

The third item in dispute relates to head 19, being the amount paid to Pandit Suraj Narain on account of costs awarded to him by the decree for partition. The decree directed that the costs of the suit were to be paid out of the estate and this payment has, therefore, been rightly included in the accounts. The contention of the plaintiffs is that their expenses in that suit, other than those which were awarded to them, should also have been paid out of the joint family funds. But no such claim was put forward before the Court below or in the memorandum of appeal and it cannot, therefore, be considered.

The fourth item in dispute relates to head 20, which deals with the expenses of the suits filed by the manager in connection with the estate. It appears that in 1907 a suit for defamation was brought by Mr. Manuel against Pandit Iqbal Narain in connection with a statement made by the latter in a civil suit in which Mr. Manuel appeared for the present plaintiffs. The amount spent by Pandit Iqbal Narain in his defence was Rs. 118-1-0. But this amount cannot be charged against the joint family property, because the alleged act of defamation was one for which the joint family could in no way be held responsible.

A sum of Rs. 500 was paid to Pandit Bakht Narain on the 31st October 1905 to obtain redemption of the village Tatera which was part of the joint family property. The plaintiffs have been allowed a share in that village and are liable with the other members of the family for the amount spent in redeeming it from the mortgagees.

The plaintiffs have also taken objection to the amount spent by Pandit Bakht Narain in the suit filed by him against Ratan Lal for the recovery of the property belonging to the joint family which was in his possession. Pandit Bakht Narain originally claimed the entire property; but when Pandit Suraj Narain subsequently filed a suit for the recovery of his half share, Pandit Bakht Narain had to confine his claim to the half share which belonged to him. The trial of the two cases practically proceeded together, and the plaintiffs were indirectly benefited by the proceedings taken by Pandit Bakht Narain to establish the title of the joint family to that property. The expenses in that suit have, therefore, been rightly charged against the joint family fund.

An objection is also taken to the expenses incurred in a suit for money filed by Bihari Lal against Gajraj Singh. That money was lent out of the deposit made by Bihari Lal with the joint family. The joint family had undertaken to invest the money for the benefit of Bihari Lal and whatever expenses were incurred in that suit should be debited in Bihari Lal's account.

There is also an objection to the money spent in connection with certain suits filed against Ram Singh, the Zemindar of Bharsara, who was an agent of the joint family. These suits were defended for the protection of the interest of the joint family in the village Bharsara, in which Ratan Lal wanted to make realizations after the death of Pandit Ram Narain to the prejudice of the joint family. The defendants sought the assistance of Ram Singh, who was a co sharer in the village, and recovered rents through him. Ratan Lal then sued the tenants for rents and, on the tenants pleading payment to Ram Singh, expenses had to be incurred to support the right of Ram Singh to realise the same. It is immaterial whether Ram Singh was eventually successful or not in justifying what he had done, because what he had done was done at the instance of the joint family, whose agent he had become, and the joint family was in justice bound to bear the expenses connected with his defence.

The next objection relates to head 22 and is connected with the suit brought against Ratan Lal, in which Rs. 6,361-9-3 were awarded as costs to him. The amount has been rightly paid out of the joint family funds, as the suit was filed for the protection of the joint family interest. In connection with that suit various other expenses were incurred which are entered in the account books and they have rightly been included in the account.

An objection is also taken to an item of Rs. 200-2-6 entered under head 24 as having been incurred in connection with the suit for defamation filed by Mr. Manuel against Pandit Iqbal Narain. For the reasons given under head 20 this item must be excluded from the account.

The next objection relates to head 30, which represents the salaries paid to the servants of the estate. The plaintiffs contend that some of these servants were the personal servants of Pandit Bakht Narain and his sons. There is nothing, however, to show that any of these servants were personal and that their services were not available to the plaintiffs. Their salaries have, therefore, been properly charged against the joint family funds.

An objection is also taken to certain expenses under head 32 incurred in journeys by rail or ekka to Fyzabad, Lucknow, Jaunpur and other places. It is suggested that these expenses were incurred by Pandit Iqbal Narain and his brothers in connection with the prosecution of their defence in the suit for partition. It is difficult at this distance of time to say for which purpose each journey was undertaken, but assuming that it was undertaken in connection with the litigation then pending, the joint family would still be liable for the same, as the decree passed in the suit for partition directed that the costs of the partition suit were to be paid out of the estate. The same principle might well be applied to expenses incurred out of Court.

The next objection relates to head 44, comprising, among other things, the expenses in connection with the death anniversary of Bari Babuji, that is, the widow of Pandit Raj Narain, and the purchase of books and other articles. It is difficult to say that the expenses were incurred for the personal benefit of any of the defendants and they have been rightly included in the accounts. The law books purchased on the 6th July 1905 may have been as much for the benefit of one member of the family as of the other, and the objection of the plaintiffs in regard to this item is not entitled to any weight.

There remain certain objections taken by the plaintiffs with reference to the items entered under heads 49 to 53. Head 49 relates to the expenses in connection with the marriage of the daughter of Pandit Iqbal Narain in 1905 and the marriage of Dharam Narain in 1906. Head 50 relates to the expenses incurred in connection with the illness and death of Pandit Bakht Narain in 1906. Head 51 deals with the expenses incurred in connection with the illness of the wife of Pandit Iqbal Narain. Head 52 deals with the expenses incurred in connection with the maintenance of the defendants after the death of Pandit Bakht Narain. Head 53 deals with the advances made to Pandit Bakht Narain between the 20th June 1905 and the 6th April 1906; the total amount being Rs. 6,830-4-6. So far as the expenses entered under heads 49 to 53 are concerned, they are purely personal to the branch of the family represented by Pandit Bakht Narain and his sons, and they will be charged accordingly against their share of the income. It is not fair to the plaintiffs that the expenses of the maintenance of Pandit Bakht Narain and his sons and grandsons should be paid out of the family funds while the pay and income enjoyed by Pandit Bakht Narain and his sons should be kept by them intact, and similar expenditure incurred by the plaintiffs for their support excluded. The plaintiffs cannot properly be made liable for the same. In regard to the sum of Rs. 1,509-7-6 entered under head 53, the Fyzabad account books show that all that money was spent for estate purposes. The objection of the plaintiffs in regard to the same cannot, therefore, be sustained.

With reference to the amount shown under head 56 as having been invested in loans and mortgages, it has been pointed out that the bond executed by Ohhutki Singh for Rs. 944-8-0 on the 30th October 1903 and the bond executed by Mannu Singh of Makanpur for Rs. 20 on the 16th November 1905 have not been filed or treated as forming part of the joint family property. The money advanced by means of those bonds has been included in the expenditure shown in the accounts. The defendants do not contest the right of the plaintiffs to claim a half share in the said bonds but they have not filed them in Court along with the rest.

The cross-objections filed by the defendants relate to head 21, dealing with the expenses incurred by them in the suit filed by Pandit Suraj Narain, head 23, dealing with the expenses incurred by them in connection with the mutation proceedings instituted on the death of Pandit Bakht Narain, and head 65, sub-heads 1 and 12, touching the deductions made on account of the profits of Jaliamau from 1315 Fasli and the costs of the civil appeal filed by the defendants in this Court from the decree passed in the suit for partition. As regards the expenses incurred in the suit for partition, the details of which are entered in the account books and the correctness of which is not questioned, the defendants are entitled to charge them against the joint family funds, because the decree passed in the suit for partition so directs it. The expenses incurred in the appeal are similarly to be paid out of the joint family funds, because the appeal is only a proceeding in the suit. The expenses incurred in the mutation proceedings consequent on the death of Pandit Bakht Narain cannot, however, be so charged, because the plaintiffs have no concern therewith. In regard to the share of the profits due to Bisheshwar Nath, a co sharer of Jaliama, which were paid by the defendants after the 9th March 1909, it is sufficient to say that the liability which the defendants have satisfied was one chargeable against the entire joint family, and the plaintiffs cannot be prejudiced if the amount due to Bisheshwar Nath is treated as a debt due by the joint family which the family has since discharged.

There is also an objection as regards an item of Rs. 1,732-14-3 under head 64, relating to the money advanced to Ram Singh. It is admitted that a mortgage-bond was taken from Ram Singh on the 6th September 1909 in lieu of that money. The plaintiffs cannot claim both a share in that money and a share in that mortgage bond. The Court below says that the defendants are willing to give the plaintiffs a half share in that mortgage bond but as the bond was taken after the 9th March 1909, up to which the accounts have to be adjusted, the bond subsequently taken by the defendants cannot be taken into account. The defendants will be deemed to be the sole owners of that bond.

The other objections taken by either party in their grounds of appeal are not pressed. The amount due to the plaintiffs according to the above account is Rs. 20,573.

Both the appeals are, therefore, allowed in part, the result being that instead of Rs. 12,409-1-4½ the plaintiffs will get a decree for the above amount with proportionate costs here and below against the defendants, who will get their costs in proportion from the plaintiffs in this appeal.

The bond of Chhutku Singh and Mannu Singh above referred to will be added to the list of the joint property in which the plaintiffs have a half share. The rest of the decree of the Court below will be confirmed.

Appeals partly allowed.

JUDGMENT.—I agree with the view taken by the lower Court in this case, that the terms of the agreement between plaintiff and his partner, defendant No. 1, do not necessarily bear the meaning attached to them by the applicant. The clause, in my opinion, means that if a debtor of the firm pleaded that he had paid defendant No. 1, the plaintiff would, after the dissolution of the partnership which left him the sole owner of the business, settle the matter with the debtor and whatever the result, would not hold the defendant No. 1 liable. It is impossible to believe that the plaintiff intended to agree to absolve any debtor who claimed to have paid defendant No. 1 whether that debtor had really paid him or not. The words jama kharch karna may no doubt mean "to book as received and struck off as applied," but this is not the literal or necessary meaning. Even if the words bore this meaning, which in my opinion they do not, the defendant-applicant, who was not a party to the contract and with whom there was no privity of contract, cannot gain any advantage by the contract as he certainly was not put in the position of a cestui que trust, vide Laxman Bhat v. Govinda (1) and Seth Ramlal v. Seth Narsinglass (2). It does not appear to make any difference that the

Where a portion of the mortgage consideration is left with the mortgagee to redeem certain prior mortgages existing on the property and no particular time is specified in the deed for such redemption, it is the duty of the mortgagee, in accordance with the principles laid down in sections 46 and 55 of the Contract Act, to redeem the prior mortgages within a reasonable time, i.e., by the first date upon which redemption is obtainable. The Hon'ble Pandit Gokaran Nath Misra and Pandit Harkaran Nath Misra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant appellant in this case is a mortgagee of the plaintiff-respondent. A suit was brought by the latter for the purpose of recovering a sum of Rs. 800, which he claimed to be due to him by way of damages for breach of the mortgage contract.

The Court of first instance awarded the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 615-3-0. This decree has been affirmed in substance by the Judge of the lower Appellate Court, who modified it only to a small extent. The defendant now appeals, and his case practically is that the suit as framed was not maintainable and that the plaintiff had no right to recover.

In order to understand the matters in issue between the parties, it is necessary to state that on the 21st of June 1902 Balwant Singh and his brother Gur Bakhsh mortgaged a $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas share in Mauza Kakumau to Partab Singh for a sum of Rs. 4,100. The mortgage is professed to be a mortgage with possession and the mortgaged property included the sir rights of the mortgagors. It seems that actual physical possession was not delivered to the mortgagee under this mortgage but that for a number of years he received his share of profits from the mortgagors. On the 12th of July 1910, Balwant Singh alone executed another mortgage of the same $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas in consideration of a loan of Rs. 9,000. The intention of the parties by this second transaction was to discharge the earlier mortgage of the 21st of June 1902.

When the mortgage of 1902 was made, it is admitted that a sum of Rs. 1,400 was left with the mortgagee Partab Singh to pay off certain prior mortgages with possession which had been executed in favour of Hazari Lal and Sheo Lal. These mortgagees were in possession of a number of specified plots the aggregate area of which came to 132 bighas odd and when the sum of PARTAB SINGH v. BALWANT SINGH.

Rs. 1,400 was left with Partab Singh to redeem these earlier charges, the intention was that he after redemption was to get possession of one-half of this area of 132 bighas, the other half being made over to the mortgagors.

The mortgagee failed to pay off the prior mortgages and at the time the mortgage with which we are now concerned (namely, the mortgage of the 12th July 1910) was executed, Rs. 1,400 was still with the mortgagee. Again an agreement was made between the parties that Partab Singh should apply this sum of Rs. 1,400 in discharge of the earlier mortgages. It is an admitted fact that up to the date of this suit he had failed to do so. The plaintiff Balwant Singh now comes to Court and claims that by reason of Partab Singh's failure to redeem these mortgages he has suffered loss, inasmuch as if redemption had been made in accordance with the contract he would have been in possession of a one-half share of this area of 132 bighas odd and would have received the profits thereof. Consequently the plaintiff claimed a sum of Rs. 492, being the profits of this half share of the area described for a period of 6 years before the suit.

The Court of first instance held that the plaintiff could not succeed in getting profits for the full period claimed but awarded profits for a period of five years. It is to be observed that the plaintiff was not claiming this sum of Rs. 1,400 from his mortgages. Both the Courts below have stated quite correctly that a claim of this sort could not succeed for that would mean enforcing a contract to lend money. They were both of opinion, however, that the plaintiff had been damnified by the refusal of the mortgagee to discharge the prior mortgages for which purpose he had the money in hand and that he was entitled accordingly to the damages he claimed.

On this part of the case the argument here is that there was no breach of contract on the part of the mortgagee and that consequently the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The main contention on this point is that neither the deed of 1902 nor the deed of 1910 contains any stipulation regarding the time at which redemption is to be made by the mortgagee Partab Singh.

I am unable to accede to this argument. It is quite true that no express covenant was recorded in the deed of mortgage requiring Partab Singh to redeem the prior charges at any particular time, but in accordance with the principles laid down in sections 46 and 55 of the Indian Contract Act it must be taken that, in the absence of any specification of the time for performance, it was the duty of Partab Singh to redeem the prior charges within a reasonable time. It is to be noted here that the mortgages in favour of Hazari Lal and Sheo Lal were only redeemable in the fallow season of Jeth. The mortgage with which we are now concerned was executed on the 12th of July 1910 and it may reasonably, therefore, be said that Partab Singh should have redeemed the earlier charges by the 1st of July 1911, that being the first date upon which the redemption was obtainable. I may mention here that in the Courts below the defendant-appellant did not seek to excuse his non-performance of the contract on the ground that no particular time for performance had been specified. On the contrary he tried to justify his action by saying that the mortgagor Balwant Singh had not performed his portion of the contract. This argument relates to that stipulation in the mortgage-deed by which the mortgagor contracted to relinquish his sir rights in some of the lands mortgaged. Both the Courts below have very properly held that the defendant could not be excused or justified on this ground, inasmuch as the contract for the relinquishment of sir rights is an illegal contract which cannot be enforced. I have no doubt, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages under this head.

With regard to the plea of limitation contained in the third paragraph of the memorandum of appeal that must be rejected. The claim of the plaintiff was not limited, in my opinion, to a claim for 3 years for it is based upon the breach of a contract in writing and registered.

The other point to be dealt with relates to an item of Rs. 1,018-8-0, which is referred to in the mortgage-deed of the 12th of July 1910. It seems that at the time when this mortgage was executed the mortgagor Balwant Singh had failed for 2 years to render to the mortgagee his profits in respect of the $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas share which had been mortgaged to him.

The years in question were the years 1312 and 1313 Fasli. When the mortgage of the 12th of July 1910 came to be written, a sum of Rs. 1,018 was allowed to the mortgagee in respect of the profits of a $2\frac{1}{2}$ biswas share for these two years. According to the case of the plaintiff now this statement of the account in the mortgage-deed is a mistake and that as a matter of fact a much smaller sum than Rs. 1,018 represented the aggregate amount of profits which was due to Partab Singh for the two years in question. Both the Courts below have examined the account in this respect and they have both held on the evidence of the Patwari, which they accepted as correct, that the statement in the mortgage-deed that a sum of Rs. 1,018-8-0 was due in respect of these two years to Partab Singh is a clear mistake. There was evidence before the Court to show that at the time this mortgage of 1910 was drawn up no accurate calculation of the profits was made and it is said that this sum of Rs. 1,018 was set down merely at random. On the findings come to by both the Courts it is not possible to doubt that there was a serious mistake in the statement of the profits. It has been argued before me that the plaintiff is bound by the statement in the mortgage-deed and that he is not now at liberty to plead that the amount of the profits was erroneously stated to be Rs. 1,018-8-0. The argument is that as an account was made up at the time which was accepted by the plaintiff mortgagor, he cannot be allowed to resile from his agreement. But I have just stated that the evidence shows that no account was really taken and that this amount was set down merely by way of guess. There is no merit, therefore, in the argument and, I think, it was open to the plaintiff to show that there was a mistake in the statement of the profits. Here again it is to be observed that the plaintiff is not asking the defendant to hand over to him the amount by which the sum of Rs. 1,018 odd exceeded the real amount which was due. He is only claiming interest on the excess amount and in my opinion he is entitled to that relief, the fact being that the mortgagee is in possession and receiving the profits of the property in lieu of interest on a sum which is found not to have been owing to him. It is to be noticed here that according to the terms of the deed of mortgage there is to be no accounting between the parties at the time of redemption. I can see no reason why in the present suit the plaintiff should not claim interest on the excess amount just referred to.

Another point which is argued is that the Court below was wrong in allowing interest at the rate of 12 per cent. I see no force in this contention. The rate seems to me to be a reasonable rate.

Lastly exception is taken to the finding of the lower Appellate Court as to the amount by which the sum of Rs. 1,018 odd exceeds the sum which was really due. After examining the calculation of the Court below I think the learned Judge was right and that the calculation which was made in the Court of first instance was erroneous.

The appeal fails on all points and is dismissed with costs.

A suit instituted under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is in fact a suit for a declaration that the Record of Rights is wrong. JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 16th September 1915, confirming the decision of the Munsif of the same place. The suit was brought under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Though the case was transferred to the Civil Court for the purpose of trial, still the suit was a suit instituted under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Now, what is the proper Court-fee in a suit instituted under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act? There is a clear decision of this Court in the case of Satis Chandra Giri v. Gopal Chandra Rai (1) that a suit under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is a suit for a declaratory decree within the meaning of Article 17, clause (3) of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act and that, therefore, the plaint in such a suit does not require an ad valorem stamp. On the other hand, the learned Judges of the Courts below have relied on the decision of this Court in the case of Ohandi Charan Laha v. Manoranjan Chattopadhyaya (2), where it was held that a suit brought under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; which was transferred to the Civil Court and in which there were claimed other reliefs, might be valued on an ad valorem basis. The judgment in that case made certain remarks and amongst them we find this: "No general rule governing all the cases," that is, all the cases under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, "can be laid down; but the question must be decided on the facts of each special case." If there is no general rule—and in the view of the learned Judges who decided the case of Satis Chandra Giri v. Gopal Chandra Rai (1) there is no general rule, and in the view of the learned Judges in the case of Ohandi Charan Laha v. Manoranjan Chattopadhyaya (2) there is a general rule—I may say so without disrespect that the learned Judges who decided the case of Satis Chandra Giri v. Gopal Chandra Rai (1) were bound by the decision in the case of Ohandi Charan Laha v. Manoranjan Chattopadhyaya (2) and, as they said that there was no general rule but that each case must be decided on the facts of that particular case, I think we should follow the earlier authority and go back to the rule that has been clearly and definitely laid down, namely, that a suit instituted under the provisions of section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act—notwithstanding these badly drawn up plaints that come from the Mofussil—is in fact a suit for a declaration that the Record of Rights is wrong and that the mere fact that a plaint has been inartistically drawn up does not alter the nature of the suit and that such a suit, as laid down in the case of Satis Chandra Giri v. Gopal Chandra Rai (1), is in fact a suit for a declaration and not chargeable with an ad valorem fee. In that view, I think the present appeal must be allowed and the case must be remitted to the primary Court for trial on the merits. Costs will abide the result.

judicata—Hindu Law—Widow, decree against, whether bars suit of reversioner.

Where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in a female heir, a decree fairly and properly obtained against her in regard to the estate is, in the absence of fraud or collusion, binding on the reversionary heir; and where merits are tried and the trial is fair and honest, a Hindu lady otherwise qualified to represent the estate in litigation does not cease to be so qualified merely owing to a personal disability or a disadvantage as a litigant. [p. 559, col. 2; p. 560, col. 1.]

A Hindu widow sued for a declaration that she had not validly adopted the defendant as a son to her deceased husband. Both Courts in India dismissed the suit, holding that by her own acts she was personally estopped from denying the validity of the adoption. The Privy Council affirmed that decision and also held that she had authority from her deceased husband to make the adoption in question and that the defendant had been validly adopted. On the death of the widow the next reversioner sued to eject the adopted son, on the ground that inasmuch as the widow had no authority from her deceased husband to make an adoption the defendant had not been validly adopted:

Held, that though the rule of res judicata, as enacted in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was not strictly applicable to the case, the principle of res judicata applied, and that the decision in the widow's suit on the question whether the defendant had or had not been validly adopted, barred the suit of the reversioner. [p. 557, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the High Court, Allahabad, Sir Henry Richards, C. J., and Justice Sir P. C. Banerji, dated the 29th, April 1915, reported as 30 Ind. Cas. 657, affirming that of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 16th February 1914, where the plaintiffs-appellants' suit was dismissed with costs.

FACTS.—The plaintiffs-appellants brought the present suit against the defendants-respondents to eject them from an estate called the Landhaura Raj, alleging that the first respondent Balwant Singh was not the validly adopted son of Raja Raghubir Singh, a former proprietor of the estate, inasmuch as the widow of the latter, Rani Dharam Kunwar, adopted the first respondent without the authority therefor from her deceased husband. The question whether the Rani had authority to adopt the first respondent had already been the subject of litigation between the adoptive mother and the adopted son. That litigation had come up on appeal to His Majesty in Council, and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee had held that the Rani had authority from her husband to adopt the first respondent and that his adoption was valid: see Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (1).

In the present suit the Additional Subordinate Judge held that the Privy Council decision was binding on the plaintiffs-appellants and that their suit was accordingly barred by the rule of res judicata. He, therefore, made a decree dismissing their suit with costs. On appeal the High Court by a majority affirmed that decree. The only question for determination in this appeal was whether the present suit was barred by the rule of res judicata.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C., and W. L. Richards for the [Appellants.—The question is whether the first plaintiff, the next reversioner, is estopped by the rule of res judicata from denying that the defendant Balwant Singh was validly adopted by Rani Dharam Kunwar. The plaintiff says that the Rani had no authority from her deceased husband to make any adoption. This question of authority was issue No. 3 in the Rani's suit. That issue was neither heard nor decided by the Courts in India: see Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (2). The Court of first instance had excluded evidence on that issue. It appears from Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (1) that this Board also held that the Rani was estopped owing to her own acts from raising the question as to the validity of the adoption. The Rani could not, therefore, be said to have been then representing the estate. She was acting not in the interest of the estate but in her own interest.

As some evidence on the question of authority was admittedly excluded, it is submitted that the issue had not been heard and finally decided within the meaning of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The case is not governed by that section but by the rule laid down in Katama Natchiar v. Rajah of Shivagunga (3). But as already pointed out, the Rani was not representing the estate and there was no fair trial of the issue as evidence relating to it was excluded. The finding of the Board was based on the Rani's statement in Baldeo's suit, but that statement was not evidence against the plaintiff, and the finding based on such evidence could not bind the plaintiff.

The issue as to authority was not a necessary issue in the Rani's case, and consequently a decision thereon does not operate as a bar in the present suit: Concha v. Concha (4).

The deed of adoption shows that the Rani took an estate for life under the Will of her late husband and Balwant Singh took the remainder thereunder. The Rani could not, therefore, dispute Balwant Singh's title. She was then a devisee and could not represent the estate: Board v. Board (5) and Dalton v. Fitzgerald (6). Reference was also made to Robinson v. Duleep Singh (7). What the Board then did was to merely express an opinion in order to deter the reversioner from further litigation.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. C., and J. M. Parikh, for the Respondents.—As to the contention based on the Will of the late Raja, the Rani could only take an estate for life under the Will; if the Will is good, it gives the Rani authority to adopt and would, therefore, put an end to the case. The English authorities on the question of res judicata are of no value in an Indian case, which must be decided on the construction of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

In a suit against a widow in respect of the estate the decision is binding on the reversionary heir: Katama Natchier v. Rajah of Shivagunga (3), Jugul Kishore v. Jotendro Mohun Tagore (8), Pertabnarrain Singh v. Trilokinath Singh (9) and Hari Nath

Chatterjee v. Mothurmohun Goswami (10). It has been held that section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, is not exhaustive and a decision against one reversioner binds another, though the second does not claim through the first: Chiruvolu Punnamma v. Chiruvolu Perrazu (11). In Venkatanarayana Pillay v. Subbammal (12) the Board held that a remote reversioner was entitled to revive a suit brought by a near reversioner.

Section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure deals with issues as well as suits: Kameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari Ruttan Koer (13) and Thakur Tirbhuvan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (14). To determine what was in issue one must look not to the decree but to the judgment and the pleadings: Jagatjit Singh v. Sarabjit Singh (15). The only decision that operates as res judicata is the decision of the final Court of Appeal. There was a final decision by the Board that the Rani had authority to adopt and that Balwant Singh was validly adopted. That decision is binding on the plaintiffs. Reference was also made to Abdullah Ashgar Ali Khan v. Ganesh Dass (16).

Mr. Dunne, K. C., replied.

RISAL SINGH v. BALWAT SINGH.

the Board on the 23rd April '912, in an appeal to His Majesty in Council in a previous suit, in which Balwant Singh, the principal defendant in this suit, was the defendant, and the late Rani Dharam Kunwar was the plaintiff, operated as a bar to the maintenance of this suit, which is brought by plaintiffs who were not parties to the previous suit, and do not represent either party to the previous suit. That decision is reported as Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (1).

In this suit the plaintiffs are Chaudhri Risal Singh and Lala Fateh Chand. The plaintiff Chaudhri Risal Singh claims in this suit possession of part of the Landhaura Raj, which is a large estate of great value; his claim is based on an allegation that he is the heir of Raja Jagat Prakash Singh, whom he alleges to have been the last male owner of the estate. The other plaintiff, Lala Fateh Chand, alleges that before suit Chaudhri Risal Singh conveyed to him the other part of the estate, and he claims possession of that other part of the estate as the grantee of Chaudhri Risal Singh. The plaintiffs also claim mesne profits.

The principal defendant to this suit is Balwant Singh, through whom the other defendants claim title. Balwant Singh's case is that the estate vested in him as the adopted son of the late Raja Raghubir Singh, to whom he alleges that he was validly adopted by the late Dharam Kunwar, the widow of Raja Raghubir Singh, who admittedly died possessed of the estate. The factum of the adoption was denied by the plaintiffs, but it is no longer disputed, and cannot now be disputed; the plaintiffs, however, allege that Rani Dharam Kunwar had no authority to adopt a son to her husband, and further that if she ever had authority to adopt a son to her husband that authority was a limited authority, and was exhausted by previous adoptions made by her before she went through the form of adopting Balwant Singh. The decision of the Board, which has been held by the Courts below to operate as a bar to the maintenance of this suit, related to the adoption of Balwant Singh as a son to her late husband by Rani Dharam Kunwar.

Kunwar on the 12th November 1912 the plaintiff Chaudhri Risal Singh was the next nearest reversioner, and was as such entitled to the estate of Landhaura. That issue as to the status of Chaudhri Risal Singh has not been tried, and is irrelevant if the suit is barred by the decision of the Board of the 23rd April 1912.

There has been much litigation relating to the title to the estate of which Raja Raghubir Singh died possessed, and in order to understand the case which was before the Board in 1912 it is necessary briefly to refer to that previous litigation and to the position of the several parties to it. Raja Raghubir Singh died on the 23rd April 1868 and at the time of his death he left no son living; his widow, Rani Dharam Kunwar, was then enceinte, and after his death she, on the 16th December 1861, gave birth to Raja Jagat Prakash Singh, who was his posthumous child. Raja Jagat Prakash Singh died in childhood on the 31st August 1870 and on his death Rani Dharam Kunwar succeeded to the possession of the family property in right of her interest for life in it as his mother and heiress. The fact that she alleged that she obtained title to the property under an oral Will of her husband, Raghubir Singh, is immaterial. On the 4th March 1877 Rani Dharam Kunwar adopted Tofa Singh as a son to Raja Raghubir Singh. Tofa Singh, then known as Raja Narendra Singh, died in childhood about two and a half years after his adoption. On the 20th January 1883, Rani Dharm Kunwar adopted another boy, named Ram Sarup, as a son to Raja Raghubir Singh. Ram Sarup, then known as Ram Padab Singh, died in June 1885. On the 13th January 1899, Rani Dharam Kunwar adopted Balwant Singh, the principal defendant in this suit, as a son to Raja Raghubir Singh. On the 13th January 1899, Chaudhri Ram Niwaz, who was the father of Balwant Singh, executed a deed, by which he acknowledged that he had given his son, Balwant Singh, then 16 years old, to Rani Dharam Kunwar, widow of Raja Raghubir Singh, deceased, Rais of Landhaura, as an adopted son for her and her husband, and stated that—"the usual religious ceremonies and those connected with the biradri have been performed with all publicity to-day. From to-day the said son has no connection left with his natural family. From to-day the said son will have those rights in the whole of the property left by Raja Raghubir Singh, deceased, and possessed by the said Rani, which an adopted son legally acquires. But it has been agreed between me, the executant, and the said Rani, according to the provisions of the Will and permission of Raja Raghubir Singh, deceased, that she shall, till the end of her life, continue to be the owner and possessor of the whole estate and property of every description belonging to the said Raja which exists at present or may be acquired in future; and as long as she lives all sorts of management and supervision of the estate shall rest with her as its owner."

On the 1st May 1900, one Baldeo Singh, claiming to be the reversionary heir of Raja Raghubir Singh, brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur against Rani Dharam Kunwar and Balwant Singh to have the adoption of Balwant Singh set aside. In that suit evidence as to the alleged adoption was taken. The main contention of Baldeo Singh, so far as the adoption of Balwant Singh was concerned, was that Raja Raghubir Singh had not given to Rani Dharam Kunwar authority to adopt a son to him, and that any authority which Raja Raghubir Singh may have given to his wife to make an adoption was not an authority which enabled her to make successive adoptions. No oral evidence to prove that an authority to adopt had not been given to Rani Dharam Kunwar by Raja Raghubir Singh was apparently procurable; Rani Dharam Kunwar did not give evidence in that suit, but in her written statement in that suit she alleged that she had "under valid authority and after due proclamation adopted Balwant Singh, defendant No. 2, and the aforesaid adoption is in every way proper." Her Pleading in that suit stated to the Court that the authority to adopt was oral, and as to the nature and scope of her authority to adopt, said that Raja Raghubir Singh's object in giving his wife authority to adopt was that "in the event of Rani Dharam Kunwar, who was then pregnant, giving birth to a daughter, or of a son being born and dying, she should adopt, and in the event of the death of that adopted son, she should again adopt, and in the event of the last-named also dying, she had authority to adopt again, and so on." There was documentary evidence put before the Subordinate Judge, and four witnesses were called to prove the oral authority to adopt, but the Subordinate Judge did not believe these witnesses, and he found that Rani Dharam Kunwar had no authority to adopt Balwant Singh, as the authority was not one authorising her to make successive adoptions. Having found, however, that Baldeo Singh had failed to prove that he was a reversioner, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit, but in his decree he inserted his finding against the validity of the adoption. The decree came on appeal before the High Court at Allahabad, and the appeal was dismissed; but the High Court, on the application of Balwant Singh, struck out of the decree of the Subordinate Judge his finding as to the invalidity of the adoption, on the ground that, Baldeo Singh having failed to prove that he was a reversioner, the issue as to authority to adopt did not arise and was irrelevant. That application was resisted by Rani Dharam Kunwar, and her Advocate frankly informed the High Court that her object in wishing to have the finding as to the invalidity of the adoption retained in the decree of the Subordinate Judge was that it might be used as res judicata in future litigation between her and Balwant Singh.

Before Baldeo Singh's suit was dismissed Rani Dharam Kunwar and Balwant Singh had quarrelled. Balwant Singh was claiming his full rights as an adopted son and was refusing to be bound by the terms as to Rani Dharam Kunwar's position with regard to the ownership, management, and control of the property that had come from Raja Raghubir Singh, which had been agreed to by Chaudhri Ram Niwaz in the deed of the 13th January 1899, and she determined to repudiate the adoption.

On the 7th January 1905, Rani Dharam Kunwar brought a suit against Balwant Singh in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saharanpur and in her plaint alleged that Raja Raghubir Singh had never given her authority to adopt a son, and prayed that it might be declared that she had no power to adopt Balwant Singh, and had in fact never adopted him according to any ceremony under the Hindu Law, and that a document of the 13th January 1899, in her name as the executant which purported to be a deed of adoption in favour of Balwant Singh, was void and ineffectual as against her.

The deed of adoption of the 13th January 1899 which Rani Dharam Kunwar sought to have declared void was a registered deed in her name and under her seal, in which she alleged that Raja Raghubir Singh when he became hopeless of recovery in his last illness made the following Will in her favour, she being then pregnant:—

"If (God forbid !) you give birth to a daughter, or if a son be born but dies after his birth, I strictly order you to adopt some boy to me, so that he might perform my sraddh ceremony and yours, and perpetuate my name, and after your death become the absolute owner and possessor of the whole of my estate. If (God forbid !) the son who might be adopted under this authority should die in your lifetime you will have power to adopt another boy."

In that deed Rani Dharam Kunwar, amongst several other things, also alleged that she on the day on which the deed bears date, after performing the necessary ceremonies, adopted Balwant Singh, son of Chaudhri Ram Niwaz, to herself and her husband in the presence of the gentry, the district authorities, and other European gentlemen and the members of her biradri; and that Chaudhri Ram Niwaz gave Balwant Singh to her as an adopted son. That deed was on the 19th January 1899 duly registered by the Sub-Registrar of Rurki, Rani Dharam Kunwar having first personally admitted in the presence of the Sub-Registrar its execution by her. In her plaint in her suit against Balwant Singh she endeavoured to explain away that deed by alleging that she had no knowledge of that deed before July 1904; that she had not got it registered; that it was written in her name without her knowledge on the 13th January 1899 by one Tahauwar Ali, who was her Diwan in charge of her entire business, and was her adviser, and that he had got it registered. She also alleged in her plaint that having learnt during the pendency of Baldeo Singh's suit that Tahauwar Ali was secretly in collusion with Balwant Singh she dismissed him, and she also endeavoured to explain away her written statement in the suit of Baldeo Singh, admitting the adoption of Balwant Singh, and her Pleader's statement in that suit as to her authority to make an adoption, by denying that her written statement and her Pleader's statement had been authorised by her.

In the suit of Rani Dharam Kunwar against Balwant Singh he in his written statement, amongst other things, alleged that Rani Dharam Kunwar had authority to adopt him to Raja Raghubir Singh and that he had been validly adopted. The Subordinate Judge held that Rani Dharam Kunwar was by her acts estopped from denying that Balwant Singh had been validly adopted to Raja Raghubir Singh, and did not try any other issue. The High Court at Allahabad, agreeing with the Subordinate Judge, dismissed the appeal of Rani Dharam Kunwar, and thereupon she appealed to His Majesty in Council and again failed. The facts, which this Board has stated as to the history of the litigation and as to the positions of the parties and their acts, have been derived from the record of the appeal to His Majesty in Council in which the Board gave its decision of the 23rd April 1912. The evidence upon which that decision was arrived at was before the Board in the record of that appeal. It is said that evidence to show that Rani Dharam Kunwar had no authority to adopt Balwant Singh had been excluded in her suit, and that consequently the Board in 1912 ought not to have found that Balwant Singh had been validly adopted. It is true that Rani Dharam Kunwar applied to the Subordinate Judge that evidence should be taken, but it does not appear that she ever applied to have witnesses summoned or tendered any evidence which was rejected. It is difficult to conceive what oral evidence Rani Dharam Kunwar could have produced, except her own personal evidence to prove that she had received from Raja Raghubir Singh no authority to adopt, and if she had given evidence that she had no authority to make the adoption such evidence, having regard to her own acts and documentary evidence on the record, could not have been accepted as true.

Their Lordships in this appeal pressed the learned Counsel who appeared for the appellants to state what oral evidence there was available to prove or to suggest that Raja Raghubir Singh had not in his final illness given to Rani Dharam Kunwar his authority to adopt, but the learned Counsel was not in a position to suggest what oral evidence could have been produced to prove that Raja Raghubir Singh had not given that authority to his wife. The Board in 1912 was satisfied, and rightly satisfied, that no further evidence as to the authority or absence of authority to adopt could be expected to be produced by anybody beyond the evidence then already taken. As appears from the report of the case of Dharam Kunwar v. Balwant Singh (1), the learned Counsel for Rani Dharam Kunwar contended in argument before the Board in 1912 that if it were held that Rani Dharam Kunwar was not estopped from denying that Balwant Singh had been validly adopted, the question arose whether she had any authority to adopt him; and further contended that such authority as she alleged would not extend to the adoption in question. There was ample material in the Appeal Record before the Board in 1912 upon which the Board might find that Raja Raghubir Singh had given authority to Rani Dharam Kunwar to adopt a son to him, and that such authority was a general authority and was not limited to making one or more successive adoptions.

It is clear that the Board in 1912 did intend to decide the question of authority to adopt as a question of fact. In the judgment of the Board it is said:—

"The third question, viz., as to whether the Rani had authority from her husband to adopt the defendant, gives rise to the point which has been argued before their Lordships."

And then their Lordships dealt with the contentions on that subject, and found that Raja Raghubir Singh had given to Rani Dharam Kunwar a general power to adopt which justified her adoption of Balwant Singh, and said:—

"Their Lordships, in reviewing the facts of the case, are of opinion that the question may well be decided as one of fact on the Rani's own statements without recourse to the doctrine of estoppel. In their view she was speaking the truth in Baldeo Singh's action when pleading as to her authority."

It is clear that the reasons of the Board in 1912 for deciding thus as to the facts and for not confining the decision to the question of the estoppel were to quiet any religious scruples, which might have arisen if Raja Raghubir Singh could be said to have a son only by estoppel to perform religious duties, and also to put a stop to further litigation as to the validity of the adoption of Balwant Singh.

There can be no doubt, in their Lordships' opinion, that Rani Dharam Kunwar in her suit against Balwant Singh did, notwithstanding the personal estoppel under which she laboured, represent the estate on the question of fact as to whether Balwant Singh had or had not been validly adopted, and that she represented the estate within the meaning of the rule in Katama Natchiar v. Raja of Shivagunga (3). The principle of law to be applied in such cases was, their Lordships consider, correctly summarised by Mr. Justice Banerji in his judgment in this case thus: "Where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in a female heir a decree fairly and properly obtained against her in regard to the estate is, in the absence of fraud or collusion, binding on the reversionary heir." It cannot be said that there had not been a fair trial by the Board in 1912 of the right in the suit of Rani Dharam Kunwar against Balwant Singh. The right in that suit was his right to the estate as a son validly adopted to Raja Raghubir Singh. It is true, as was pointed out in a judgment of the High Court in this suit, that the rule of res judicata, as enacted in section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, is not strictly applicable in this case, as the plaintiffs were not parties to the suit of Rani Dharam Kunwar against Balwant Singh, and do not claim under a party to that suit, but the principle of res judicata has been applied rightly by the Courts in India so as to bind reversioners by decisions in litigation, fairly and honestly conducted, given for or against Hindu females who represented the estates, as Rani Dharam Kunwar did in her suit against Balwant Singh.

It has been urged by the learned Counsel for the appellants here that Rani Dharam Kunwar cannot be regarded as having represented the estate in her suit against Balwant Singh, as by her acts she was personally estopped from denying that she had validly adopted him to Raja Raghubir Singh. In the absence of all authority, their Lordships cannot decide that a Hindu lady, otherwise qualified to represent an estate in litigation, ceases to be so qualified merely owing to personal disability or disadvantage as a litigant, although the merits are tried and the trial is fair and honest. The principle is that reversioners must risk that, so that there may be an end to litigation.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal fails, and should be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER NO. 279 OF 1917.

July 3, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mullick and Mr. Justice Thornhill.

Sheikh MAULA BUX—PLAINTIFF—

versus

RAGHUBAR GANJHU—DEFENDANT—

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2, 47, O. XXI, r. 90—Execution—Sale set aside on ground of fraud—Order setting aside sale, whether "decree"—Appeal, second, whether lies.

It is not open to a party to impeach an execution sale under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and if a Court does, professing to act under section 47, set aside a sale on the objection of the judgment-debtor in a proceeding between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, the order setting aside the sale will not be a decree. [p. 561, col. 1.]

The language of Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, which gives a Court power to set aside sales on the ground of fraud in publishing and conducting the sale, is wide enough to include cases where fraud is committed after the publication of the sale proclamation. [p. 561, col. 2.]

Where a decree-holder agreed not to proceed with an execution sale on a promise by the judgment-debtor to pay up the whole of the decretal money within two months, but nevertheless proceeded to sell the property in contravention of his agreement:

Held, (1) that the conduct of the decree-holder amounted to fraud in the matter of conducting the sale and that the proper provision under which the judgment-debtor could come and impeach the sale was Order XXI, rule 90 of the Civil Procedure Code; [p. 561, col. 2.]

(2) that no second appeal lay against the order setting aside the sale. [p. 561, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Judicial Commissioner, Oota Nagpur, dated the 22nd May 1917, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Ranchi, dated the 1st January 1916.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The plaintiff got a decree against the defendant for money and the execution with which we are concerned was one which was lodged on the 8th February 1915. In pursuance of that execution petition the plaintiff attached some immovable property belonging to the judgment-debtor, the sale being fixed for the 15th May 1915. The judgment-debtor paid Rs. 40 and got the time for the sale extended till the 15th June, promising not to take any further objection to the regularity of the sale proclamation. On the 15th June the judgment-debtor did not appear and the property was duly sold and purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 412, which represented the balance due on the decree. The sale was confirmed and delivery of possession was made on the 29th July 1915. In August 1915 the judgment-debtor filed an application before the execution Court alleging that after the 15th May the decree-holder agreed not to proceed with the sale on a promise by the judgment-debtor to pay up the whole of the decretal money within two months. The judgment-debtor alleged that by this fraud on the part of the decree-holder he was kept out of all knowledge of the sale till the 29th July. The execution Court as well as the District Judge on appeal have held that the story told by the judgment-debtor is true and that there was fraud on the part of the decree-holder; and the sale has, therefore, been set aside. The present second appeal is filed by the decree-holder against the order setting aside the sale.

Now it is clear that a second appeal will not lie if there is no point of law involved. Upon the appellate judgment of the learned District Judge it is not clear that there is any point of law which requires our interference. The learned Judge has disposed of the case upon the merits and has found as a fact that there was fraud on the part of the decree-holder. The learned Vakil who appears for the appellant before us, however, urges that as the execution case was finally concluded with the delivery of possession, it cannot be said that there was any execution proceeding in the course of which the judgment-debtor was competent to make an objection under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. He says that the order made by the execution Court was an order under section 47 and that it was a decree and that, therefore, a second appeal lies. It is quite clear that the order of the execution Court was not a decree, having regard to the definition of decree in the Civil Procedure Code (section 2). As the law now stands, it would appear that it is not open to a party to impeach a sale under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and that, in any event, if a Court does, professing to act under section 47, set aside a sale on the objection of the judgment-debtor in a proceeding between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder, that order will not be a decree. Order XLIII of the Code now gives a right of appeal against all orders setting aside sales on the ground of irregularity or fraud in the matter of publishing or conducting a sale and, therefore, an order purporting to have been passed under section 47, setting aside a sale, would not be a decree within the meaning of section 2, because under Order XLIII it has been made specially appealable otherwise than as a decree. Therefore the order, if made under section 47, not being a decree, no second appeal will lie.

The learned Vakil then falls back upon another contention, namely, that Order

XXI, rule 90, which gives a Court power to set aside sales on the ground of fraud in publishing and conducting the sale, does not include cases where fraud has been committed after the publication of the sale proclamation. He contends that to obtain relief for such a fraud the judgment-debtor must bring a separate suit. In my opinion the language of Order XXI, rule 90, is sufficiently wide to cover fraud such as has been found in the present case. Here the decree-holder promised not to hold the sale if payment was made within a certain time, but he then fraudulently proceeded to sell the property in contravention of the arrangement made with the judgment-debtor. This would, in my opinion, be fraud in the matter of conducting the sale. Therefore the proper provision of the Civil Procedure Code under which the judgment-debtor could come and impeach the sale was Order XXI, rule 90, and against an order under that section there is only one appeal allowed by Order XLIII. A second appeal does not, therefore, lie. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

THORNHILL, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Per Sanderson, C. J.—Where a case has been decided on documentary as well as oral evidence, if the documentary evidence is conflicting, great weight should be given by the Appellate Court to the opinion of the trial Judge who has seen and heard the witnesses. [p. 580, col. 2.]

The Court of Appeal should not allow an appeal unless they are satisfied that the Judge who tried the case was wrong. If they are in doubt at the end of the argument whether the Judge was right or wrong, since the burden of proof is on the appellant and he has not satisfied them that the Judge was wrong, the appeal should be dismissed. The Judge in the Court below may have heard witnesses and if so, the Court of Appeal should be more unwilling to set aside his judgment especially if there was a conflict of evidence, than in a case tried on written evidence, where the witnesses were not before the Judge, because of the opportunity afforded of judging how far the witnesses were worthy of credit. [p. 580, col. 2; p. 581, col. 1.]

The doctrine relating to the invalidity of gifts of musha is wholly unadapted to a progressive state of society and ought to be confined within the strictest limits. [p. 581, col. 2.]

When a person makes a gift to two donees, one of whom is an adult and the other a minor but the latter is not in the guardianship of the donor at the time of the gift, and the adult accepts the gift on behalf of himself and the minor, the gift is not invalid. But when the gift is made to an adult and an infant who is in the donor's care or guardianship, the gift may be void because the donor is assumed to take seisin at once of the minor's share, whereas the gift in favour of the adult requires acceptance and thus confusion is occasioned. [p. 581, col. 2; p. 582, col. 1.]

If a Muhammadan owner makes a gift of a house to two of his sons, one of whom is adult and the other is a minor and the adult son takes possession of the property, the gift is absolutely void. [p. 581, col. 2.]

According to Muhammadan Law seisin or actual possession by the donee is not necessary to complete the gift, but the donor must evince his intention of making a complete transfer of the ownership in the property from himself to the donee by placing the latter in a position to enjoy it beneficially or to make use of it consistently with its purpose, and in considering this question the relationship of the parties must be kept in view. In other words, to be in a position to take possession is tantamount to taking possession; and to place the donee in a position to take possession, is equivalent to delivery of possession; similarly investing with authority for that purpose is equally sufficient. [p. 582, col. 1.]

Per Curiam.—Long established usages existing in particular districts and families in India should be given effect to; but it is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be affixed and invariable; and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. [p. 583, col. 1; p. 597, col. 2.]

A custom must be ancient, certain and reasonable and being in derogation of the general rules of law, must be construed strictly. [p. 583, col. 1.]

Circumstances under which deeds executed by pardanashin ladies can be avoided discussed. [p. 584, col. 1; p. 585, cols. 1 & 2; p. 604, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Woodroffe, J.—A Commissioner for the examination of witnesses is entitled by law to note his observations as to the demeanour of the witnesses examined by him. [p. 592, col. 1.]

Per Mookerjee, J.—Reference may legitimately be made to the Work on Castes and Tribes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh by Mr. Crookes as an authoritative statement of customs prevalent among the Braki sect of Muhammadans. [p. 597, col. 1.]

The fact that a custom was not pleaded in litigations between members of the community where it might have been pleaded, is relevant evidence for the purpose of showing the non-existence of the custom. [p. 597, col. 2.]

Where the question arises, whether the ostensible purchaser is also the real purchaser, the familiar test to apply is what is the source of the purchase-money. In a case of gift, however, when it is alleged that the transaction was fictitious, this test fails, and the Court must rely upon other aspects of the matter, namely, the surrounding circumstance contemporaneous with the gift and the subsequent conduct of the parties concerned. The burden lies on the appellant to satisfy the Court that the finding of the trial Court which he assails is not supported by the evidence on the record. [p. 600, col. 1.]

Under the Muhammadan Law as administered by British Indian Courts, where the subject of gift is incorporeal property not susceptible of physical possession the gift thereof may be completed by such transfer of control as may be appropriate and possible in the circumstances. [p. 600, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 3rd May 1915.

FACTS appear from the following judgment of GREAVES, J.—The plaintiff in this case is the daughter of one Haji Kader Bux, deceased, a Muhammadan of the Braki sect or community who died on the 28th August 1907, leaving him surviving three sons, the defendants Shaik Muhammad Ibrahim, Shaik Muhammad Solaiman and Abdus Samad, five daughters, namely, the plaintiff and the defendants Hakima Bibi, Khadija Bibi, Ayesha Bibi and Khairunnessa Bibi, and two widows, Waziran Bibi and Mohatabo Bibi, the last named being the mother of the three sons and five daughters. The plaintiff claims to be entitled to 7/88 of her father's estate and amongst other reliefs asks for an enquiry of what the estate consists and for partition thereof. The defendants other than those above mentioned are two sons of a brother of Haji Kader Bux, named Hazir Bux with whom he used to carry on business in Calcutta and elsewhere and who succeeded to their father's share in the business, and one Muhammad Siddick who was and is entitled to a share in the profits of the Calcutta business.

The plaintiff's claim is resisted upon three grounds which appear in the written statement of Shaik Muhammad Ibrahim and which are as follows:—

(1) That Haji Kader Bux left no property, having during his lifetime disposed of it by two Hebas, the first of which was made on the 22nd April 1897 in favour of the defendant Shaik Muhammad Ibrahim of the share of Haji Kader Bux in the Calcutta business and the second of which was made on the 19th July 1907 in favour of his three sons of the rest of his property.

(2) That the Eraki community, although governed in all other respects by the Sunni School of Muhammadan Law, is governed in matters of succession and inheritance by Hindu Law and that by the law and custom governing the parties the plaintiff is not entitled to any share in the estate of Haji Kader Bux if he in fact left any estate.

(3) That by a deed of release, dated the 10th January 1908, the plaintiff for valuable consideration released any right and interests she had in her father's estate.

The suit was filed on the 3rd January 1911, and on the 24th April 1911 the defendant Ibrahim applied to record terms of settlement contained in a letter of the 17th March 1911 addressed by the plaintiff to him. The plaintiff filed an affidavit setting out other terms and her Counsel desired to go into these matters and cross-examine with regard to them to show, I gather, Ibrahim's bad faith or the pressure he had tried to exercise, but I declined to allow cross-examination on this and I have not taken these matters into account or consideration for the purposes of this judgment, as I conceived them to be attempts to arrive at a settlement of the matters in dispute and designed to avoid the family embitterment which a suit like this naturally engenders and the heavy expense necessarily involved in a litigation of this nature.

The issues I have to determine were agreed upon between the parties and are as follows:—

(1) Has the Court any jurisdiction to try the case?

(2) Was the deed of the 10th January 1908 explained to the plaintiff and did she receive the consideration of Rs. 45,000? Was the deed executed by her under misrepresentation and fraud?

(3) Is there a custom among the Eraki community excluding females from inheritance?

(4) Were the Hebas made by Kader Bux, and are they valid and operative under Muhammadan Law?

(5) Whether the suit is bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action?

The determination of issue No. 1 depends on the validity of the first Heba, and accordingly I propose to postpone the determination of this issue until after the determination of the issue with regard to the Hebas which is issue No. 4, and as part of the consideration for the deed of release was the alleged existence of the custom excluding women from succession and the existence of the Hebas, it will be convenient to dispose of issues Nos. 3 and 4, which deal with these matters, before deciding the issue with regard to the release which is issue No. 2.

I propose then to deal first with issue No. 3. The plaintiff denies the existence of any such custom as alleged and of course the burden of proof lies on the defendant Muhammad Ibrahim who sets up the custom. The custom as pleaded is, as above stated, that the members of the Eraki community are governed in matters of succession and inheritance by Hindu Law. On behalf of the plaintiff the following evidence was given on this point. The plaintiff stated that she belonged to the Shaik Rakhi community according to the custom of which daughters and wives inherit. She stated in cross-examination that she did not know what Rakhi sect meant or the difference between them and other Muhammadans, the only difference she knew of being that they did not marry outside their sect. She purported to give instances of the succession, of female members of the community to whom she was related, to property but as there was no proof of such instances forthcoming except her bare statement I must, I think, disregard her evidence on this point. Muhammad Solaiman also gave evidence as a member of the Eraki community negating the existence of any such custom and stating that although his father and grandfather left no property, that his uncle one Muhammad Hossain did and his daughter succeeded to their father's estate. He also stated that the plaintiffs, in Suit No. 54 of 1913 to which I shall have to refer later, were Erakis.

Hadi Hossain, a member of the community, also gave evidence as to the non-existence of such custom, stating that in matters of inheritance the Eraki community were governed by Khoranic Law. He also stated that to his knowledge the plaintiff in the suit Exhibit C was a member of the Eraki community.

This witness stated that the Eraki community exists in Balia, Azamgurb, Ghazipur, Jaunpur and Gorakhpur and that there was nothing to distinguish Erakis from other Mahomedans and stated, although this was not corroborated, that his father left property and that he gave his sister a share.

Shaik Sovan, also a member of the same community, gave similar evidence negating the existence of any such custom as alleged and stating, although this was not corroborated, that his father left property and that his sister got a share of it. He purported to give other instances within his knowledge of females succeeding, but this evidence was uncorroborated and I can attach very little value to it.

The next witness Abdul Hamid, the husband of the plaintiff, gave similar evidence as to the non-existence of the custom to that given by the other witnesses and similar evidence was given on the plaintiff's behalf by one Shaik Abdur Rahaman.

This concludes the plaintiff's oral evidence on this issue, but she also relied on certain judgments, Exhibits A, B and C, in which no such custom was set up to rebut claims to property by women members of the Eraki community. I admitted this evidence under section 13 of the Evidence Act, but I declined to admit pleadings in pending suits which were tendered in evidence on this point. These judgments do not seem to me to be of much value as they are at the most only negative evidence and, of course, there may have been good reasons in such suits for not pleading the custom, if such custom there be. And, moreover, it does not seem to be a satisfactory way of making them evidence to call witnesses who knew or were related to the parties or so stated and thus endeavour to establish that the suits were between parties some of whom at least were members of the Eraki community.

A great mass of evidence was given on behalf of the defendant Mahomed Ibrahim to establish the existence of this custom, which it is necessary to refer to in some detail and the references to this evidence are to the brief handed to me by Counsel for the defendant Mahomed Ibrahim.

Mohatabo Bibi, the mother of the plaintiff, at page 70 states as follows: "My father had three brothers their names are Jani Mian, Hakima Mian and Delkhalas Mian; they were sons of Niamut Mian. Niamut Mian had three daughters also,—namely, Karama, Naubka and Rashera. All these three were married. They all three died long after their father's death. Niamut Mian was a well-to-do man and carried on a sugar factory. Karama, Naubka and Rashera were married also to well-to-do men but inferior to Niamut. None of the daughters Karama, Naubka and Rashera got any share in the property of Niamut Mian after his death as there was no custom for the females to inherit, neither myself nor my sister Jasma and Hakima got any share by right of inheritance left by our father and Hakima and Jasma were married to people who are very poor. Delkhalas Mian had one son and two daughters; one son and one daughter named Sakina who has been married in Tikadauri in a poor family is alive, but the property left by Delkhalas Mian was inherited by my father, Bhojally and his brother Hossain Ally. Bhojally had two daughters, namely, Karima and Nabowat, but Karima died when she was 4 or 5 years old. Nabowat also died only 6 years ago but she got no share in the property left by Bhojally. This Bhojally was the father of Abdul Hamid, the husband of Musammat Mariam. Bhojally and Hossain Alli had two sisters, namely, Fahima and Mahima; both of them were married and died of ripe age. Sakina died two years ago and Karima died 3 or 4 years. Both of them were poor but Sakina was slightly better off than her sister Karima. Neither Karima nor Sakina got any share in the property left by their father Jain Meah. Hossain Ally is dead and left one daughter and one son, namely, Salehan and Musammat Mahrma. Musammat Mahrma is alive and has been married in village Nagra. Salehan got all the property left by Hossain Ally according to the custom. Mahrma got nothing. Musammat Janut (sic) Bibi, Mariam Bibi, Fatima Bibi and Janut Bibi were the daughters of Haji Niamut who was my uncle-in-law; these four girls, named above, never got any share in their father's estate. My grandfather-in-law was Haji Faziullah. He had two daughters Badama and Manita; none of these two daughters got any share in their father's property. I never knew or heard of any female, whether sister's daughter or widow, getting any share in the property left by a male ancestor. The custom in our Brotheri excluding the female inheriting exists from ever. I never heard of any female getting any inheritance in our Brotheri. Haji Hajir Bux had no daughter nor he had any sister."

The next witness who speaks to the custom is Khadija Bibee, the sister of the plaintiff, and at pages 78 and 79 she states as follows: "There is a custom in our Brotheri that only sons succeed and that daughters and widows get no share in the property. I knew it from the time I acquired my age of discretion and heard of the existence of it (custom) from others of old age too. In all the properties of Kotwari, Calcutta, Sitamarhi, Muznafferpore which are in possession of my brother I have no right or interest because under the aforesaid custom we have got no right or interest."

"I cannot give the exact time when I first of all heard of the existence of the custom, but I remember, I heard of it from my grandfather."

Hakima, the sister of the plaintiff, at page 82 states as follows: "If this Haba had not been made by my father none of us, sisters or mothers, would have got any share in the property because our custom does not allow that. I know as to the existence as to this custom since I attained my Hosh (age of discretion); from the time as far back as my recollection goes not a single daughter or a widow had got any share in the property left by their father and husband."

The next witness is Mohamed Amin, who is the first cousin of the deceased Kader Bux, and he at pages 13 and 14 and at page 16 states as follows: "None of my sisters got any share in the property left by my father. My maternal grandfather's house was in village Rashra. My mother is alive and she too got no share in her father's property. The defendant's father was Haji Hookoom of Tekadauri. He is dead now but the three sons of Haji Hookoom—Haji Ahmad, Mohamed Ismail and Mohamed Shafi are alive. Haji Hookoom was a man worth lacs of rupees. His sons hold his landed property and his money. Musammat Mohataba Bibi got nothing in her father's property. The above named female did not get any share in the father's property, because there is no custom among our brothers to the effect that the females may succeed to their father's property. The widows also do not inherit the property left by their husbands. Our Brotheri is called Raqi. The following are the instances in my Brotheri where widows and daughters did not get inheritance in the property left by their husband and father."

The witness then went on to give three instances in which women did not succeed:—
"My community is called Raqi. As far as I know, it is not known as Eraki. I cannot say whether Mohamed Ibrahim knows the name of our community correctly. We differ very much from Muhammadans of other communities. We very much differ from Sunni Muhammadans of other communities. But I am a Sunni. We differ very much in our customs from the Sunni Muhammadans of other communities. But I do not understand what the Counsel means by Law Muhammadans. Law called Shera is the same but customs are different. The custom with regard to succession in our Raqi community is that wives and daughters do not get inheritance. Among us shares are never given to wives and daughters."

He was then asked whether he traced his origin from Iraq in Arabia. He replied: "I do not know what Iraq is and so I cannot answer this well. The customs stated by me above as to the exclusion of wives and daughters from inheritance is known to whole of my community everywhere."

The next witness was Abdul Haq and at pages 24 and 25 he states as follows: "In our community if a man died leaving a widow and brother and no sons or daughters, then the brother alone will succeed him. In our community if a man died leaving a widow and a distant cousin but no sons or brothers, then the distant cousin alone will succeed." And at page 25 he states as follows:—

"The distant cousin who inherited the property would maintain her but he would do so by way of charity, and if he refuses to maintain her she is helpless in the matter and could do nothing."

"My mother got no share in the property of my maternal grandfather's property according to the custom prevalent in our community."

"My maternal grandfather was a wealthy man and left much property at his death. But my mother Musammât Badamô did not inherit anything from her father's estate, because there existed a custom in my community that widows and daughters do not inherit any property."

Other witnesses speak as to custom in similar terms. There is no need to consider their evidence in detail:—

Similar evidence was given by Mohamed Sivan, pages 52 and 53, who stated in cross-examination that the Eraki community were originally Hindus and were converted to Muhammadanism.

The defendant Mohamed Ibrahim also gave evidence as to the existence of the custom in similar terms as did Mohamed Sidik. It is matter of comment that Abul Barkat, a leader of the Muhammadan community and evidently a witness of knowledge and position who was examined for another purpose, was not examined as to the existence of the alleged custom, although he knew the Muhammadans of Kotwari are Erakis by caste and although the defendant Ibrahim and the deceased were disciples of his. Now there is undoubtedly a large body of evidence called on behalf of the defendant Mohamed Ibrahim to testify to the existence of the custom alleged, but although one does not wish to indulge in meticulous criticism of the evidence it does not in my opinion establish the custom pleaded, that is to say, that this community is governed in matters of succession by Hindu Law, but rather seeks to establish a custom by which under no circumstances females inherit, which is of course not in accordance with the principles governing succession by Hindu Law. The result is that in my opinion the defendant Mohamed Ibrahim has failed to establish the custom pleaded, and with regard to the third issue there is in my opinion no custom among the Eraki community excluding females from inheritance.

I should add that the existence of such a community is abundantly established, but there is no satisfactory evidence as to their origin and that they were originally Hindus, and I desire to make it clear that I have taken no account of any evidence given as to dress, customs and so on (of course other than the custom which I have to determine) which sought to establish the Hindu origin of the community. Some such evidence was given on commission and was sought to be given before me, but much of it I have disallowed and, as before stated, such evidence as was given, I have disregarded as being outside the question I have to determine. I think it may well be that there has been a practice among certain families of this community to exclude women from succession, but in my opinion this is not sufficient to establish the custom sought to be relied on. I come now to deal with the fourth issue—that with regard to the two alleged Hebas.

The first Heba is an oral Heba and purports to have been made by Kader Bux in favour of the defendant Mohamed Ibrahim on the 22nd April 1897 of Kader Bux's share in the Calcutta business. The two infant defendants Mohamed Solaiman and Abdus Samad were born respectively on the 30th December 1897 and the 11th August 1901 and consequently were not in existence at the date of the alleged Heba.

The principal evidence in support of this Heba is as follows and the references here again are to the brief:—Mohatabo Bibee at page 71 states: "My husband Quader Bux, when he returned from Calcutta, told me as to his Calcutta Heba when myself, Waziran, Mariam, Hakima and Khadija were present. I enquired from him why did he make that Heba, and he replied that Ibrahim was his son and I made him owner just like myself and made him seated on my Guddi (aise hum waise wuh)."

The next witness on this point is Mohamed Amin who was a partner in the firm of Kader Bux Hazir Bux. He at page 12 states as follows:—"This Mohamed Ibrahim got his share by virtue of a verbal gift made by Haji Kader Bux in favour of Mohamed Ibrahim. This verbal gift was made in Bysack, Sambat 1954, in a way that the capital of the firm was debited against Kader Bux and credited to Mohamed Ibrahim. This was entered in the Calcutta Nakal Bahi. Before this credit and debit entries were made, the Khatta used to be made in the name of Kader Bux and Ibrahim; after that the debit and credit entries in the Khatta were made in the name of Ibrahim alone and it stands so up to this time. Kader Bux was not illiterate and knew how to read and write Mohajani. I saw him read and write hundreds of times and I could identify his signatures and his handwriting. After this said gift in Sambat 1954 Kader Bux ceased to have had any connection with the hide business at Calcutta."

The next witness is Shukrulla, a relative of Kader Bux and a Gomastha in the firm, and he at page 27 states as follows:—"I once was a Gomastha from Sambat 1950 to 1964 at the hide business firm of Kader Bux and Hazir Bux at Calcutta. In Sambat 1953 to 1954 the following were the partners of Kader Bux:—Hazir Bux, Haji Kader Bux, Mohamed Ibrahim, Haji Abdul Ghanni, Mohamed Sjddik and that is all. In Sambat 1955 the following were the partners in that firm:—Hazir Bux, Mohamed Ibrahim, Haji Abdul Ghanni, Mohamed Siddik. Haji Quader Bux was no longer a partner in Sambat 1955 because he had given his whole share in the firm by gift on Bysack Budi 6th Sambat 1954, by making Jama Kharach in favour of Mohamed Ibrahim in Nakal Bahi."

The next witness is Abdul Latiff, uncle of the plaintiff, and he at page 44 states:—"In Sambat 1954, Kader Bux made a verbal gift in favour of Mohamed Ibrahim as to his share in the hide business firm. I was present at the verbal Heba (gift) made by Kader Bux. From the time of the said verbal Heba (gift) Kader Bux ceased to have any concern in the hide business firm and Mohamed Ibrahim became the partner of that firm in place of Kader Bux; that verbal gift was practically given effect to by the making of debit and credit entries in the account books of the firm in the name of Mohamed Ibrahim."

The next witness is Abdus Sattar and at page 93 he states:—"But the owner of the share represented by the name of Haji Kader Bux Mohamed Ibrahim was Haji Kader Bux alone. That share was gifted to Mohamed Ibrahim by Haji Kader Bux in Sambat 1954 by means of Heba. That Heba was made in my presence at Calcutta. That Heba was made by Haji Kader Bux verbally and by transfer entries in the books of the Calcutta business firm. The value of the share in the firm so gifted was between Rs. 50,000 and Rs. 52,000 at the time of gift. After that Heba the share of the capital of the aforesaid firm belonged exclusively to Mohamed Ibrahim alone. At the time of the Heba, Mohamed Solaiman and Abdus Samad the other two sons of Kader Bux were not born."

The defendant Ibrahim also gave evidence with regard to the first Heba. He stated that the first Heba was in his favour: "I was 16 or 17 at the time the Heba was made and entries were made in the account books. All the books of 1953 were closed and account made of profit and losses, and my father made a Heba of his share in my favour and entries were made in the books of account at my father's instance. The accounts were kept in my name. Subsequently a Heba was made in the presence of Hazir Bux, Mohammed Siddik and Abdus Sattar Gomashtas and others. From then the account appeared in my name and my father had no connection with the business entries after they were in my name. On one occasion I was not here and my father signed my name by his pen to the accounts. That was the only occasion." This witness produced to verify his statements Exhibits 4A, 5A, 5B, 5C, 6A, 7A, 8A, 9A, 10A, 11A, 11B, 12A 12B, 13A, 13B, 14A, 15A, 16A, which purported to corroborate the statements contained in his evidence. Further evidence was given by Mohamed Siddik and he stated that he was present when the first Heba was made and that he made entries in the books of account and that Kader Bux told the partners that he had made over his share to Ibrahim from that moment and from that time Ibrahim would be the proprietor, and in cross-examination he stated that after the Heba, Kader Bux lived usually at his native village. In 1955 he came to Calcutta occasionally after the Heba; he stayed at Calcutta for much less period than before and after the first Heba he did no work in connection with the Calcutta firm. No notice was issued to the public by Kader Bux.

It is now necessary to refer shortly to a few of the exhibits. Exhibit 4A purports to show a debit in the account of the father of the sum that at the date of this entry stood to his credit in the books of the firm and to credit the account so debited to Kader Bux to his son Mohamed Ibrahim. Exhibit 5A purports to show a credit of the sum of the same date to the account of Mohamed Ibrahim, and Exhibit 6A purports to show that the share of profit in respect of his share is after his death transferred to the credit of Mohamed Ibrahim and Exhibit 7A is to the same effect though in this his signature is as follows:—"Mohamed Ibrahim by the pen of Kader Bux."

The genuineness of the first Heba is disputed by the plaintiff on three main grounds:—

(1) That after the date of the alleged Heba a house No. 47, Taltolla Lane, was purchased in the names of Hazir Bux and Kader Bux.

(2) That in a Heba (Exhibit H) made by Hazir Bux in November 1907 in favour of his two sons, the defendants Mohamed Jaun and Abdus Sattar, Hazir Bux states that his brother Kader Bux owned a $7\frac{1}{2}$ annas share in the Calcutta business although he made a transfer of this property to Mohamed Ibrahim some 10 or 12 years before his death for some political reason and goes on to refer to the house in 47, Taltolla Lane, as belonging to him and his deceased brother, the inference, I am asked to draw, being that the alleged Heba was only a benami transaction.

(3) That when the defendant Mohamed Ibrahim petitioned (Exhibit G) after his father's death to be appointed guardian of his infant brothers, he included in the schedule to the petition as the property of the infants their two-third share in the property left by Haji Kader Bux, that is to say No. 47, Taltolla Lane, and outstandings on account of the Calcutta business.

With regard to the first of these objections it is true that the premises 47, Taltolla Lane are by the conveyance (Exhibit I) conveyed to Hazir Bux and Kader Bux, but this was the name of the firm as appears from the evidence of the defendant Mohamed Ibrahim, page 124, and moreover it is in evidence before me that 47, Taltolla Lane, was purchased with the money of the firm (see Exhibit 12B), that repairs and taxes were charged to the firm (see Exhibit 13B), and that the rent was divided amongst the partners (see Exhibit 15A). Having regard, therefore, to the fact that it was purchased with the firm's money if it was in fact conveyed to Hazir Bux and Kader Bux as individuals they held the premises in trust for the partnership.

With regard to objection (2), in my opinion the Heba (Exhibit H) is not evidence against the defendant Mohamed Ibrahim but even if it is, it is not in my opinion in any way conclusive against the Heba and with regard to the statement therein contained as to Taltolla Lane, I prefer the evidence of Exhibits 12B, 13B and 15A to the statement in Exhibit H.

With regard to objection (3), I accept the statement of the defendant Mohamed Ibrahim, who appeared to me a reliable witness, as to how the application for guardianship came to be made and the details inserted.

He states: "I applied at Ghazipore for the guardianship of the infants. I cannot read or write Urdu. My Attorney wrote to me from Kotwari to say a certificate was necessary for carrying on the business. I wrote to him (Budraj Sing) to say if he sent an application for me to sign, I would do so. A place was marked for me to sign. The marks appear on the document. I signed in three places."

The result is that in my opinion Kader Bux made a valid Heba of his share in the Calcutta business to the defendant Mohamed Ibrahim.

In my opinion the deed of dissolution of partnership on the retirement of Abdul Ghanni, Exhibit 3, is not evidence and I have not taken it into consideration in the conclusion at which I have arrived.

With regard to the 2nd Heba the evidence is as follows, and here again the references are to the brief:—

The first witness on this point is Mohatabo Bibi and she at page 71 states as follows: "Haji Qader Bux made his second Heba two months or one and a half months before his death. The second Heba he made in the Dalan, myself, Musammatt Wazirun, the 3 daughters, Maryum, Khadija, Hakima being seated at the door."

Khadija Bibi at page 78 states as follows:—"The second Heba was made by my father in the Dalan of the Zenana house, and we five executants were standing there at the door of the Dalan; my father said that he was going to make a Heba of his property to his three sons and so you had better be present and listen to it. When Qader Bux died, he had no property whatsoever; he was my father."

Hakima Bibi at page 82 states as follows:—"The 2nd Heba was made before me at the time my father announced to us his first Heba, and at that time when he made his second Heba, I, Maryum and Khadija and my brothers and other female members and children of my family were present. The first Heba consisted of the Calcutta business of the firm. The Calcutta property gifted away was worth Rs. 50,000. The second Heba made at Kotwari comprised the Muzaffarpore, Sitamarhi, Kotwari business and Zemindari and groves. The properties comprised in the second Heba were worth Rs. 50,000. I knew of the value of both the properties gifted away at the time when the first Heba was announced and the second Heba was made. I came to know of the value of the properties in this way, that when my father announced the first Heba, he told us of the value of the Calcutta property he had gifted to Ibrahim. And when my father had told them, meaning all of us five, that the gifted property was worth Rs. 50,000. I, Mariam, Khadija and my two mothers were present when he told us of it."

Mohammed Amin at page 13 states as follows: "This verbal gift in favour of three sons was made in the male quarter situated at Kotwari in the presence of myself, Hazir Bux, his brother Aboul Latiff, my own brother Mohamed Sattar son of Hazir Bux, Soleman resident of Amhat a cousin of Qader Bux, and some 2 or 4 persons whose names I do not recollect. Besides these males above mentioned Qader Bux sent for his two wives and all the daughters to be present in the room close to the room where Qader Bux was, in order that they might be present and hear the verbal gift Qader Bux was going to make when all persons, males and females, were present; then Hazi Qader Bux said that he had already made a gift of his Calcutta business to Mohammed Ibrahim and now he was gifting the rest of his property to his three sons Mohammad Ibrahim, Abdus Samad and Soleman. When he said this he was holding some papers and documents in his hands and gave the documents and papers to Mohammad Ibrahim and told Mohammad Ibrahim to accept that gift for himself and his younger brothers. Then after that we all went away. When these documents and papers were given to Mohammad Ibrahim he accepted the gift for himself and his younger brothers."

Suleman at page 31 states as follows:—"This second Heba was made in Kotwari in presence of Hazir Bux, Mohammad Ibrahim, Mohammad Sattar, Mohammad Amin, Abdul Latif and some five or seven more men. Qader Bux said that whatever estate has been left with him he makes a Heba of it to Mohammed Ibrahim, Suleman and Abdus Samad his sons. After that he took a bundle of papers and documents and gave them in the hands of Mohammad Ibrahim. He then said that whatever estate and properties he had got, he makes a Heba of all that property to his sons and asked Mohammed Ibrahim to accept it for himself as well as for his younger brothers Suleman and Abdus Samad. Mohammed Ibrahim accepted the Heba on his own behalf and on behalf of his younger brothers."

Then Abdul Latif at page 44 states as follows:—"Some time before his death Qader Bux made a second verbal gift in Kotwari of all his properties that he was possessed of at that time. That second verbal gift was made before me at Kotwari. This second verbal gift was in favour of Mohammed Ibrahim and his brothers. At the second verbal Heba, Mohammed Ibrahim accepted that Heba on his behalf as well as for his younger brothers; at the time of this second Heba the following persons were present: Myself, Mohammed Amin, my own brother, Mohammed Sattar, Mohammed Ibrahim, Mohammed Suleman, Abdus Samad, Ali Mian, Soleman of Amhat, Karamat Mian and few others of Kotwari."

Ali Mian at page 47 states as follows:—"When Hazi Quader Bux died he left no property at all at the time of his death. He had made a gift verbally of all his properties at Kotwari and other places and of all his dues and other properties to his three sons before he (Qader Bux) died. He made the second Heba (gift) verbally before me. At the time of the making of the second verbal gift and also before that Qader Bux told me and the people present at the second Heba that he had already made a Heba verbally of all his properties at Calcutta to Mohammed Ibrahim alone; he made a mention of his first Heba at the time of his second Heba."

Abdus Sattar at page 94 states as follows:—"The second Heba (gift) was made at Kotwari in my presence. After the second Heba the properties comprised therein were taken possession of by Mohammed Ibrahim and his brothers;" and Ibrahim the defendant states that the second Heba was made in the presence of himself, his three sisters and of his uncle Hazir Bux, his two mothers and his father. "My mother and sisters remained in the room, we were in the Dalan. They were sent for by my father. Abdul Latif, Abdus Sattar, Mohammed Amin, Suleman, Karamat and others were present. My two little brothers were there. My father said he had already disposed of his share in the Calcutta business in my favour and was disposing of the rest of his property at Sitamarhi, Muzaffarpore in favour of myself and 2 younger brothers. My father asked me to accept same on behalf of myself and younger brothers. He made over all the documents in respect of these properties and of the Zemindari to me; he asked me to take charge of them on behalf of myself and my brothers."

As against this the plaintiff relies on the guardianship application and the Heba made by Hazir Bux, to which I have already referred. The plaintiff further relies on the evidence of the defendant Ibrahim as to his father's desire before his death to execute a document in respect of the two alleged Hebas as showing they were incomplete and non-existent, but I think he may well have desired to reduce to writing what had already been completely carried out by the oral transactions already referred to so as to prevent any disputes after his death; but I do not think that this shows that no such Hebas were in fact made. The result is that in my opinion the existence of and validity of the second Heba is established and with regard to the fourth issue, I hold that the Hebas were made by Qadir Bux and are valid and operative under Muhammadan Law.

MARIAM BIBEE V. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

This really disposes of the case but it is, I think, desirable that in case I have formed a wrong opinion with regard to the Hebas or either of them I should express my opinion with regard to the validity of the release.

I now accordingly come to the second issue which concerns the release of the 9th and 10th January 1908.

The material parts of the document are as follows:—"We, Musammats Waziran Bibi and Mohatabo Bibi, widows of Haji Kadir Bux deceased, and Musammats Mariam Bibi, Hakima Bibi and Khadija Bibi, daughters of Haji Kadir Bux deceased, are residents of Mouzah Kotwari, Pargana Lakhnesar, District Balia. We declare that the late Haji Kadir Bux, the predecessor of the declarants, was a proprietor of the moveable and immoveable properties detailed below, and his intention was to give away the whole of his properties to his three sons, Mohamed Ibrahim, Mohamed Solaiman and Abdus Samad, and with this object he made his eldest son Mohamed Ibrahim the proprietor of the shop in Calcutta and prior to his demise the late Haji Saheb in the presence of us, the declarants, and of Mohamed Ibrahim, Mohamed Solaiman and Abdus Samad and other relatives and kinsmen of his, made a gift of and gave away all his moveable and immoveable properties situate in Districts Balia, Calcutta, and Mozaffarpur to his sons aforesaid, made (them) proprietors, and put (them) in possession of the same, and in accordance with the oral gift and grant aforesaid all the three sons of the Haji Saheb aforesaid are holding or possessing all the properties as proprietors and it is their names which have been registered in the Sarkari papers, and it is also the custom amongst our community that the sons only get possession of the paternal property and females of the family do not get shares in the paternal property. However, as a precautionary measure and to prevent future disputes, lest disputes should arise in the family through instigation, etc., on the part of anybody, we the declarants after considering our advantages and disadvantages and with our sense and understanding unimpaired declare as below:—

"First. We the declarants Waziran ibi, Matabo Bibi, widows of the Haji aheb deceased, do by execution of this document declare that we do not wish to take any share in our husband's property. If we have any kind of right then we relinquish the same in favour of our sons.

"Clause the second We, the declarants Musammats Mariam Bibi, Hakima Bibi and Khadija Bibi, daughters of the Haji Saheb deceased, declare that our brothers aforesaid have paid the sum of four thousand and five hundred rupees in cash to each of us the declarants, consequently we the declarants have no claim or right of any kind to the properties aforesaid. If we have any kind of right we relinquish all those in favour of our brothers Mohamed Ibrahim, Mohamed Solaiman and Abdus Samad. Now we have no demand or claim of any kind to the property left by the father. Our brothers aforesaid are in every way proprietors of all (the same).

"Clause the third.—We the declarants do in every way confirm and admit the oral gift and grant which has been made by our husband and (our) father."

The document is signed on behalf of Mariam Bibi, the plaintiff, by the pen of her husband Abdul Hamid and one Haji Ahmed signed the document on behalf of the other ladies. It purports to be written on 19th January 1908 by the pen of Hadi Hossain, who was called as a witness on commission. It was duly registered by the Registrar the facts with regard to this being stated in the document as follows:—that the executants having heard and understood the contents and terms of this document admitted in a loud voice the preparation and execution of the document from behind the leaves of the door facing the west of the room leading to the Dalan, facing north of the female apartments and in my presence, that is, in the presence of the Registrar, Musammats Mariam Bibi received after counting a sum of Rs. 4,500, and it further goes on to say that the executants were duly identified.

The plaintiff alleges that she thought she was executing not a release but a power-of-attorney, that it was never explained to her and that no money was paid her. The evidence on behalf of the plaintiff with regard to this document is as follows:—

The plaintiff herself, who is a Parda-nashin lady, gave evidence before me to the following effect:—

"I remember executing a document. I cannot read or write. I executed a power-of-attorney; after my father's death Ibrahim said he had to collect moneys from various people and that he would give me my share after they were got in. I put my thumb mark to the power-of attorney. The document was not explained to me. My husband was present there. I did not obtain his permission or ask him anything. It was not explained by him to me or by any one else. I have got confidence in Ibrahim. I did not ask anybody anything about the document; later after my father's death I wanted my share. Ibrahim said he had to collect the money due to the estate and when everything was got in he would give me my share, but for that purpose a power-of-attorney was necessary and that I must execute one. No money was paid when I put my thumb mark. Ibrahim asked me to execute the document. I and my own mother and Ibrahim were there at the time" and in cross-examination she stated: "I did not ask my husband to sign my name; no one read anything out. I had great confidence in Ibrahim. Not one word was read out of the document; a document was shown and we were told it was the Muktearnamah."

Her husband Abdul Hamid gave evidence to the following effect: He stated that some four or five days before the document was executed Ibrahim came to see him. He said "you want money now. I shall help you with money if you ask me to do what I want you to do." I said if I can help you I shall be very glad to. Ibrahim said to me, my sister, your wife, and other sisters are pressing for their shares. He said to me if I gave to all sisters their shares, how can I carry on business. I shall be without money. You had better help me that I may go on with the business. Ibrahim said to me, I shall give them their shares. He said to me it was his intention to get a release executed by them and asked me not to interfere in the matter, I said to him, "this thing must be explained to your sisters. If they come to know of the execution of the release they will not do it;" Ibrahim said it would not be given out to them that a release was being executed. Then he said it would be given out to them they were executing a power of attorney. He said it would be given out to them the document was a Muktearnama to be executed by them for the purpose of collecting the outstanding dues to enable him to pay up the sisters' shares. He asked me to remain silent and not interfere in the matter. In reply I said, "what is your consideration for my helping you in the matter?" He said to me, "you are pressed by creditors. I will give you money to pay your creditors. I will go myself to the creditors and speak to them personally not to press you for money. I also would get a commission business for you." In reply to that I said, "how would you help me in starting a commission business? Are you going to lend me the money or to give me the money once and for all?" Ibrahim said to me, "I won't pay the money by way of loan or by way of gift, but I would give you the money in respect of the shares of my sisters."

I relied on his words and agreed to that. On the day the document was executed I went to Ibrahim's place, a mile from mine, at 10-30 or 10 and found Mohamed Amin and two or four persons of his family. They were sitting in his parlour. I also took my seat there and at or about 11 or 11 30 the Registrar and Munshi came to the place. I do not know the Munshi's name. When the Registrar came Ibrahim made over the release to him. The Registrar on going through the document asked Ibrahim if the parties to it were agreed. The Registrar took the document and read it and asked Ibrahim if the parties were all agreed. He read it out aloud. He enquired of Ibrahim whether everything was explained to his sisters. Ibrahim said "yes." Ibrahim said the parties were agreeable, and then the Registrar and other persons went to the inner apartments. We all accompanied the Registrar to that place. The document was made over to the Registrar. When he came, Ibrahim went in to take the thumb impressions of the five persons and the Registrar enquired whose thumb impressions they were and each thumb impression of each person was pointed out to the Registrar and he noted them. He further stated that it was not true that it was read and explained three times. "It was not read and explained in my presence. No money was paid to the ladies. Ibrahim gave me money, on the first day Rs. 200, after that Rs. 500, after that another Rs. 500 on the day the document was executed and registered and after that he paid me Rs. 500. I did not tell my wife what the document was. A year or a year and a half after the document was executed my wife came to know what the document was. I told her this."

On behalf of the defendants the evidence with regard to the release was as follows:— (References are to the copy brief before mentioned).

Mohatabo Bibi's evidence is as follows:— She says "after a day or two a man a Mian (Muhammadan) came from Rashra with ten or twelve men to my Dalan with a document and read over and explained the document. I, Musammam Mariam, Khadija, Hakima and Waziran all five were present there. After he explained and read the contents of the document to us he (man of Rashra) told us that he would have no right left (meaning after the completion of the document). Then he said that we know already. Then he asked us to sign over it. We all said that we cannot write and are illiterate. I and Waziran said our brother Haji Ahmed would sign for us. Khadija and Hakima said our uncle should sign for us. Musammam Mariam said that Musammam Nisia's Chaacha (meaning Abdul Hamid who is Nisia's father) should sign for her and accordingly Abdul Hamid and Haji Ahmed did sign the document. That man of Rashra who explained and read over the document to us said to us then that it should be attested. We then told him to have it attested by the persons who were present there. Then the document was attested. Then the Sub-Registrar was brought there with 10 or 12 men there. The Sub-Registrar sat in the Dalan, we were in the Khamia. In the Khamia, I, Mariam, Khadija, Hakima, Waziran were seated. The document which was given by the Rashra man who had read the document to Waziran was demanded by the Sub-Registrar. Waziran Bibi, therefore, presented the document to the Sub-Registrar and Amin came and asked us five to be seated at the door and we did. Then the Sub-Registrar called out to each of us five executants name by name and each of us responded; then the document was read over and explained to us by the Sub-Registrar. The Sub-Registrar enquired if the daughters received the money; the daughters said that they had not as yet; then Ibrahim went to his male apartment and brought the money there through his servants; that money was taken by Mariam, Hakima and Khadija. The money was made over by Haji Ahmed to Abdul Hamid who delivered it to each of his daughters. Each daughter was paid Rs. 4,500. Each of those daughters took away that money to their respective houses."

Khadija Bibi's evidence was to the same effect and in cross examination she stated "Besides the Sub-Registrar the following were present at the time when the money Rs. 4,500 was given to me:—Haji Ahmad who is my Mamoo, Abdul Hamid, Amin, Latif, Sattar and many others whose names I do not know. The sum of Rs. 4,500 was paid to me in silver coin and not in G.C. notes, and that sum was in three bags. In each bag was a sum of Rs. 1,500. The money was not in one bag and each bag contained Rs. 1,500. I know that each bag contains Rs. 1,500 because when money was paid to me I counted the money so I found each contained Rs. 1,500. I know how to count."

Hakima gave evidence as follows: She said: "That deed of release was registered at Kotwari in the house of Ibrahim, defendant. The Registrar was at the Dalan and we all executants were at the adjoining Khamia. I know the contents of the document which was registered and which we signed. As stated above I knew of the contents of that deed, as I and we all had heard of its contents before and also on the day when that deed was registered, we all at first heard the draft of that deed once. When the draft was brought from Allahabad and also when it was brought from Ghazipur, Amin had read the draft and explained it to us all on the day of the registration of that deed. The Mian of Rashra came and brought the document. He called all five of us. That Rashra man came with Haji Ahmed and Abdul Hamid and Muhammad Amin and that Rashra man read over and explained the contents of the documents to us. The Sub-Registrar came the same day on which the Rashra man had come to Kotwari. The Sub-Registrar read and explained the contents of the document to us all five and asked us whether the payment of money had been made to all of us or not. Then I, Mariam and Khadija told the Sub-Registrar that we had not received the money as yet. Then the money was brought by Ibrahim. Haji Ahmad handed over the money to Abdul Hamid who having counted it made it over to each of us there, that is the sisters. We all three sisters took the money and when Mariam went to her husband's house, her husband came with men and took the money to his house. The money was with all of us while we remained there. We all five executants executed the document at the request of Ibrahim. It was a dust-bardary (deed of release). We heard the contents four times. When the draft came from Allahabad first of all in that the two Hebas made by Kadar Bux were mentioned also the custom existing, so as to exclude females from inheritance, was mentioned in it. It was also mentioned in it that some money to the daughters would be given after the registration."

MARIAM BIBEE V. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

Hadi Hassain the scribe's evidence was as follows: "On the next day I faired out the document. One Ali Mian came from Muhammad Ibrahim to fetch me and I accompanied Ali Mian with the original deed and its draft to Kotwari to Muhammad Ibrahim's place. Having reached Kotwari on the same day I proceeded to the Zenana (female) quarter of Muhammad Ibrahim from his male or Mardana quarter with Muhammad Ibrahim, Haji Ahmad, Muhammad Amin, Muhammad Sattar, Abdul Hamid and some other persons whose names I do not recollect. I knew all these men. I gave the names before; some of whom were known to me from a period of two or three years, and some from a period of four or five years. I went to the women's quarter and then I ascertained as to the females sitting behind the door. I ascertained as to them from Haji Ahmad, Abdul Hamid and Muhammad Ibrahim. There were five females behind the door.

Two of them were Waziran Bibi and Mahtabo Bibi, mother of Muhammad Ibrahim. The three of them were Ibrahim's sisters, named Musammats Mariam, Hakima and Khadija. I then read out the original deed which I had faired out on the stamp paper to them, and explained it to them. I explained its contents in the dialect in their parts which is commonly spoken by villagers and vulgar people here. Those females understood my explanation and told me that it was what they wished and was executed according to their wishes."

Abdus Sattar testifies to the same effect as the other witnesses as to deed of release and stated. "That money was paid out of the fund of the Kotwari firm and was debited to Ibrahim in the Roznamcha book, also called Roka Bahi (day book); that entry was made after registration. After sunset when we sat on our Gudi I caused the entries to be made in that book. In that firm we keep Roznamcha, Khasra and Khata books. That aforesaid entry of the aforesaid money is entered in all those books of that firm. The price of the stamp paper and the cost of the registration of that deed was also paid out of the funds of the said Kotwari firm."

These books [viz., Roznamcha book, also called Roka Bahi (day-book) Khasra and Khata books] were produced before me and are Exhibits 16A and 17A in this case. Exhibit 16A purports to debit the account of Mohammed Ibrahim with Rs. 160 for the stamp, with Rs. 13,560 which represents the three sums of Rs. 4,500 and with the Registrar's fee of Rs. 60. Exhibit 17A is to the same effect.

Defendants Mohammad Ibrahim and Mohammed Siddik gave evidence similar to that of the other witnesses already referred to with regard to the deed of release, but it is not necessary to refer to their evidence in detail.

The circumstances under which the deed of release was prepared are as follows:—The defendant Mohammad Ibrahim stated that his father before his death wanted to execute a document in respect of the two Hebas he had already made and wanted to state therein how and when the two Hebas were made and that the deed of release originated with him (Ibrahim), and that he suggested the two mothers and three sisters should execute a document in which his father's intentions should be stated and that if they wanted anything paid, he was prepared to pay it and that he consulted some lawyers at Rashra who suggested the form the document should take.

Mohatabo Bibi and Ibrahim apparently discussed the matter in the presence of the plaintiff, Khadija, Hakima and Waziran and after this Haji Ahmad and Abdul Hamid were invited to attend to discussion and advise the ladies, which they did. These persons then agreed to execute a document in the terms of the release and Shukrulla was deputed to go to a lawyer at Allahabad and get a draft prepared embodying the terms agreed on which he did, the draft being prepared by Nawab Abdul Majid, Barrister-at-Law of Allahabad. The draft was subsequently settled by a Ghazipur Pleader, the witness Muhammad Abdulla, who was recommended by the witness Abul Barkat.

It is common ground that the plaintiff had no separate legal advice with regard to the execution of the release and that the several lawyers who settled and prepared the deed, only put into legal form what had been previously agreed, if I accept the evidence of the defendants with regard to the preparation and execution of the release; but so long as I am satisfied that the plaintiff knew and understood what she was doing and the full effect thereof, this even, having regard to the fact that she was a Pardanashin lady, will not prevent the document standing. See Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (1), Kali Baksh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (2).

If I am to decide this issue in favour of the plaintiff, I must do so upon the evidence of the plaintiff herself and that of her husband Abdul Hamid, whose evidence is that he concealed from his wife the true nature of the document and allowed her to execute it under the belief that she was merely executing a power-of-attorney and was thus a party to a fraudulent conspiracy to deceive her. And I must say that the plaintiff's own mother, her two sisters, and the various other witnesses who testified to the facts above stated with regard to the execution have all entered into a fraudulent conspiracy to rob the plaintiff of what is her due. The evidence of most of these witnesses was given on commission, and I have had no opportunity of seeing them in the witness-box; but if I have to choose between the evidence of Abdul Hamid on the one hand and that of Ibrahim and of Muhammad Siddick on the other hand, I unhesitatingly prefer the evidence of these two witnesses who appeared to me truthful and reliable witnesses.

I am satisfied on the evidence before me that the deed of 10th January 1908 was explained to the plaintiff and that she did receive the consideration of Rs. 4,500 and that the deed was not executed by her through misrepresentation and fraud and I decide the 2nd issue in favour of the defendants.

The plaintiff's Counsel invited me to express an opinion as to whether in addition, the transaction was fair and equitable and, I think, insisted that I was bound to do so. I do not think I am so bound in view of the way the case for the plaintiff was pleaded; but I do not think it was unfair and inequitable under the circumstances, and in so stating I do not forget that both Abdul Hamid and his wife were in indigent circumstances at the date of the deed.

In my opinion the family believed in the existence of some such custom as is alleged, and I think that in their family the practice of excluding women from inheritance had been acted on for some time and they may well have thought that what was their practice was a binding legal custom, for it is difficult to say when practice ends and custom begins. Again there were the two Hebas which, in my opinion, they thought valid and effectual, although ex abundanti cautela and to prevent disputes they preferred to have a document signed by the plaintiff acknowledging their validity. Under these circumstances I do not think the release by the plaintiff of any rights she may have had in consideration of Rs. 4,500 was an unfair and inequitable transaction. It would certainly have been the wisest course to have insisted on the plaintiff having separate legal advice in a transaction of this nature. I should here state that the value of the property, the subject of the first Heba, was Rs. 50,000 at the date of the gift and at Kader Bux's death was two or three lacs. The value of the property, the subject of the 2nd Heba, was Rs. 50,000 or 60,000 at the date thereof.

With regard to the first issue, as a result of my judgment, this Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, but of course to arrive at the conclusion I had to hear the evidence.

With regard to the 5th issue, I decide this in the negative, as, if my judgment had been otherwise, I think it was necessary to have all the parties who were before me before the Court.

Mr. Rasul asks for costs including costs of executing and filing commission.

THE COURT.—Yes. The plaintiff to pay Ibrahim $\frac{2}{3}$ of taxed costs. The Rs. 2,100 deposited in Government Promissory Notes to be returned to Ibrahim's Counsel or Attorney. Suit dismissed against other defendants with costs on scale No. II.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of Greaves, J., dismissing her suit. The nature of the claim and the defence are fully set out at the beginning of the learned Judge's judgment as follows:—"The plaintiff in this case is the daughter of one Haji Kader Bux, deceased, a Muhammadan of the Eraki sect or community who died on the 28th August 1907, leaving him surviving three sons, the defendants Shaik Mahomed Ibrahim, Shaik Mahomed Solaiman and Abdus Samad, five daughters, namely, the plaintiff and the defendants Hakima Bibi, Khadija Bibi, Ayesha Bibi and Khairunnessa Bibi, and two widows, Waziran Bibi and Mohatabo Bibi, the last named being the mother of the three sons and five daughters. The plaintiff claims to be entitled to $\frac{7}{88}$ of her father's estate and amongst other reliefs asks for an enquiry of what the estate consists, and for partition thereof. The defendants other than those above mentioned are two sons of a brother of Haji Kader Bux named Hazir Bux, with whom he used to carry on business in Calcutta and elsewhere, and who succeeded to their father's share in business, and one Mahomed Siddik who was and is entitled to a share in the profits of the Calcutta business.

The plaintiff's claim is resisted upon three grounds which appear in the written statement of Shaik Mahomed Ibrahim and which are as follows:

(1) That Haji Kader Bux left no property, having during his lifetime disposed of it by two Hebas, the first of which was made on the 22nd April 1897 in favour of the defendant Shaik Mahomed Ibrahim and of the share of Haji Kader Bux in the Calcutta business, and the second of which was made on the 19th July 1907 in favour of his three sons and of the rest of his property.

(2) That the Eraki community, although governed in all other respects by the Sunni School of Muhammadan Law, is governed in matters of succession and inheritance by Hindu Law, and that by the law and custom governing the parties the plaintiff is not entitled to any share in the estate of Haji Kader Bux if he in fact left any estate.

(3) That by a deed of release, dated the 10th January 1908 the plaintiff for valuable consideration released any right and interest she had in her father's estate."

It will be convenient to set out the material dates: 22nd April 1897 was the date on which the 1st Heba relating to the

MARIAM BIBI v. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

Calcutta business is alleged to have been made by Kader Bux.

13th October 1904—The purchase of the house 47, Taltolla Lane.

7th February 1907—The dissolution of partnership so far as Abdul Gunny was concerned.

19th July 1907—The alleged 2nd Heba by Kader Bux.

28th August 1907—The death of Kader Bux.

31st October 1907—The Hebanama of Hadjee Bux.

5th November 1907—Hadjee Bux died.

9th January 1908—The deed of release.

9th June 1908—Petition of Mahomed Ibrahim for guardianship.

The learned Judge found that the two Hebas were in fact made and that they were valid and operative under Muhammadan Law. This decision really disposed of the case, and it is this question which was first argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant.

The verbal evidence as to the first Heba has been summarised by the learned Judge in his judgment, and I need not refer in detail to that with which he has already dealt: the principal evidence relating thereto is to be found at pages 24, 46, 47, 63, 64, 128, 135, 136, 139, 369 to 377, 403 to 414, 424, 425, 432 of the paper-book.

As regards the constitution of the Calcutta firm at the date of the first Heba, viz., April 1897, it appears that the partners entitled to share in the profits were Kader Bux, Hazir Bux, Abdul Gunny and Mahomed Siddik (see page 345 of paper-book), that Kader Bux's account was entered in the books of the Calcutta firm under the name of Haji Kader Bux Mahomed Ibrahim (see page 127 and the accounts), Kader Bux resided generally at Kotwari, but sometimes at Calcutta: Mahomed Siddik and Hazir Bux were the managers of the Calcutta firm.

The defendant Ibrahim had at the time of the alleged Heba been about 2 years in the firm and had been working chiefly as cashier, but going about with his uncle Hazir Bux and looking after the business of the firm generally (see page 135). There were other businesses at various places in which Kader Bux and Hazir Bux were interested, and it was under these circumstances that Kader Bux is alleged to have made over his share in the Calcutta business to Ibrahim, who at that time was his only son; or, in the words supposed to have been used by his father, "to have made him owner just like myself and made him seated on my guddi".

With regard to the first Heba, I am satisfied on the evidence that there is no ground for interfering with the learned Judge's finding that a transaction purporting to transfer Kader Bux's share in the Calcutta business to Ibrahim was in fact made.

But it is said that the transaction was a benami one. The verbal evidence of those connected with the business is against this allegation, and, in addition to the other matters relied on, the evidence goes to show that Kader Bux took no part in the working of the Calcutta firm after the first Heba.

Before the date of the first Heba there were three accounts—1st, an account in the name of Kader Bux Mahomed Ibrahim, which was called during the hearing the partnership account—2nd, an account in the name of Kader Bux which was drawn upon by Kader Bux for his expenses—3rd, an account in the name of Mahomed Ibrahim which was an interest account.

After the alleged Heba, the first account was put into the name of Mahomed Ibrahim, and the other two accounts remained in the same names. The 2nd account remained in the name of Kader Bux, but Ibrahim drew upon it for his expenses. It seems curious if Kader Bux had ceased to have any connection with the firm, that this account should have remained in the name of Kader Bux, but it was pointed out that this was not exceptional in the case of this firm, for there was a similar account in the name of Hazir Bux, and after his death the account was kept in his name, his sons drawing upon it for expenses. At the time of the alleged Heba the balance standing to the credit of Kader Bux was debited to him and credited to Mahomed Ibrahim, and the accounts were thereafter dealt with as if Ibrahim was a partner. Further more in the deed of dissolution of February 1907 Ibrahim is treated as a partner, he and Hazir Bux taking over the share of the outgoing partner, and no reference is made to Kader Bux. But certain matters were relied upon by the appellant as showing that the verbal evidence, confirmed as it is by the deed of dissolution and the accounts, could not be relied upon—and that the transaction was really a benami one.

First, it is said that the application for guardianship made on the 9th June 1908 admitted the title of the minor brothers to a share in the house No. 47, Taltolla Lane, which, according to the defendant's case, had become the property of the firm after Kader Bux ceased to be a member, and also to a share in the Calcutta business. The learned Judge having seen and heard the witness has accepted the evidence of the defendant Mahomed Ibrahim, who appeared to him a reliable witness, as to how the application came to be made and the details inserted, and I am not prepared to interfere with his finding of fact thereon. Ibrahim said he could not write or read Urdu: it is to be noted that if he did know what was in the details contained in the application for guardianship, he was deliberately creating evidence contrary to the case which he set up in the Court below. It is urged, however, that it was after he made this application that he changed his mind, and decided to defraud his two brothers; this seems to me improbable and is inconsistent with the learned Judge's finding that in his opinion Ibrahim was a witness of truth.

Secondly,—that the house No. 47, Taltolla Lane was conveyed to Kader Bux and Hazir Bux on 13th October 1904, seven years after the first alleged Heba. It is true that the conveyance is to Kader Bux and Hazir Bux. But the consideration for the sale was money advanced by the Calcutta business and the Exhibits 12B, 13B, 14A and 15A confirm the verbal evidence that this house belonged in reality to the firm; repairs were charged to the firm and the rent was included in the profits which were divided among the partners. To make the matter more clear we had the pages represented by Exhibits 12B and 15A translated by one of the Court Interpreters and Translators, and these show conclusively that the entries were made under the heading of the firm, and in particular that the sum of Rs. 43½-11-6, which was the balance on the house account, was included in the amount credited to the profit account of the firm.

Reliance, however, was placed on the Hebanama of Hazir Bux of the 31st October 1907 (which document and the deed of dissolution of partnership were admitted by consent of learned Counsel for the plaintiff and Mahomed Ibrahim during the course of the argument) as showing that this house did in fact belong to Kader Bux and Hazir Bux, and not to the firm.

I am not prepared to disturb the learned Judge's finding, having regard to the verbal evidence, corroborated as it is by the firm's books, that this house was the property of the firm and that Kader Bux and Hazir Bux must be taken to have held it in trust for the partnership.

Thirdly, reliance was placed on the statement in Hazir Bux's Hebanama that Kader Bux had "owing to its being considered advisable," or according to another translation for "politic reasons," substituted the name of Mahomed Ibrahim in the place of his own in the books of the shop and had also declared his son to be owner of his share and had got the credit and debit entries made in the name of Mahomed Ibrahim: I agree with the learned Judge that this is not conclusive against the Heba, and indeed the reference to the declaration by Kader Bux that his son was owner of his share may be said to be consistent with the Heba having been made.

Fourthly—it was urged that Mahomed Ibrahim was only 16 or 17 years old at the date of the Heba and that it was improbable that his father would entrust him at so early an age with his share in the business. This is a matter for consideration undoubtedly, but upon such consideration it must be remembered that the evidence was that Mahomed Ibrahim's uncle was the manager together with Siddik and that apparently his father had not taken a very active part in the working of this part of the joint business.

Fifthly—it was urged that the father would not have given the one son so large a portion of his property: In this connection it must be remembered that at the time Mahomed Ibrahim was the only son; it is said that Kader Bux's wife was in the family way, but the child was not born until eight months afterwards, and there is no evidence to show that Kader Bux was aware of his wife's condition at the time of the alleged Heba; apparently at that time the Calcutta business was not so valuable and did not bear such a large proportion to the rest of the father's property as it did afterwards.

There is, however, another matter upon which much reliance has been placed by the learned Counsel for the appellant, viz., that in the deed of release of 9th January 1908, Mahomed Ibrahim submitted a statement that the Calcutta business belonged not to him only, but to him and his two brothers.

The beginning of the declaration in this deed is not inconsistent with the case of the defendant Ibrahim, but on the contrary to some extent it confirms it, inasmuch as it recites that it was the intention of Kader Bux "to give away the whole of his properties to his three sons Mohamed Ibrahim, Mahomed Solaiman, and Abdus Samad, and with this object he made his eldest son Mohamed Ibrahim the proprietor of the shop in Calcutta," which may be taken as a reference to the first Heba in 1897; but it then proceeds to say that prior to his death "he made a gift and gave away all his moveable and immoveable properties situate in District Balia, Calcutta, and Muzaffarpore to his sons aforesaid and made them proprietors and put them in possession of the same, etc."

In the schedule the Calcutta shop is specifically mentioned as part of the property which was held and possessed by the three sons as proprietors in accordance with the oral gift and grant aforesaid.

On the face of the deed, therefore, there appears to be an inconsistency; for in the one place it is declared that for the purpose of carrying out his intention of giving away all his property to his three sons he made Ibrahim the proprietor of the Calcutta shop; in another place it is declared that the shop was held and possessed by the three sons as proprietors.

By reference to one of the Court Interpreters it appeared that the words in the original which have been translated "the oral gift and grant," are more accurately translated thus: "the Heba and oral gift."

Such words are, in my judgment, consistent with either case, viz., that there was a Heba and subsequent oral grant, or that there was only the Heba which is further described as an oral grant. It is urged that the above-mentioned statements are not inconsistent if the first Heba of 22nd April 1897 is regarded as a benami transaction; it should, however, be noted that so far as the deed itself is concerned, it makes it clear at any rate that the intention of Kader Bux was to give all his property to his three sons, and even if the first Heba was in the nature of a benami transaction, the second was not, and if that was a good and valid Heba, transferring all Kader Bux's property to the three sons, the plaintiff's claim would be defeated.

We are asked to conclude that the above-mentioned description of the property in the deed is so inconsistent with the evidence of Mohamed Ibrahim that his evidence should not be accepted. The learned Judge in the course of a very careful and exhaustive judgment does not deal with this particular point, and I am not surprised, for I cannot find that a single question was put in cross-examination of the defendant Ibrahim as to how the Calcutta business came to be described in the schedule to the deed as belonging to the three sons and not to him only. This leads me to think that not much reliance, if any, was placed on this point at the trial.

In the course of its preparation the deed went through several hands, and instructions apparently were given by various people to three individuals at least at different times, and it may be that in consequence confusion may have arisen. What happened was this. Shukrulla got the draft prepared, apparently on verbal instructions, at Allahabad by Nawab Abdul Majid, a Barrister-at-law. This draft was read to him by the Barrister's clerk and he says that he noticed that in the draft no amount of money was mentioned and no list of property was included, while in the deed, which subsequently he heard the Sub-Registrar read and explain to the ladies, these matters were mentioned.

Next, the draft was taken by Abdul Hamid and Haji Ahmed to Moulvi Abdulla a Pleader at Ghazipur, who was called a witness and who identified the draft. In this draft there is no list of properties: and by reference to the original the draft finishes at the end of the third clause (or 1st paragraph on page 147 of the paper-book) and by the interpreter's translation, the words "verbal gift" in clause three should be "Heba and verbal gift."

The draft was then shown by Ibrahim to a Pleader at Rashra, Lala Ramkrishna Lall.

The draft and stamp were then taken by Ibrahim, Haji Ahmed and Abdul Ahmed to Hadi Hossain, a scribe, for the purpose of his making a fair copy, and to him was given a "list of the properties"—See page 84 of the paper-book.

As far as I know, there is no evidence as to who made up the list of properties or how the properties came to be described in the manner set out in the deed. I understand the deed is written in Urdu, a language which, as already mentioned, Ibrahim has sworn he cannot read or write. The comment made as to the schedule in the application for guardianship is applicable to the schedule of this deed, viz., that if Ibrahim did not know how the property was described in the schedule, he was deliberately creating evidence which would be contrary to the case he was about to set up.

I am not surprised that a deed passing through so many hands and prepared in such a manner as that above mentioned should present some inconsistencies, and though this deed is an important factor in the case, I do not think, having regard to the above-mentioned matters, so much importance should be attached to it as if the whole of it (including the schedules) had been settled by a competent conveyancer.

This deed unexplained, added to the other matters already referred to, does raise some doubt in my mind, as to whether the first Heba was a benami transaction, and it is very unfortunate that this particular matter was not drawn to the attention of the defendant, so that the Court should have been in possession of any explanation he might have been able to give. On the other hand the learned Judge has seen the witness Ibrahim in the witness-box and subjected to a long cross-examination, and he has come to the conclusion that he was a truthful and reliable witness, and in my judgment it would not be just or fair to the defendant for this Court, sitting as a Court of Appeal, to come to the conclusion that his evidence must be unreliable because of the contents of the schedule of this deed and the criticisms of learned Counsel upon it, when the point was never put to the defendant in the Court of first instance. He has sworn that this was not a benami transaction: this evidence is corroborated by other witnesses and by Mahomed Siddik (who was also described by the learned Judge as a reliable witness), the entries in the books, and the deed of dissolution of partnership; and in a case like this where the documentary evidence is conflicting, in my judgment great weight should be given to the opinion of the learned Judge who has seen and heard the witnesses and this is a case in which very important witnesses were seen and heard by the learned Judge. The principle on which a question such as this should be dealt with by a Court of Appeal is laid down in Colonial Securities Trust Co. v. Massey (3), where Lord Esher said: "We must see first of all what is the rule of conduct of the Court of Appeal when hearing an appeal on a question of fact from the judgment of a Judge trying a case without a Jury. It cannot be shaped according to the rule of conduct of the Court of Common Law before the Judicature Acts, but must follow that adopted by the Courts of Appeal in Chancery, because before that Court only could an appeal from a Judge sitting without a Jury have then come. In the Courts of Equity the matter appealed against was the decision of a Judge and for that reason such an appeal was called a re-hearing, since the Court could set aside the decree or judgment of the Judge who had tried the case, and pronounce another decree or judgment. The Court of Appeal in Chancery acted upon this rule, that they would not allow an appeal unless they were satisfied that the Judge was wrong. If they were in doubt, at the end of the argument, whether the Judge was right or wrong, since the burden of proof was on the appellant and he had not satisfied them that the Judge was wrong, they dismissed the appeal. That is the rule of conduct which we ought now to apply in this Court. The Judge in the Court below may have heard witnesses; and if so, the Court of Appeal would be more unwilling to set aside his judgment, especially if there was a conflict of evidence, than in a case tried on written evidence where the witnesses were not before the Judge, because of the opportunity afforded of judging how far the witnesses were worthy of credit." The burden of proof is now on the appellant and I am not satisfied that the learned Judge was wrong on this point, and I, therefore, think that his judgment on this point should not be disturbed.

With regard to the second Heba of 19th July 1907, the learned Judge has found that the existence and validity of the second Heba was established. As regards the question whether a gift was in fact then made by Kader Bux to his three sons, in my judgment, there was ample evidence to support the learned Judge's finding. As regards the extent and the effect of the gift, I am satisfied on the evidence that Kader Bux intended, as stated in the deed of release dated 9th January 1908, to give the whole of his property to his three sons to the exclusion of the rest of his family. If the first Heba was not of a benami nature, then the defendant's case is proved in its entirety; but even if it was benami, the object and intention of the second Heba was to vest all Kader Bux's property in his three sons, which would be sufficient to bar the plaintiff's claim, provided that the gift was a valid Heba. In this connection I may point out that much reliance was placed by the plaintiff on the Hebanama of Hazir Bux as showing that the first gift of Kader Bux was benami. This document was executed on 31st October 1907, two months after Kader Bux's death and about two months before the deed of release. If this document is to be accepted as showing the true state of affairs as the plaintiff urged, it is strongly against the plaintiff on this part of the case; after reference to Kader Bux's death the words of the document are:—"Now his sons, S. M. Ibrahim, Mohamed Solaiman and Abdus Samad, are in his place holding and possessing the property left by him as owners," a clear indication that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share in her father's estate.

The validity of the second Heba is disputed first on the ground that it was a gift by Kader Bux to Mahomed Ibrahim, an adult, and to his other two sons who were minors at the time, and was consequently void, reliance being placed upon the rule of Muhammadan Law as to confusion. Certain texts in support of this proposition were relied upon, and the text of Al Hakim may be taken as an example. Al Hakim states:—"A man makes a gift of a house to two of his sons, one of whom is adult and the other is a minor and the adult son takes possession (of it). The gift is absolutely void, and this is the correct view. For the gift in favour of the minor is complete at the very moment of the declaration of the gift because the seisin or possession of the father is equivalent to his (minor's) seisin or possession." (Qibz): Whereas the gift in favour of the adult son stands in need of acceptance. Thus the gift in favour of the minor precedes (that in favour of the adult), and thus confusion (shuyu) is occasioned. And the device is that he (father) should deliver possession of the house to the adult son and then make a gift of it to both of them. Thus it is laid down in the Wajiz of Al Kardari."

Fatawa Alamgiri. Vol. IV, p. 549, Ed. Cal., and the case of Nizam ul din v. Zubaida Bibi (4) was also referred to.

If the rule above stated applies to this case, it must be given effect to: but it is to be noted that it has been laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Muhammad Muntaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (5) that the doctrine relating to the invalidity of gifts of Musha is wholly unadapted to a progressive state of society and ought to be confined within the strictest rules.

The principle of the rule in question seems to be that when a person makes a gift to an adult, and an infant, who is in the donor's care or guardianship, the donor is assumed to take seisin at once of the minor's share, whereas the gift in favour of the adult requires acceptance, and thus confusion is occasioned.

According to the evidence in this case, the gift of the property was made to Ibrahim and his two younger brothers, and Kader

Bux asked Ibrahim to accept the property on behalf of himself and his two brothers—see for instance pages 128, 137 and 379 of the paper-book; and that he then handed over all the documents to Ibrahim requesting him to take charge of them for himself and his two younger brothers.

If this evidence is accepted as to the manner in which the gift was made, it seems to me that it does not come within the above rule, for Ibrahim must be taken to have accepted the property for himself and his brothers at one and the same time and thereby placed himself in the position of trustee or guardian for his brothers, and consequently the donor would not take seisin of the property for his younger sons and no 'confusion' would arise.

There appears to be no dispute as to the validity of a gift to two donees, one of whom is an adult and the other a minor, but who is not in the guardianship of the donor at the time of the gift.

No case has been produced to show that the doctrine relied on has been applied to such a case as the present, and keeping in view the opinion of the Privy Council that it should be kept within the strictest rules, I am not prepared to extend it and apply it to this case.

Next it was urged that possession had not been given in such a way as to make the gift valid. According to Muhammadan Law, seisin or actual possession does not seem to be necessary to complete the Heba—and the correct view seems to be that the donor must evince his intention of making a complete transfer of the ownership in the property from himself to the donee by placing the latter in a position to enjoy it beneficially, or to make use of it consistently with its purpose, and in considering this question the relationship of the parties must be kept in view. In other words, to be in a position to take possession is tantamount to taking possession; and to place the donee in a position to take possession is equivalent to delivery of possession—similarly investing with authority for that purpose is equally sufficient—see the authorities cited at pages 90 and 122 of Ameer Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. I, 4th Edn. In this case as regards the share in the Calcutta business and the Taltollah house, Ibrahim was in fact in possession at the time, and as regards the rest of the property, the second Heba seems to have been made with much publicity, and by handing over all the documents, keys, Rokars, books, etc., which Kader Bux possessed in respect of all his properties to Mahomed Ibrahim, and by asking him to take charge thereof, Kader Bux intimated his intention of giving him possession, and thereby put him in a position to take possession. In addition there is some evidence that from that date the donees did take possession, see for instance pages 128 and 137 of the paper-book.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the Heba of the 19th July 1907 which the learned Judge has found was in fact made, was valid according to Muhammadan Law.

That being so, the whole of Kader Bux's property passed by reason of the two Hebas to his sons, and the plaintiff has no claim thereto. This conclusion is sufficient to justify the dismissal of the appeal.

Other points, however, were argued before us and it is necessary, therefore, to express my opinion thereon.

The defendant Ibrahim attempted to establish by evidence a custom to the effect that in the Eraki community, to which the plaintiff and Ibrahim belonged, females do not under any circumstances inherit any property.

With regard to this, in the first place, it is to be noticed that this was not the custom pleaded.

The pleadings alleged that the members of the Eraki community were governed in the matter of succession and inheritance by the Hindu Law. Under that law, as is well known, under certain circumstances females do inherit. In the second place, it was admitted that such a custom as the defendant attempted to establish had never yet been recognised in any Court of Law in India. Thirdly, there was evidence brought forward by the plaintiff showing some instances where the alleged custom had not been followed, and there was general evidence produced by the plaintiff against the existence of such a custom. Fourthly, the defendant's witnesses were not agreed as to the incidents of the custom, as for instance, Ibrahim himself at page 393 said, "I am not fully aware of the provisions of Hindu Law, but if under certain circumstances females inherit under that form of law, the same thing applies to us under certain circumstances as well." Such a statement is inconsistent with the custom attempted to be established, viz., that under no circumstances do females inherit, and it was contrary to the evidence of his witnesses taken on commission.

Again some of the witnesses asserted that it was part of the custom to maintain mother and sister (e.g., Abdul Mian's evidence at page 78), whereas others declared that the sister and mother have no right to maintenance (see Abdul Latif, page 65, Abdur Salam, page 57, Wahbullah, page 52, and Musammal Khadija, at page 106, who declared that her position was no better than that of a charity girl or a slave girl).

Now a custom must be ancient, certain and reasonable, and being in derogation of the general rules of law must be construed strictly: Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal (6), and Sir Montague Smith in giving the judgment of the Privy Council in Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal (7) said: "Their Lordships are fully sensible of the importance and justice of giving effect to long established usages existing in particular districts and families in India, but it is of the essence of special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession that they should be ancient and invariable and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence that Courts can be assured of their existence and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends."

In my judgment the evidence in this case does not comply with the above-mentioned essentials. I do not think the evidence is clear or unambiguous: it does not show with certainty what the custom was: and the custom sought to be proved varies from that relied upon in the pleadings: and for these reasons I agree with the learned Judge that the evidence failed to establish the custom relied on.

The last question which I need to consider is that relating to the release of the 9th January 1908.

The learned Judge has found on the evidence as a fact that the deed was explained to the plaintiff and that she did receive the consideration of Rs. 4,500 and that the deed was not executed by her through misrepresentation and fraud. In my judgment there was ample evidence on which the learned Judge was entitled to arrive at this conclusion, and I am not prepared to interfere with his finding of fact in this matter. The fraudulent representation relied upon was that the defendant Ibrahim had represented to her that the document was merely a power-of-attorney necessary for the preservation of the estate. The deed was executed on her behalf by her husband, but when the plaintiff came to Court making the claim in this case, his evidence was that he himself was a party to a fraudulent conspiracy to deceive her.

This witness was examined before the learned Judge who disbelieved him, and it is to be noted that during the course of the argument in this Court the learned Counsel for the appellant stated that he could not support the contention as to the fraudulent representation, and that he must also throw over the evidence of the plaintiff's husband. This is material, for it amounts to an admission that the plaintiff, in order to avoid being bound by the release, set up a case at the trial which the learned Judge has found to be a false one, and which, it is now admitted, cannot be supported.

It is not necessary for me to go through the evidence as to the explanation of the deed to the plaintiff or the receipt of the money by her: I think, however, it is desirable to draw attention to the endorsement on the deed by the Sub-Registrar. This gentleman could not be called as a witness as he is dead, but the memorandum endorsed by him in the course of his duty as Sub-Registrar contains material corroboration of the evidence on the questions of explanation and receipt of the money.

Further, it is to be noted that the deed was executed in an open manner, the maternal uncle and husband of the plaintiff, amongst others, being present and signing the deed.

MARIAM BIBI v. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

I think it must be taken from the evidence that the plaintiff and her husband knew perfectly well what she was doing by executing the release, and that the plaintiff received the money. This is in accordance with the learned Judge's finding of fact: it may, however, well be that her husband, who was in need of money, disposed of it.

It cannot be said that she had not independent advice: for she was living with her husband, and his story, no doubt made up for the purpose of this claim, that he was a party to a deception upon her having been discarded, it must be taken that he, knowing well the facts of the case and what was in the deed, was in a position to advise her.

But it is urged that this was a case in which the plaintiff, being a Pardanshin lady, should have had independent legal advice, and that she was labouring under a mistake as to her rights both as regards custom and the Hebas or gifts referred to in the release.

—The law with regard to this question has been laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (1) and Kali Bakhsh Singh v. Ram Gopal Singh (2). In the latter case it is stated at page 91* that there is no absolute rule of law that a Pardanshin lady must have independent advice. "The possession of independent advice or the absence of it is a fact to be taken into consideration and well weighed on a review of the whole circumstances relevant to the issue of whether the grantor thoroughly comprehended and deliberately and of her own free will carried out the transaction. If she did, the issue is solved and the transaction is upheld, but if upon a review of the facts which include the nature of the thing done and the training and habit of mind of the grantor as well as the proximate circumstances affecting the execution:—if the conclusion is reached that the obtaining of independent advice would not really have made any difference in the result then the deed ought to stand." As regards the custom, the learned Judge finds that it may well be that there has been a practice among certain families of this community to exclude women from succession, though there was not a custom in the true legal sense of the word: and I doubt very much, if the plaintiff had obtained independent legal advice on this point, it would have made any difference or prevented her from executing the release. But even if she had been advised that there was no such custom binding on her as that alleged in the release, there was the fact of the two Hebas, the second of which was made in her presence and of the first of which, according to the evidence, she must have been fully aware: As by one or both of these Kader Bux, in my judgment, made a valid and effective disposal of all his property to his sons, it cannot be said that when she executed the deed she was labouring under any mistake as to her rights in this respect or that the parties in this respect were labouring under a mutual mistake or misapprehension as to their respective rights. For these reasons, in my judgment, the deed of the 9th January 1908 was a good and valid deed whereby the plaintiff for good consideration relinquished all claim and right to her father's properties.

With reference to this deed of release, the learned Counsel for the plaintiff relied upon it as showing that there was only one Heba, that by such Heba all the property passed to the three sons, and consequently the defendant's case as to the first Heba could not be sustained. With this I have already dealt in the course of my judgment: and I only refer to it again to point out that even if this contention be accepted in its entirety, there still remains the second Heba in the plaintiff's way, and I am satisfied on the evidence that, whether by reason of the two Hebas or, (if, contrary to the view expressed by the learned Judge, the first was merely a benami transaction) then by reason of the second Heba, Kader Bux intended to dispose and did dispose of all his properties to his three sons to the exclusion of the other members of the family, and whatever the rights of the sons might be "inter se," this would dispose of the plaintiff's claim, for as far as she is concerned it would be immaterial whether the property passed by one or both of the Hebas.

Speaking generally of this case, the learned Judge tried the case at great length and examined the evidence with much care. I do not find any errors of apprehension such as could justify this Court in reversing his decision, nor do I find any misconception of law. That being so, as was pointed out by their Lordships in a recent case in the Privy Council, Rivers Steam Navigation Co. v. Hathor Steamship Co. (8), it would be wrong for this Court to interfere with the Judge's decision. For the above reasons, in my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—The plaintiff is the daughter of Haji Kader Bux deceased and she claims according to the Muhammadan Law 7/88th part of his estate. To this she would be, it is not disputed, entitled if the defence is not made out. That defence is three-fold: (1) that the parties belong to a community called Erakis whose custom as to inheritance excludes the plaintiff, (2) that if this be not so, at any rate there was nothing for the plaintiff to inherit as her father had during his lifetime made over all his estate by two Hebas to his sons, (3) lastly, that if there was no custom and no gift, the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 4,500 surrendered all and any rights she might have possessed in her father's estate.

I will deal with these defences in this order. A large body of evidence was adduced upon the question of custom and I was first somewhat impressed by it, supported in part as it is by the Government publication on the Castes and Tribes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, but a closer analysis of the evidence and the pleadings and the fact elicited by my brother Mookerjee that the bulk of the evidence on custom was given with reference to the custom set up in the pleadings and not that in the issue, and that the defendant Ibrahim even now takes his stand on the pleadings, have satisfied me that the custom has not been made out in such a way as to justify a reversal of Mr. Justice Greaves' judgment that it has not been proved. I think there is no doubt that there is a community called Eraki, and I should say that it is possible on the evidence that they were Hindus converted to Mahomedanism. The point, however, is not of importance and I do not decide it, but I decide that if this community has a custom which is in derogation of Muhammadan Law, this has not been made out. It is very important in this connection to see what the pleadings say. The written statement was as follows:—

"That this defendant denies the allegations contained in paragraph 3 of the plaint and states that even if the said Haji Kader Bux had left an estate which he did not, the plaintiff being a daughter would not have been entitled to 7/88th or any share in the said estate, inasmuch as the community, which is known as the Eraki community and to which the plaintiff and the defendants belong, though governed in all other respects by the Sunni school of Muhammadan Law, is like the Khojas and Memons governed in matters of succession and inheritance by the Hindu Law, and the plaintiff is not entitled by the law and custom governing the parties to any share in the estate, if any, of the said Haji Kader Bux."

The learned Judge was quite right in deciding that the evidence does not establish the custom pleaded, that is to say, that the community is governed in matters of succession by Hindu Law, for the evidence rather seeks to establish that in no circumstances do females take by inheritance in this community. No doubt the issue as framed was "Is there a custom among the Eraki community excluding females from inheritance", but the evidence on commission was taken upon the case as stated in the pleadings and before the framing of this issue and even at the trial Mahomed Ibrahim adhered to the case as set out in his written statement. Without looking at the matter technically, it must be admitted that the form in which the written statement puts the case goes against the existence of the custom. For if females are excluded under all circumstances, how came it that the written statement alleged that the succession was governed by Hindu Law according to which females do in some circumstances succeed? Mahomed Ibrahim qualifies this in his evidence by saying that he is not fully aware of the provisions of Hindu Law, but if in certain circumstances females inherit under that form of law, "then the same thing applies to us under certain circumstances as well." This is contrary to other evidence given on his behalf. This evidence in itself is not altogether the same in the mouths of the various witnesses. The Government publication edited by Mr. Crookes, to which I think we may refer, whilst it supports the exclusion of daughters, unless provision be made during their father's lifetime, shows that there are cases in which women do succeed, thus contradicting those witnesses who allege that the custom excludes females altogether. It is admitted that the alleged custom has not been recognised by any Court and the documents before us go against it. For the judgments to which the learned Judge refers show at least this, when read with the evidence, that the parties to these litigations were Erakis, and yet though the custom might have been pleaded in defence, it was not. This is not necessarily conclusive, but it is some evidence against the existence of the custom. I think also the pleadings in pending suits excluded by the learned Judge were also evidence on the same ground. Thus Mahomed Amin, though alleging that Mahomed Jan and Mahomed Husain knew of the alleged custom, yet says they must have forgotten to plead it in the written statement in their suit. It is also to be remembered that most of the witnesses who speak to the alleged custom were personally interested to establish it. Nor must we overlook the alleged fact of the Hebas and the release. As regards the first alleged Heba, if it was, as the plaintiff alleges, benami, there would be some reason for its execution at the date alleged, whatever might be the custom. Next, if the Heba was a real transaction, it is possible, though I think on the facts not made out, that Kader Bux wished to immediately advance his eldest son to property which, under the alleged custom, he could only inherit at his father's death. But as regards the second Heba, no such explanation is possible. This was, it is said, executed only a month before his death. The reason assigned for it by Mahomed Ibrahim, namely, that his father intended to go on pilgrimage, is not supported by the other evidence, and I doubt its truth. If further he was ill, the possibility of his death may have been present to his mind. But why should the Heba be executed in favour of sons who according to the alleged custom inherited the property covered thereby a month or so later? Doubtless a person may make a disposition in conformity with the laws of inheritance, but the fact that it is alleged that a Heba was executed, has some bearing on the question of the existence of a custom which rendered any Heba unnecessary. It is not irrelevant also to consider that it was further thought necessary to get a release from the plaintiff acknowledging a custom which, according to the evidence, is well known to every one. I conclude, therefore, that the alleged custom has not been proved.

I pass then to the question of the Hebas. The first is dated the 22nd April 1897 and is said to have been in favour of Kader Bux's eldest son Mahomed Ibrahim. The property said to have been covered by it is the Caloutta business. The plaintiff alleges that if there was any such transaction, it was benami and not real. There is no document. The alleged Heba was oral. Its existence depends on two bases: (1) some oral evidence of which two witnesses were alone heard by the learned Judge, and the rest on commission and (2) some entries in the books made at the time. Some exception has been taken to the mention of benami, and it has been said that the matter was not argued before the learned Judge or mentioned in the evidence. This is not so, for the learned Judge mentions the matter of benami, and it was put specifically in cross examination during the commission to Abdus Sattar. The plaintiff says that there were no Hebas in fact or law and that if there was a transaction in 1897 it was benami and not real and that there was in fact no Heba. It is true it is argued that the evidence is that some entries were made at the time but if so, these were a mere paper affair, not affecting the real ownership or possession.

Now it is to be observed that at the time of the first Heba Mahomed Ibrahim was then a minor of 15, 16 or 17 years of age. The father was then in good health and no reason is assigned why the father ten years before his death should assign to his son what was perhaps his chief property and business, even if there were any other properties at the time, which is not clear. The evidence is that the value of the property of the alleged second gift in 1907 was of somewhat equal value. There is nothing however which clearly shows what, if any thing, was left to Kader Bux after the alleged gift. Moreover the son was a minor. There was no stated urgency for making a minor son a partner. The only reason assigned for the alleged gift is that given by Mahatabo Bibee, who says that she enquired of her husband why he made that Heba—she said “I enquired from him why did he make that Heba and he replied that Ibrahim was his son and I made him owner just like myself and made him seated on my gaddi (Juisa ham waisa woh).” This is no explanation at all. Others can give no explanation. If Kader Bux wanted him to take up his place in the business, there was no need to retire. He could have kept him with him. The defendant is so anxious to disassociate Kader Bux from the business after the date of the Heba, that it is denied that he was ever afterwards even consulted on any occasion: a manifestly improbable statement. There was no apparent reason for his retiring from this business and making it over to a minor. Why, it is asked, was there any anxiety to put him in his place and at any rate a boy of 16 years old or less. Further such a gift would exclude any possible issue, and it is noteworthy that the second son was born on the 30th December 1897 and was, at the time of the alleged Heba, en ventre sa mere. This was said to be the less necessary that according to the alleged custom the sons would have taken without any Heba.

According to Mahomed Amin the defendant Ibrahim was a partner in the firm before the date of the first Heba. This contradicts other evidence that he was not a partner, but employed in the firm. At this time there were, it is said, three sets of accounts, account No. 1 which was the partnership account in the name of Kader Bux Mahomed Ibrahim, account No. 2 in the name of the first in which personal drawings are said to be debited, account No. 3 in the name of the latter, being, it is said, deposits made by Ibrahim of money given him by his father. It is suggested that the account that stood in the name of Ibrahim before the alleged first Heba was really the account of the father. These sums are supposed to represent gifts of large amounts extending from Rs. 2,000 to 5,000 by the father to the son. We find from Exhibit 5d that the account standing to the credit of this young boy in 1897 was Rs. 14,386-1-0. This to me is a very improbable story. What is more likely is that the father opened an interest account of monies of his own in the son's name. The source of the money being the father, the presumption is that the account was his. This so-called private account of Ibrahim is said to have been started when he was 14 or 15. I do not believe that the father gave this young boy these large sums amounting to Rs. 2,000 at a time. It will be observed that Mahomed Ibrahim's name was used before he was a partner. After the 22nd April 1897 it is said that the first account was changed into the name of Mahomed Ibrahim alone and the other accounts continued as before. — But Ibrahim says that the name of the second account indicated nothing for that though the account stood in the name of Kader Bux, he, Ibrahim, was the malik of that account. So that according to the defendant's case both before and after the Heba names were used in the accounts which did not indicate ownership.

That there was some change in the account in the year 1897 there is, I think, no doubt. The defendant's evidence is on this point supported by a document on which the plaintiff relies (Exhibit H, the Heba of Hazir Bux the brother of Kader Bux), in which it is stated that credit and debit entries in respect of capital, profit and loss were made in the name of Mahomed Ibrahim. It may be admitted that this change of entry was done with some purpose. But whether that purpose was a benami or a real gift, cannot be inferred from the transfer entries alone. For it is admitted that whether the transaction was of the one nature or the other, there would have been the change in the entries which were made. That a transfer might take place in the name of Ibrahim when there was admittedly no gift is shown by the Motihari account, where the whole amount is transferred to the name of

Mahomed Ibrahim though there had been no gift of the Motihari business. That there was a gift really depends on the credit given to the oral evidence, for there is not, in my opinion, any document tendered by the defendant which is inconsistent with the benami. I am not unmindful of Exhibit 3, which is a deed of dissolution of partnership dated 7th February 1907 between Abdul Gunny and others and Mahomed Siddik. This document was tendered by the defendants but was excluded by the learned Judge. It is, in my opinion, evidence and that document states that the share of Mahomed Ibrahim was seven annas and three pies and the name of Kader Bux does not occur. This, however, is not inconsistent with the case that there was no real Heba: for, of course, whenever a benami transaction is effected, everything is done which is necessary to give it the appearance of reality. If Mahomed Ibrahim's name stood for his father in 1897, it would stand for him in the deed of dissolution in 1907. There is no document, in my opinion, which supports the defendant's case. It is admitted that so far as the public were concerned, the old name of the firm was retained notwithstanding the change of name in the books. No notice was given to the public that Kader Bux had ceased to be a partner, though little stress can be laid on this circumstance in the case of a firm of this kind. The gift is said to be oral. There is no mention in the transfer entry of the transfer being made on account of a gift. There is no contemporary document which supports the defendant's case. It does not appear that there were any drawings on the partnership account, but as this occurred also as regards Hazir Bux's account all that can be said is that as this account was not drawn on, it does not help the defendant. No reason is assigned why the Heba was not made in writing, as for instance the Heba of Hazir Bux was. According, however, to Ibrahim his father Kader Bux was anxious about the matter before his death and wished to state in writing that this and the other Heba had been made. He is unable to explain if everything was in order why his father should wish to do this. There are, however, three documents besides the alleged release which directly put in doubt both this and the second Heba. On the 13th October 1904, two persons named Abdul Bari and Abdul Majid made a conveyance of the premises No. 47, Taltolla Lane (Exhibit I). This document purports to be between these persons of the first part and Hazir Bux and Kader Bux the purchasers of the other part. It recites that the vendors were indebted to the purchasers in respect of Rs. 7,000 and by this conveyance conveyed the property to them for that sum. It is quite clear that the conveyance is to the two individual persons named and not to the firm as alleged by the defendant. The suggestion is that the name of the firm was inserted by mistake. This was after the date of the alleged Heba. Now the defendant's case is that this purchase was made with moneys of the firm of which Ibrahim was, and Kader Bux was not, a partner. Whether the debt was to the whole firm or to the two partners mentioned in the conveyance is disputed. If the money was that of the firm, then the conveyance would not have been to Kader Bux who, according to the defendant's case, had long ceased to be a member of the firm. I do not agree with the learned Judge that the conveyance was to the firm and the alternative suggestion that if it was in fact conveyed to these two individuals they held it in trust for the partnership, is not founded on the evidence which suggests that the conveyance, notwithstanding its terms was to the firm. Further the Heba (Exhibit H) made by Hazir Bux in November 1907 refers to the house in 47, Taltolla Lane, as belonging to him and his deceased brother Kader Bux, a statement which the former's son, a supporter of Ibrahim, attributes also to mistake.

Further in the schedule of the alleged release dated 9th January 1903, a document drawn up in consultation with several Pleaders on behalf of the defendant Ibrahim and on which he relies to defeat the plaintiff's claim, it is re-affirmed that the house at 47, Taltolla Lane, belonged as to half (not to the firm) but to Haji Kader Bux, the ancestor deceased. It further contains the statement that this property is "held and possessed as proprietors by Mahomed Ibrahim, Mahomed Sulaiman and Abdus Samad, sons of the Haji Sahab aforesaid."

MARIAM BIBEE v. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

But how is this in the defendant's case? If it was bought with the money of a firm of which Kader Bux had ceased to be a partner, the latter could not have a half or other share in it. Nextly if the property as alleged belonged to the firm and Muhammad Ibrahim had alone a share therein to the exclusion of his brothers, how is it that in the schedule Ibrahim's sharers are declared to be co-sharers in it? I am not overlooking the fact that the release itself speaks of Ibrahim having been made proprietor of the Calcutta shop.

Nextly, there is the Hebanama (Exhibit H) a registered document by Kader Bux's brother Hazir Bux in favour of his sons, dated in November 1807, after the death of Kader Bux—as regards this document as well as Exhibit 3, the learned Judge in his judgment says they are not evidence though they were admitted and marked as exhibits. I have already expressed my opinion that the defendant's evidence (Exhibit 3) is evidence, and in my opinion the plaintiff's document (Exhibit H) is so. It was asserted in the evidence that Hazir Bux as partner was aware of and had assented to the alleged Heba, an allegation this document refutes. Now this document contains a recital of great importance in this case. This document runs as follows:—"I am Sheikh Hazir Bux son of Sheikh Rahat Ali deceased, sect Shaikh, occupation Zemindari, money-lending and trade, inhabitant of Mouza Kotwari, Parganah Lakhneswar, District Balia.

"Whereas I and Haji Kader Bux, deceased, were full brothers, I and the said deceased brother jointly started hide and money-lending business at different places wherein our shares were half and half, which are by the grace of God going on up to this time. So that (we) established a firm for Hide Commission Agency business in the town of Calcutta, wherein the business of Hide Commission Agency is carried on and which is at present situate at No. 3, Damzen's Lane, Chinapara, in the town of Calcutta, and the name of the firm is Haji Kader Bux Hazir Bux. In the capital thereof, out of the sixteen annas of the whole capital a share of seven and a-half annas belongs to me and a share of seven and a-half annas to Haji Kader Bux (my) deceased brother aforesaid, and a share of half an anna to Shaikh Muhammad Amin of Kotwari and a share of half an anna to Shaikh Abdul Latif of Kotwari. It is a period of about ten or twelve years since my deceased brother Shaikh Kader Bux owing to its being considered advisable (literally by reason of some advisability) substituted the name of his son Shaikh Muhammad Ibrahim in the place of his own name in the papers of the said shop, such as books, accounts, etc., and having also declared his son Shaikh Muhammad Ibrahim to be the owner of his share of capital, got the credit and debit entries in respect of capital, profit, loss, etc., made in the name of Shaikh Muhammad Ibrahim aforesaid in the papers of the shop, so that the credit and debit entries in respect of capital and profit, loss, etc., of the Commission Agency firm in Calcutta are up to this time made in the name of Shaikh Muhammad Ibrahim aforesaid in the papers of the shop but the name of the firm continues to be Haji Kader Bux Hazir Bux as before." After some further matter not relevant, it says: "There is also a house in Calcutta purchased by a bill of sale which belongs to me and my deceased brother Haji Kader Bux and is situate at No. 47, Taltolla Lane, in the town of Calcutta. I and my deceased brother Haji Kader Bux are half and half owners and co-sharers thereof. The partners of the Calcutta firm have no connection with the said house."—The words "by reason of some advisability" have been at the request of the parties translated by Mr. Justice Imam as "for some politic reasons." To my mind the first passage very clearly indicates that there was no real Heba. It states that he was a sharer with his brother "up to this time," which means all along, i.e., with Kader Bux and his representatives, for Kader Bux was then dead. This could not be so, if there was the first Heba, for he would have shared with Ibrahim, not with Kader Bux, in that case. It very carefully avoids all mention of a Heba and states the fact that "for some politic reasons" he (Kader) substituted the name of his son in the books of the firm which appears to be a fact, and declared his son to be owner and that the entries are in the name of Ibrahim, though the name of the firm was the same as before. If there was a gift, why not mention it? What is mentioned is a declaration for "some politic reasons" and transfer entries; and the share of Kader Bux, who is supposed to have transferred it to his son, is stated "to be going on up to this time." This evidence very clearly in my opinion negatives the Heba. It is unexplained how a person like Hazir Bux, who was in a position to know the real facts and, so far as it appears, had no interest to misrepresent them, should thus either impugn or ignore the first Heba. The explanation that all these statements were due to his illness seems to be absurd. The statement is obviously a carefully considered one. I have already referred to the statement in this document regarding the Taltolla house, which also negatives the Heba.

Then we find that an application was made on 9th June 1903 by Muhammad Ibrahim for a certificate of guardianship of the person and property of his minor brothers, and in this document no mention is made of either of the first or second Heba and in the schedule of properties, 3rd of which is declared to belong to the minors, is included, both the house No. 47, Taltolla Lane, and the outstandings of the Calcutta business in which, if the first Heba were a reality, the minors had no interest whatever. The explanation given as regards this is that his servant Budhraj wrote saying that the business was suffering for want of a certificate. An application was sent to Ibrahim and he says he signed it without looking at it—thinking it was the usual thing. Now so far as regards an absence of mention of the second Heba, it does seem unlikely that Ibrahim would knowingly have done anything which would negative a Heba, which had already been set up in the alleged release by the daughter of the deceased in the January previous. This, however, only applies to the absence of mention of the second Heba for the interest of the brothers is admitted in the release as in the application for certificate. It is quite possible that Ibrahim might have been satisfied with the document as substantially affirming the rights of the parties as set out in the release without reference to the title by which they were acquired. But assuming that he did not know at all what was in the document, how is it that this document is in the form which it is, seeing that it was drawn up by Budhraj, who had been two years in service and is admitted to have been aware of both the Hebas? Assuming again that Ibrahim was not aware of what was in the document, how did it come to be drawn up in the way in which it is drawn up, which, whilst being in conformity with the release, is to that extent, as explained later, not in conformity with the case set up as regards the first Heba?

I now, therefore, pass to the alleged release which was drawn up by Pleaders under the instructions of the defendant Ibrahim. In that document the widows and daughters of the deceased are alleged to have said as follows:—

"We declare that the late Haji Kader Bux, the predecessor of the declarants, was the proprietor of the moveable and immoveable properties detailed below and his intention was to give away the whole of his properties to his three sons, Muhammad Ibrahim, Muhammad Solaiman and Abdus Samad, and with this object he made his eldest son Muhammad Ibrahim the proprietor of the shop in Calcutta, and prior to his demise, the late Haji Saheb, in the presence of us the declarants and of Muhammad Ibrahim, Muhammad Solaiman and Abdus Samad and other relatives and kinsmen of his, made a gift of and gave away all his moveable and immoveable properties situate in District Balia, Calcutta and Muzaffarpore to his sons aforesaid, made (them) proprietors and put (them) in possession of the same and in accordance with the oral gift and grant aforesaid all the three sons of the Haji Saheb aforesaid are holding and possessing all the properties as proprietors and it is their names which have been registered in the Sarkari papers* * * our brothers aforesaid are in every way proprietors of all the same.

"Clause the third:—We the declarants do in every way confirm and admit the oral gift and grant which has been made by our husband and (our) father in favour of our brothers, and (our) sons Mahomed Ibrahim, Mahomed Solaiman and Abdus Samad, and Mahomed Solaiman, Mahomed Ibrahim and Abdus Samad have in every manner become proprietors (in place of) Haji Kader Bux deceased. Therefore, we do execute this declaration of relinquishment so that it may come to use in time and remain as a document."

After giving the names of the declarants and the amount of consideration money, it sets out the schedule as follows:—

"Schedule of the estate and property of Haji Kader Bux, the ancestor deceased; which in accordance with the oral gift and grant aforesaid are held and possessed as proprietors by Mahomed Ibrahim, Mahomed Solaiman and Abdus Samad, sons of the Haji Saheb aforesaid.

"Schedule of Trading and Banking firms (1) A firm of Arath (Commission Agency) for hire, the name of which firm is Haji Kader Bux Hazir Bux situate in the town of Calcutta, Chinapara, Damzens Lane, No. 3, together with the funds and capital, the trading and Arath business and articles of merchandise and household furniture, etc., lying in the firm together with all the things and rights, etc., appertaining thereto, wherein out of the sixteen annas, the right and share to the extent of seven annas and half belonged to Haji Kader Bux the ancestor deceased and which are held and possessed by Mahomed Ibrahim, Mahomed Solaiman and Abdus Samad, sons of the Haji Saheb aforesaid, as proprietors."

Then omitting some further particulars we have: "(1) A brick built house situate in the town of Calcutta, Taltolla Lane No. 47, which is let out on hire, wherein right and share to the extent of half belong to Haji Kader Bux, the ancestor deceased, and which are held and possessed as proprietors by Mahomed Ibrahim, Mahomed Solaiman and Abdus Samad, sons of the Haji Saheb aforesaid."

This document is in my opinion very strong evidence against the first Heba and as it is a document prepared on behalf of the defendant Ibrahim, it is of exceptional importance. Before dealing with this document it is necessary to recall that the case of the latter now is that there was in 1897 a valid Heba legally effective which transferred to him the Calcutta business, which from that date formed no part of the estate of the deceased. This document impugns each of these points. It was drawn up at the instance of Ibrahim in consultation with several lawyers who were well aware what a Heba or gift is and its effect. Now it starts by saying that

Kader Bux made Mahomed Ibrahim "the proprietor" of the Calcutta shop just as the Heba of Hazir Bux says that Kader Bux for "some politic reasons" declared his son to be its "owner." Something may have taken place in 1897. But was the transaction meant to be and was it in fact a valid Heba? If it was, it is curious that the lawyers did not use the word gift or Heba, the more particularly that they do so immediately afterwards in connection with the second Heba—why not say that Kader Bux gave his son the Calcutta business, if such be the fact? If the matter rested there, this criticism might be said to be refining on words. It does not, however, rest there, for we find throughout only one gift (not two) mentioned, under which all Kader Bux's properties (not excluding the Calcutta business) were given to the three sons (and not to Ibrahim alone). How could Kader Bux have given all his properties to his three sons if the most valuable property of all, the Calcutta business, had already been given to Mahomed Ibrahim? He could only do so if there were no legal valid first Heba. It is possible that there was no valid first Heba, but that for "some politic reasons" Ibrahim was declared proprietor or owner of the property now alleged to be covered by it and that the release refers to this fact: but that it was not a valid gift and that, therefore, objection was taken on behalf of the minors to its being so described in the release or given effect to as such. This is, it is true, only a matter of speculation put forward as a possible explanation of how in this document two transactions are referred to, only one of which is called a gift. But the document itself and its schedule leaves me in no doubt as to its meaning. For after the body of the document had stated that all the properties had been given to the three sons, the schedule clinches the matter by showing what those properties were. It in the most express terms affirms that half of the Calcutta business belonged to Kader Bux (not to Ibrahim as now alleged), though according to the present case Ibrahim had been holding the property from ten years before this document and his father had nothing to do with it, it, secondly, affirms that this business was the property of the three sons, and thirdly, that it was their property by virtue of the oral gift, that is, the one gift referred to in the body of the document under which all three sons took.

It further goes on to make a similar affirmation as regards the Taltolla house, half of which is said to have belonged to Kader Bux though this is now said not to be so, and which, if it were purchased out of the monies of the Calcutta business as alleged by the defendant Ibrahim, would in the event of these being a valid first gift have belonged to him alone. Mr. Jackson has not given any explanation of this except that this only occurs in the schedule. But this is no answer. The schedule merely affirms the body of the document for we must read the body and schedule consistently if we can; and moreover the schedule is no trifling thing and the whole document was drafted by lawyers on the instruction of Ibrahim. In my opinion this release disposes of the case as to the first Heba. It merely alleges that, as is possible, there was some transaction in 1897 which did not amount to a valid gift but that what was the subject of that transaction was subsequently transferred with other properties to all the three sons. It seems to me impossible that this document could have been framed as it is, had there been a valid Heba in 1897. In that case, all that it was necessary to say was that the Calcutta business had been given to Mahomed Ibrahim and the rest of the properties to him and his brothers. As the matter stands if the second Heba is an effective document, then all the sons of Kader Bux are interested in the Calcutta business.

I have no doubt that there was no valid first Heba in 1897. I may here point out that of the evidence by which the two Hebas are sought to be supported all except two witnesses gave their evidence on commission, and we are, therefore, in no worse position than the learned Judge who heard the trial. Of these witnesses the Commissioner, who was entitled by law to do so, noted his observations as to the demeanour of some of the witnesses. Of Abdus Sattar, on whom great reliance is placed and whose evidence I distrust—the Commissioner says he was evasive. Of Mahatabo Bibi, Hakima Bibi, and Hadi Hasan he records the observation that they appeared to him to have been tutored. If they were tutored they must have been tutored by or on behalf of Mahomed Ibrahim, for he is the person most interested and for whose advantage only it would be done. That he is not altogether scrupulous is shown by Exhibit F, in which he shows himself a party to bribery.

A suggestion was put forward that the Commissioner had dishonestly made these adverse comments because of a dispute as to his fee. This charge against the Commissioner who is a Munsif is based on the fact that the observation on the demeanour of one witness was made sometime after he had given his evidence and after the date on which the dispute is supposed to have arisen. But the other observations were made before that date. The allegation is without substance and evidence only of the length to which the defence is prepared to go in support of the case which it sets up. It is then said that the Commissioner was not in a position to observe the witnesses because they were Pardanashin. The observation cannot apply to the two men witnesses and it is feasible, as I have often done, to judge of the character of a witness's testimony without seeing her face by the manner of and delay and so forth in answering questions, the character of the answers and so forth.

The learned Judge says that Ibrahim and Siddik appeared to him to be truthful and reliable witnesses and that he preferred them to the evidence of Abdul Hamid, the plaintiff's husband. That may well be so for the latter, in my opinion, is an unreliable and unscrupulous person and the last to have represented his wife's interests in the matter of the release. I am not prepared myself to place such trust on these two witnesses or to put aside all the probabilities and inferences arising from the documentary evidence because they do not fit in with Mahomed Ibrahim's story. That story must, in my opinion, fit in with them or it is not entitled to acceptance. The learned Judge does not in his judgment deal with a large number of the considerations which were dealt with and had they been present to his mind, he might not improbably have taken a different view of the value of Ibrahim's evidence which is directly contradicted by the documents. It is further to be remembered that he is a very interested party who is claiming the bulk of the property for himself, for the value of the Calcutta business is said by him to be about 3 lakhs.

A question was argued as to whether if the Heba was made, legal effect was given to it by transfer of possession. If the evidence is accepted and it is held that there was a real Heba, then that same evidence would seem to establish that possession was given. But as I am not satisfied that there was a Heba of 1897, I need not further discuss this matter. I will only add that the contention that if there was any transaction in 1897, it was a benami and not a Heba, was raised in the lower Court as appears both from the judgment and evidence. The submission that this is not so is without foundation.

The question of the second Heba is one of greater difficulty. For there are not against it the same improbabilities. It is said to have been made shortly before Kader Bux's death in favour of all his three sons, and if there were ground for impugning the alleged first Heba that might in itself be a reason for executing a second. There is, however, no mention of the second Heba in the Heba, of Hazir Bux, who, as having an interest in the other properties, might reasonably have been expected to refer to it, as he did to the transfer of entries made at the date of the alleged first Heba. It is not mentioned in the application for a certificate of guardianship. Though there were Zeminaries, no evidence is adduced to show by revenue records that there was such a transfer, and the effect given to it. It is true that there is a reference to registration in the Sarkari papers in the release, and in so far as this release is brought home to the plaintiff this is some evidence. But we have not these papers and do not know their contents. There are different provisions for transfers inter vivos, and by inheritance. If these papers do not show a transfer inter vivos, they would be evidence against the existence of the second Heba. The presumption on this point is against the defendant Ibrahim who has not produced these papers. For all that we know they may show a mutation effected in accordance with inheritance and the alleged custom excluding females. Then as I have above pointed out, the release does refer to the second Heba but speaks only of one gift, and if the facts are correctly recorded there, the second gift operated over property other than that which is said to be its subject in the evidence. For if the first Heba be not established, the defendants could not claim as against the plaintiff in this suit the Calcutta business, for that would be to give them relief upon a new case. The present case made on the evidence is that the Calcutta business is not covered by the second Heba. The evidence and the release have suggested the argument which is not without foundation that Mahomed Ibrahim, who admitted the title of his brothers to the Calcutta business in 1908, is now trying to take it from them. There is also to be considered the fact that by this Heba, which would seem to be unnecessary if there was the custom alleged (for the story of Kader going on pilgrimage is spoken to by Ibrahim alone, who at first said there was no necessity for it) Kader Bux is said to have made over his property to his sons without making any provision whatever for the female members of the family.

This Heba again is unsupported by any document and has the application for guardianship against it, for whatever that circumstance may be worth. It might have been supported by revenue papers showing that the properties were claimed by transfer, but such are not produced. There is nothing but the word of some of the witnesses to it, some of whom the Commissioner thought gave their evidence in tutored fashion. Moreover in the absence of corroborative evidence, the view one takes as to the oral evidence given in support of the first Heba must necessarily re-act upon the evidence of the witnesses to the second Heba where these are the same. I hold, therefore, that the existence of the second Heba has not been established. I need not then go into the question whether if it took place in fact, it was valid in law, at any great length. It has been said to be based on the doctrine of musha. Amongst other authorities a passage is cited from Fatawa Alamgiri,

MARIAM BIBEE v. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

Vol. IV, p. 549, Ed. Cal., in which Al Hakim states: "A man makes a gift of a house to two of his sons one of whom is adult and the other is a minor and the adult son takes possession (of it). The gift is absolutely void and this is the correct view. For the gift in favour of the minor is complete at the very moment of the declaration of the gift because the seisin or possession of the father is equivalent to his (minor's) seisin or possession (qabz): Whereas the gift in favour of the adult son stands in need of acceptance. Thus the gift in favour of the minor precedes (that in favour of the adult) and thus confusion (shuyn) is occasioned. And the device is that he (father) should deliver possession of the house to the adult son and then make a gift of it to both of them. Thus it is laid down in the Wajiz of Al Kardari."

There is no evidence of such a device being resorted to here and one may reasonably question whether Kader Bux was aware of such technicalities. I am not prepared to say that the fact, if it be a fact (which I cannot hold), that Kader asked Ibrahim to accept the gift for himself and his brothers, whilst it would interpose some one who does not appear to be the legal guardian between the alleged donor and the infant donees, whose share is not expressly stated, brought the case strictly within the device according to which Kader should first have transferred possession to Ibrahim and then made a joint gift to Ibrahim and his minor brothers. It is, however, unnecessary for me to give a formal decision on this point. I should have been sorry to decide the case upon so technical a ground and am relieved from doing so by my finding that the existence of the second Heba has not been made out.

I now pass to the concluding point, the alleged release of her rights by the plaintiff.

Abdul Latif, when asked what was the necessity for the execution of the deed of release by the ladies, answered "to confirm the two verbal Hebas by Kader Bux." I have already pointed out that it was not a confirmation of the alleged first Heba.

If the Hebas were real, it is noteworthy that it was thought necessary according to the evidence to mention and thus confirm the first at the date of the second and to confirm the last by a release, the deceased Kader Bux having, it is said, meanwhile expressed a wish to confirm them in writing, which was not done. Shortly after the death of Kader Bux on 28th August 1907 steps were taken to secure Ibrahim from any claim by the ladies and it was he who suggested that they should give him a release of their claims, if any. The idea of the release originated, he says, with him. These ladies are illiterate Pardanashin, who from the evidence I should say entirely in the hands of the male members of the family. Indeed as appears from the evidence as to the alleged custom, women are not of much account in this community for fear, according to one of the witnesses, that they might be spoiled. Now it is not suggested that the plaintiff had any direct knowledge of the alleged first Heba, at the time it was made. If she was told anything it does not seem that she was told that there was a Heba in 1897 giving the Calcutta business solely to Ibrahim and that his brothers had no share in it, for we do not find any such statement in the document which she is said to have executed and which was drawn up by Ibrahim's lawyers. Ibrahim gives some vague evidence to the effect that he told his mother "that his father wanted to execute a document like that" and he wanted a document in which his father's intention should be stated and that if the ladies desired payment for this, he would do so. The second Heba is alleged to have been made in a loud voice in the presence of many persons including the ladies. According to the evidence the second gift was of property other than that disposed of by the first, a fact which is, as I have shown, contrary to what is stated in the release and its schedules. We must take it then either that the evidence is not true or that the document which the plaintiff is said to have signed is an incorrect statement of the facts. The release also states that under the alleged custom the females get nothing. This the plaintiff denies and it is a different custom from that pleaded. We thus find, that this release affirms facts which I find on the evidence not proved, namely, the two Hebas and the custom and without doubt (even on the defendants' own showing) contains statements not consistent with the evidence and case now made.

MARIAM BIBEE v. MOHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

Ibrahim got this document prepared by his lawyers. Maulvi Abul Barkut, the defendant's witness, says that the draft was taken to him by Haji Ahmed and Abdul Hamid who "were in a hurry" and they were sent over to a Pleader. The document received a great deal of legal attention in the interest of Ibrahim, but it never occurred to him that the ladies might properly require legal advice as to their rights. He cannot say whether they were aware of their rights under the general Muhammadan Law, nor does it appear that they knew what the law requires in the case of custom in derogation of the law and what is necessary to the legal perfection of a Heba. There were matters as to which legal assistance was clearly necessary. The facts again as regards the alleged first Heba were not in their direct knowledge. The document is then said to have been explained no less than five times to the different ladies by Mahomed Amin, Hadi Hossain and the Registrar and, it is said, executed for the plaintiff by her husband, who on his own evidence was a person willing for a consideration to cheat her. This same person Hamid is also said to have had the handling of the money Rs. 4,500, which is said to have gone into the hands of the plaintiff as the consideration for the release. It is admitted that the plaintiff had no legal advice though this is, in my opinion, a case where it was necessary that she should be rightly advised of her rights before signing them away. I am not satisfied that she had any proper advice or protection. Certainly her husband was not the sort of person from whom it might have been expected, and the other ladies of the family were no better situated than herself. Learned Counsel admits that he cannot support altogether the case made by his clients that the release was never read to her or that it was represented to be a Muktearnamah. That particular case must be held to fail. How little is the value to be attached to the so-called explanation of the document of release is shown by the facts mentioned and in particular by the following. An argument as to its meaning, which it may be argued is capable of various possible interpretations, has occupied us for several days. I do not refer to some alleged slips in translation which do not appear to me to affect the case, even if established. If the release was explained to the plaintiff as if it acknowledged two valid Hebas, was the alleged mistake in the schedule which is contrary to such acknowledgment brought to her notice? If the release was explained as a document which recited only one valid legal disposition of the property, which is the interpretation which makes the body of the document and its schedules consistent, then the document was explained in a sense contrary to that in which the respondent has now used it. The reading of documents to illiterate Pardanashins is sometimes a meaningless formality of which the present case is a conspicuous illustration. Whatever be the deficiencies in the plaintiff's case on this point, it will, however, still remain on the defendant, who sets up the release, to show that it is an operative bar to the plaintiff getting that share of the inheritance to which she is entitled under Muhammadan Law. If she is entitled to share in the Calcutta business, she has not had anything like her rights, even assuming she received the whole or any portion of the Rs. 4,500, of which I have considerable doubt. It is to be noted that it is not possible to trace the sum of Rs. 13,500, for it is said to have been paid in rupees. It is usual to make payment of consideration in notes capable of identification. It is said that rupees were given because the ladies specially asked for it, Rs. 13,500 was brought, it is said, in 9 bags and counted out and, according to one witness, all this hard coin was paid into the outstretched hands of the ladies behind the Pardah. The story has a physiognomy common to this class of cases, but is not on that account the more convincing. The Registrar's note is evidence of payment, and it may be, and probably is the case, that money was produced and counted out in his presence, but whether it or the whole of it remained with the ladies, is another matter. It is significant in this connection to refer to the evidence of Hakima Bibee, who appears to have had Rs. 1,200 or so only. She says "the sum of Rs. 2,800 has been spent up in our hide business at home." When this witness was asked whether her male relatives—who were supposed to have been giving her Rs. 4,500—nevertheless looked to her for pecuniary assistance, she says she was told to give them the money to be used for the business—"so I gave." I have no confidence that Rs. 4,500 found its way into the hands of the plaintiff even though it may have been produced before the Registrar. As, however, the onus on this point is on the plaintiff and her Counsel did not press her statement on this matter for our acceptance, I am obliged to hold that she has not established that she did not receive the money. Her rights, however, are in excess of this, if there be no custom against inheritance and if her father did not divest himself of everything he possessed in favour of his sons and left his daughters and other female defendants with nothing. On my finding as to the alleged custom and the Hebas, the release was executed in misconception of the true facts and of the plaintiff's rights and is in consequence not binding upon her.

On these findings it is not necessary to enquire into the question of jurisdiction, but even if the first Heba had been established, the Court would, in my opinion, have jurisdiction. The plaintiff's cause of action is the release which purported to operate over property within and without Calcutta. The mere fact that the defendant might make a case as regards the Calcutta properties would not deprive the Court of the right to deal with the rest of the properties covered by the same document. The result, therefore, is that, in my opinion, the suit should, subject to the remarks about to be made, be decreed with costs in terms of the prayers of the plaintiff other than clauses (g) and (h). Any relief, the subject of these clauses, may, however, be made the subject of independent application. On the account the plaintiff will have to be debited with the sum of Rs. 4,500 which, I have found, she must on the evidence be taken to have already had. As I have no doubt that the judgment is erroneous I would, therefore, reverse the decree under appeal and decree the suit and appeal with costs in both Courts.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The litigation, which has culminated in this appeal, was commenced by the appellant on the 3rd January 1911, for declaration of her title to a 7/88th share of the estate left by her father, Haji Kader Buksh, who died on the 28th August 1907 and left two widows, three sons and five daughters. Kader Buksh had a brother, Hazir Buksh, who died on the 5th November 1907 and left two sons. The relationship of the parties to this suit will be apparent from the annexed genealogical table. The case for the plaintiff is that her father left an estate of considerable value, which has been unlawfully seized by her brother Ibrahim, the first defendant. She further alleges that on the 9th January 1908 she was induced to execute a registered instrument in Urdu language and character on the representation that it was a general power of attorney, but which she has subsequently ascertained was a release of her rights in the estate of her deceased father in favour of her three brothers. She consequently prays that the deed of release may be declared void and inoperative, that she may be held entitled to the share mentioned in the estate left by her father, and that she may be awarded possession upon partition as also incidental reliefs. The first defendant, who contested the claim of the plaintiff, filed his written statement on the 14 June 1912, which disclosed a threefold defence, namely, first, that the parties belonged to a community called Erakis, which, though governed in all other respects by the Sunni School of Muhammadan Law, is, like the Khojas and Memons, governed in matters of succession and inheritance by the Hindu Law, so that the plaintiff is not entitled by the custom prevalent in the community to any share of the estate of Haji Kader Baksh; secondly, that Haji Kader Baksh did not, at the time of his death, leave any estate, as whatever properties he had were validly transferred by him by way of two gifts on the 22nd April 1897 and 19th July 1907; and thirdly, that if the alleged custom and the gifts are not established, the plaintiff has relinquished her right in the estate of her father for a consideration of Rs. 4,500 and executed a release on the 9th January 1908. Mr. Justice Greaves found upon the first question against the defendant and upon the second and third questions against the plaintiff. In this view, he dismissed the suit with costs. On the present appeal, the three questions stated have been elaborately argued by Counsel on both sides, and I shall examine them in the order I have mentioned.

MARIAM BIBE v. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

As regards the question of custom, reliance has been placed by Counsel for the appellant upon a statement in the work on Castes and Tribes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh by Mr. Crookes, prepared at the instance and published by the authority of the Government of that Province. Reference, I think, may legitimately be made to the work of Mr. Crookes as an authoritative statement of customs prevalent among the Eraki sect of Mahomedans, but it is of no real assistance to the plaintiff. The issues were not framed till the 5th April 1915, and the fifth issue was expressed in the following terms:

"Is there a custom amongst the Eraki community, to which the parties to this suit belong, excluding females from inheritance."

It will be observed that the issue framed is not in conformity with the custom alleged in the third paragraph of the written statement; the custom set out there was, not the absolute exclusion of females from inheritance, but a limited exclusion as prevails amongst the Khojas and Memons. [Khojas and Memons case, Hirbae v. Sonabae and Rahimatbae v. Hadji Jussap (9)]. Before this issue was framed, however, a large number of witnesses had already been examined on commission on behalf of the plaintiff from the 14th September 1913 to the 6th November 1913. These witnesses, as may be anticipated, were examined and cross-examined with reference to the custom pleaded in the written statement, and not with reference to the custom subsequently set up in the issue. The evidence taken in Court later on, it may be generally stated, seeks to establish that in no circumstances do females take by inheritance in the Eraki community, while the evidence on commission seeks to support the case that females are excluded only to a limited extent as amongst the Khojas and Memons. The evidence of Muhammad Ibrahim on this part of the case is not consistent with the evidence of his witnesses, who, as I have already stated, are not agreed amongst themselves as to whether the exclusion is absolute or qualified. The statement in the work of Mr. Crookes tends to show that in certain contingencies, women do take by inheritance, and consequently discredits the witnesses who support a case of complete exclusion. The custom alleged has not met with acceptance in any Court of Justice, and such documents as we have do not support the defendant. It is also plain that the custom does not possess two at least of the essential attributes for its validity, viz., uniformity and certainty: Hurpershad v. Sheo Dyal (3), Rajah Vurmah Valia v. Ravi Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (10) and Mahamaya Debi v. Haridas Haldar (11). The fact that the custom was not pleaded in litigations between members of the community where it might have been pleaded, is, I think, also relevant evidence, and the question of its relevancy is not affected by the circumstance that some of these suits were still pending at the time of the trial in the Court below. I do not think reliance can be implicitly placed upon the oral evidence adduced by Muhammad Ibrahim in support of the custom, because most of the witnesses who came forward to testify to the custom had excluded their female relations and were deeply interested to establish that the exclusion was justifiable. Some weight must also be attached to the circumstance that Kader Buksh deemed it necessary to make gifts in favour of his sons and that the first defendant thought it prudent to take a release from his sister; neither the gifts nor the release would have been necessary if the custom of exclusion of female heirs, either entirely or to a limited extent, had been as well known to members of the community as we are now asked to believe. I feel no doubt, on the first question, that the first defendant has failed to establish the custom of exclusion of female heirs, whether we look to the qualified custom pleaded in the written statement or the more comprehensive custom raised in the issue.

As regards the second question, it is alleged by the first defendant that his father had divested himself of all that he possessed by means of two oral gifts, the first made in his favour on the 22nd April 1897 in respect of what has been described in this proceeding as the Calcutta Hide Business, and the second made in favour of himself and his two infant brothers on the 19th July 1907 in respect of all the other properties mentioned in the schedule to the plaint. It may be stated here parenthetically that one of these properties is a house in 47, Taltola Lane Calcutta, which, it is said, was acquired out of the funds of the Calcutta business and must consequently be regarded as the property of the owners of that business. We have thus to consider the factum and validity of the two gifts separately.

By the first gift, it is alleged that Kader Buksh gave away his share of the Calcutta business to Muhammad Ibrahim, at that time his only son. There is no documentary evidence in support of the gift, but we have the statements of witnesses, of whom two were examined in Court and the others on commission. We have further entries in the books of account of the firm. The plaintiff asserts that there was no gift at all and that if the parties went through the form of a gift, it was never intended to be a real and operative transaction. She further contends that the gift, if it did really take place, did not satisfy the requirements of the Muhammadan Law. I am not prepared to reject entirely the evidence that in 1897, some transaction apparently in the nature of a gift did take place; but I am of opinion that what Kader Buksh did was never intended by him to take effect as a real gift. In the case of a transfer for consideration, where the question arises whether the ostensible purchaser is also the real purchaser, it is possible to apply the familiar test, usually conclusive in this class of cases, namely, what is the source of the purchase-money. In a case of gift, however, when it is alleged that the transaction was fictitious, this test naturally fails, and we have to rely upon other aspects of the matter, namely, the surrounding circumstance contemporaneous with the gift and the subsequent conduct of the parties concerned. Now, in the case before us, Kader Buksh was, in 1897, a man in business and in good health. His only son Ibrahim was a lad 15, 16 or 17 years old. His property, so far as we can gather, consisted of the hide business. What was the motive which could possibly have moved a man in that position to transfer to his boy, by way of gift, all that he had, namely, a flourishing business in Calcutta? No plausible explanation has been offered. If Kader Buksh was anxious to advance his son in life, he might possibly have taken him as a partner, but no theory has even been so much as suggested why he should retire from business completely and leave it in the hands of a youth, even though his brother was a partner. No reason has been put forward why Kader Buksh should deprive his possible issue of their share in the patrimony. As a matter of fact, at the time of the alleged gift, one of his wives was in the family way, and his second son was born, within eight months of the gift, on the 30th December 1897. Reliance, however, has been placed on what is called positive testimony. That testimony may point to the conclusion that some transaction in the way of an apparent transfer did take place at the time, but it does not establish with certainty that the transaction was intended to be real. The sheet anchor of the case for the defendant is the account books, extracts from which have been explained before us with great care and lucidity by Mr. Rasul. These accounts may be classified under three heads, namely, first, partnership accounts in the name of Kader Buksh Muhammad Ibrahim; secondly, the personal drawing account of Kader Buksh; and, thirdly, the deposit account of Ibrahim in respect of money given to him by Kader Buksh. These accounts, in my opinion, are by no means of a conclusive character, for it is well known that when parties have decided to enter upon a fictitious transaction, the accounts are made carefully to correspond to the apparent state of things; but, apart from this, there are inherent improbabilities in this case, which cannot be overlooked. Thus, the deposit account of Ibrahim shows that in 1897 the sum of Rs. 14,386.1.0 stood to his credit. No explanation has been offered why such a large sum as this should be placed at the disposal of a boy of 15. His father was the source of this money and was presumably the owner. On the 22nd April 1897, the partnership account was altered, and the name of Muhammad Ibrahim was introduced. This, in my opinion, does not necessarily indicate that Muhammad Ibrahim thereby replaced his father as a partner of the firm. The change of name may be consistent with the theory of gift, but does not necessarily indicate that there was a gift for it is significant that no trace of a mention of gift is to be found in the account books. If there had been a real gift, it would have been only natural to recite it in the account books, when the substitution of name was made. In this connection, it may be observed that while one of the witnesses, Amin, says that Ibrahim was a partner from before, other witnesses maintain that he was only employed in the business. The mere entry of the name of Ibrahim accordingly does not show that there was a gift in his favour. To take one illustration, the Motihari business account was also transferred to the name of Ibrahim. But it has not been suggested that there was a gift of that business to Ibrahim. Much stress was laid by the defendant on the deed of dissolution of partnership, dated the 7th February 1907, between Abdul Gani and others and Muhammad Siddique. This, in my opinion, was admissible to establish the factum of dissolution of a firm recited therein as "carried on by Muhammad Ibrahim, Hazir Buksh, Muhammad Amin, Abdul Latif and Muhammad Siddique in co-partnership between them." This enumeration of partners is, however, really of little assistance, because if there was a benami in 1897, the parties would adhere to the benami when the partnership was dissolved in 1907. We have, on the other hand, the significant fact that in 1897 when, it is alleged, the interest of Kader Buksh was transferred by way of gift to his son Muhammad Ibrahim, no notice was given to the public, and though the name was changed in the books of account, the original firm name was retained and used in transactions with the public. We have further the important fact that the gift was not recited in the account books, nor was there a written instrument, though the subject-matter of the transaction was property of considerable value. We have, besides all this, the incident of the purchase of the Taltola house on the 13th October 1904, when Abdul Bari, Abdul Majid and others sold the house to Hazir Buksh and Kader Buksh. The consideration for this transfer was money advanced to the vendors from the Calcutta business. The transfer, however, was not to Muhammad Ibrahim as a partner of the firm, but to Hazir Buksh and

Kader Buksh. A desperate effort was made to establish that this was in reality a transfer to the firm. In my opinion, that attempt has entirely failed. Besides, Hazir Buksh, in his registered deed of gift, which, I think, was admissible in evidence, stated on the 1st November 1907 that the Taltola House belonged to himself and his deceased brother Kader Buksh, half and half. Indeed, in the schedule to the release, dated the 9th January 1908, the house is treated as the property of Kader Buksh. This could only be so if the consideration paid therefor belonged to Kader Buksh; and, as the purchase-money came from the Calcutta business, it is plain that in 1904, notwithstanding what might have happened in 1897, Kader Buksh was still treated as the proprietor of the income of the business. This, in my opinion, constitutes a serious difficulty in the way of acceptance of the case for the defendant that there was a real gift in his favour in 1897. The release, in fact, furnishes strong evidence against the reality of the gift of 1897. It was drawn up at the instance of Muhammad Ibrahim; yet it mentions only one Heba (the other is apparently a bukhsinam), whereby all properties (not excluding the Calcutta business) were given to the three sons. The description of the properties in the schedule shows that one-half of the Calcutta business belonged to Kader Buksh and not to Ibrahim, and consequently passed to the three sons by virtue of oral gift. Besides, in his deed of gift, Hazir Buksh further stated that ten or twelve years before, his brother Kader Buksh had, "for some politic reasons," substituted the name of Muhammad Ibrahim in the place of his own name in the papers and accounts of the firm and on declaration that Muhammad Ibrahim was the owner of his share of capital got the credit and debit entries in respect of capital, profit and loss made in the name of Muhammad Ibrahim. This clearly is a plain statement by Hazir Buksh that the transaction of 1897, which, be it noted, he does not describe as a gift, was not real and operative. We have, in addition to all this, the remarkable fact that in an application for guardianship of his infant brothers, made by Muhammad Ibrahim on the 9th June 1908, no trace is found of the alleged gift of 1897; on the other hand, the schedule describes that a two-thirds share of the Calcutta business and the Taltola House belonged to the infants, an allegation wholly irreconcilable with the theory of a real gift of the Calcutta business to Muhammad Ibrahim in 1897. On a review of all these circumstances, I do not see any escape from the conclusion that there was no real gift of the Calcutta business to Muhammad Ibrahim in 1897. I am not unmindful that in this country, as in England, the settled rule is that the burden lies on the appellant to satisfy the Court that the finding of the trial Court which he assails is not supported by the evidence on the record: Lalljee Mahomed v. Dadabhai Jivanji Guzdar (12) and Colonial Securities Trust Co. v. Massey (3), but the appellant has, I think, discharged this burden. In the view I take, it becomes needless to consider whether, if there was a real gift, it fulfilled the requirements of the Muhammadan Law. I am not unmindful that under the Muhammadan Law as administered by British Indian Courts, where the subject of the gift is incorporeal property not susceptible of physical possession, a gift thereof may be completed by such transfer of control as may be appropriate and possible in the circumstances: Ameeroonnissa Khatoon v. Abedounissa Khatoon (13), Mullick Abdool Guffoor v. Muleka (14), Anwari Begam v. Nizam-ud-din Shah (15) and Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (1). But the question whether the gift of a share in a partnership business can be validly effected by delivery, and, if so, by what form of delivery, under the Muhammadan Law presents a problem of some nicety, as is clear from an examination of the following texts, and I reserve my opinion thereon:—

partner, "I make a gift to thee of my right in the profit," they (the jurists) say the gift is not valid if the property (i.e., capital stock) itself be in existence; because it is the gift of a Musha with respect to what is capable of division. But if the partner has consumed, destroyed, wasted the property, the gift is valid; because owing to its loss, destruction, it becomes a debt and a debt is not capable of division. Thus it is the gift of Musha with respect to what is not capable of division; therefore it is valid. (Fatawa Qadi Khan, Vol. IV, p. 282, Ed. Lucknow).

TEXT V.

When one of two partners says to his co-partner, "I make a gift to thee of my share in the profit," they (the jurists) say it is not valid if the property be in existence because of its being a gift of Musha with respect to what is capable of division. But if the partner has destroyed the property, the gift is valid, because of its being then isqat (extinction). Thus it is laid down in the Zahiriyah. (Fatawa Alamgiri, Vol. IV, p. 531, Ed. Calcutta).

TEXT VI.

When one of two partners says to the other, "I make a gift to thee of my share in the profit," and the property is in existence, it is not valid because it is a gift of Musha with respect to what is capable of division. But if the partner has destroyed it, it (gift) is valid. (Radd-al-Muhtar, Vol. IV, p. 796, Ed. Constantinople).

* * * * *

By the second gift, it is alleged that Kader Bukhsh, on the 19th July 1907, that is, about a month before his death, gave the remainder of his properties to his three sons. This raises two questions, namely, first, whether there was in fact such a gift, and, secondly, if there was, did it fulfil the requirements of the Muhammadan Law. It is worthy of note at the outset, before either of these questions is examined, that the second gift, even if established, would not affect the Caloutta business and the Taltola House, because the evidence does not show that these two properties form the subject-matter of the gift. The evidence to prove the second gift is based on the assumption that there was a real gift of the Caloutta business in 1897, and, consistently with that theory, seeks to establish that the transfer of the remainder of his estate was effected by Kader Bukhsh, by this supplementary gift. As regards the second gift, I am not satisfied on the evidence that it did as a matter of fact take place and was completed. There is no doubt oral evidence adduced by the defendant, but there are unexplained difficulties which cannot well be ignored. There is no mention of the second gift in the application for guardianship to which reference has already been made. The explanation is, to my mind, not quite satisfactory. Muhammad Ibrahim must be deemed to have been fully aware that the matter was of grave importance to him, and one would have expected him, as a man of ordinary prudence, to set out the title under which he claimed. There is also the fact that no document was executed; here again, any cautious man would have insisted upon the execution and registration of a deed of gift, when the result of that gift would be to deprive all the heirs, except the three sons of the donor, of what would otherwise devolve on them by right of inheritance. We have, in addition to this, the circumstance that no attempt appears to have been made to give effect to the alleged gift, either by change of names in the records of the Collector or in the books of the various firms. There is, besides, the noticeable fact that Hazir Bukhsh makes no mention of the second gift in his deed of gift. We cannot also overlook that the document makes no provision whatever for the female members of the family, namely, the two wives of the donor and his five daughters. No reason has been assigned why a man in the position of Kader Bukhsh, possessed of considerable wealth, should make no provision whatsoever for his own wives and daughters, and leave all that he had to his three sons, two of whom were six and ten years old. In the face of these difficulties, should we accept the oral evidence on the record? I am clearly of opinion that how far the testimony of these witnesses is reliable, must be judged by the surrounding circumstance. In this connection, I may advert to the remark made by the Commissioner about the demeanour of some of the witnesses examined before him. Abdul Sattar is described as evasive and not trustworthy. Mahtabo, Hakima and Hadi Hassan appeared to him to have been tutored; it is difficult to say in whose interest they could have been so tutored, other than that of Muhammad Ibrahim. The letter written by Muhammad Ibrahim on the 9th February 1902 to Abdul Hamid furnishes some indication that Ibrahim was not above recourse to bribery. In this Court, a forlorn attempt was made to impute dishonesty to the Commissioner, who was a Judicial Officer of some standing. In my opinion, there is no foundation whatever for this charge. I think there is also no force in the contention that the Commissioner could not have really appreciated whether a Pardanashin lady under examination before him was or was not a trustworthy witness; whether a witness is reliable or not may be judged, not merely from demeanour, but also from the mode and manner in which the answers are given. I do not overlook that Mr. Justice Greaves thought that Muhammad Ibrahim is truthful and reliable and that the husband of the plaintiff is just the reverse;

MARIAM BIBEE v. MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM.

Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co. v. Raja Bahadur Motilal Shivalal (16) and Rivers Steam Navigation Co. v. Hathor Steamship Co. (8), but we cannot at the same time overlook that Muhammad Ibrahim is deeply interested in the result of this litigation, and when the probabilities and the documentary evidence cannot be reconciled with his assertions, I cannot implicitly accept his assertions. My conclusion is that the evidence does not establish the second gift.

If, however, the second gift is deemed to be established by the evidence, the question arises whether it is valid under the Muhammadan Law. Upon an examination of the authorities, I have arrived at the conclusion that this question must be answered against defendant as is clear from the following texts:—

TEXT I.

If one person makes a gift of it (house) to two persons it is not valid according to Abu Hanifah, but it is valid according to Abu Yusuf and Muhammad. (Al Qaduri, Vol. II, p. 10, Ed. Delhi).

TEXT II.

"If one person makes a gift of it (house) to two persons, it is not valid according to Abu Hanifah, but it is valid according to Abu Yusuf and Muhammad." For this is a gift of the entire (house) to two persons (jointly) as it is by a single act of transfer. Therefore no Musha is occasioned, as when (a house) is mortgaged with two persons. But according to him (Abu Hanifah), it is a gift of half the house to each of them. Therefore if it (the gift) is with respect to something incapable of division like a slave or slave-girl and one of them (donees) accepts it, it is valid (with respect to his share). Also because property is established for each of them (donees) with respect to the half and therefore the transfer would be likewise as it (property) is its (transfer's) effect. This is contrary to mortgage, as its effect is detention and it is established for each of them perfectly. Therefore if the debt of one of them (mortgagees) is paid, nothing of the mortgaged property will be returned. (Al-Jawharat-al-Nayyirah, Vol. II, p. 10, Ed. Delhi).

TEXT III.

If he makes a gift of a house to two of his sons one of whom is a minor in his charge, the gift is invalid according to all. (Fatawa Qadi Khan, Vol. IV, p. 183, Ed. Lucknow).

TEXT IV.

The Hedayah (Vol. VII, p. 496, Ed. Cairo) reproduces Texts I and II.

TEXT V.

"If two persons jointly make a gift of a house to one man it is valid." In the converse case it is not valid according to Abu Hanifah, but the two disciples declare it to be valid. (Al-Inayah, Vol. VII, p. 495, Ed. Cairo).

TEXT VI.

The Kifayah (Vol. VII, p. 496, Ed. Cairo) reproduces the reasons for the difference of opinion between the master and his disciples given in text II.

TEXT VII.

The gift of a house jointly by two persons to one man is valid. But its converse is not valid (according to Abu Hanifah) contrary to them (i.e., the opinion of the two disciples)—(Multaqa'l-Abhar by Ibrahim, b. al-Halabi d. 953 H. H²=1549 A. D., p. 137, Ed. Constantinople).

TEXT VIII.

If he makes a gift of a house to two persons one of whom is an infant and the other adult and the infant is in his charge, the gift is not valid (lam tajuz) unanimously. For at the very moment of making the gift he becomes possessed of the share of the infant and thus the other half remains in a state of Musha. Thus it is laid down in the Muhit (Bahr-al-Raiq, Vol. VII, p. 315, Ed. Cairo).

TEXT IX.

If he makes a gift in favour of an adult person and in that of an infant in the charge of the adult; or in favour of two of his sons, one infant and the other adult, it is not valid (lam tajuz) unanimously. (Durr-al-Mukhtar, Vol. III, p. 498, Ed. Lucknow).

TEXT X.

Al Hakim states—A man makes a gift of a house to two of his sons one of whom is adult and the other is a minor and the adult son takes possession (of it). The gift is absolutely void and this is the correct view. For the gift in favour of the minor is complete at the very moment of the declaration of the gift because the seisin or possession of the father is equivalent to his (minor's) seisin or possession (Qabz): Whereas the gift in favour of the adult son stands in need of acceptance. Thus the gift in favour of the minor precedes (that in favour of the adult) and thus confusion (shukn) is occasioned. And the device is that he (father) should deliver possession of the house to the adult son and then make a gift of it to both of them. Thus it is laid down in the Wajiz of Al Kardari (Fatawa Alamgiri, Vol. IV, p. 549, Ed. Calcutta).

TEXT XI.

Al-Tahtawi (Vol. III, p. 400, Ed. Cairo), the celebrated commentary on the Durr-al-Mukhtar, reproduces Text X.

"If he makes a gift of a house to two persons, etc." Al-Ramti says that it is obvious from this that if the two persons be both infants in his charge, it is valid and what is stated in the Bazzaziyah indicates this. But all this is in accordance with the opinion of the two disciples (Abu Yusuf and Muhammad) and not according to his (Abu Hanifah's) opinion. (Here Text III is quoted). Manhat-al-Khaliq, Vol. VII, p. 315, Ed. Cairo. It is a commentary on the Bahr-al-Ra'iq by Ibn Abidin, the author of the Radd-ul-Muhtar, d. 1835 A. D.)

I do not overlook the unfavourable judicial comments made from time to time upon the principle of Musha, specially, the observation of Sir Barnes Peacock in Muhammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (5):—

"The doctrine relating to the invalidity of gifts of Musha is wholly unadapted to a progressive state of society and ought to be confined within the strictest rules" [see also Mahomed Buksh Khan v. Hosseini Bibi (1), Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (17), Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (18), Alabi Koya v. Mussa Koya (19) and Jahedunnessa Bibi v. Najibul Islam (20)]. But it is plain that the doctrine, though not favoured, cannot be altogether ignored or repudiated: Vahazullah Sahib v. Boyapati Nagayya (21) and Ibrahim Goolam Ariff v. Saiboo (17). In my opinion the case before us falls within the strict letter of the texts on the subject [Nizam-ud-din v. Zabeda Bibi (4)], and this indeed appears to have been realised by the defendant himself and his advisers I refer to the remarkable passage in the deposition of Mahomed Ibrahim in which he describes the mode in which the gift was effected:—

"My father said that he had already disposed of his share in the Calcutta firm in my favour, and he was disposing of the rest of his properties in favour of myself and my two younger brothers, and my father asked me to accept the same for myself and on behalf of my younger brothers, and he made over all the documents in respect of these properties as also in respect of the Zemindari to me, requesting me to take charge of them on behalf of myself and of my two younger brothers." I confess that this does bear the appearance of an attempt, in course of evidence, to show that the requirements of the law were satisfied. It is extremely improbable that Kader Bux was aware of the device whereby the law of Musha could be avoided as described in the Fatawa

Alamgiri. But it is plain that, even if the evidence be accepted, the device was not strictly carried out. My conclusion is that the evidence does not conclusively establish the second gift, and that if it does, the gift was not valid and operative under the Muhammadan Law.

As regards the third question, Mr. Justice Greaves has found that the plaintiff has failed to establish her allegation that the release was obtained from her upon a misrepresentation as to the nature of the instrument. No attempt has been made in this Court to support the contention that the document was represented to be a power of attorney; in fact, that allegation has been abandoned in this Court. But the validity of the release has been questioned on the ground that it was executed under circumstances which do not make it binding upon a Pardanashin lady, and the view has been maintained that the Court, when called upon to deal with a deed executed by a Pardanashin lady, must satisfy itself upon the evidence, first, that the deed was actually executed by her, or by some persons duly authorised by her, with a full understanding of what she was about to do; secondly, that she had full knowledge of the nature and effect of the transaction into which she is said to have entered; and, thirdly, that she had independent and disinterested advice in the matter. How far the tests indicated are inflexible rules of law may be a matter for controversy, and it may not be easy to reconcile all the dicta to be found in various decisions of the Judicial Committee where the validity of deeds executed by Pardanashin ladies came under review. The cases on the subject will be found analysed in the judgments of this Court in Bindubashini Dasi v. Giridhari Lal Roy (22), Alikjan Bibi v. Rambaran Shah (23) [Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (24)], Geresh Ohunder Lahoree v. Musammam Bhuggobutty Debia (25), Syud Fuzzul Hossein v. Amjud Ali Khan (26), Ashgar Ali v.

In view of the weighty observation of Lord Haldane, L. C., in Kreglinger v. New Patagonia Meat and Cold Storage Company (34) as to the proper use of judicial procedure as binding authorities, it is plain that no useful purpose would be served by an analysis of the facts of each of these cases, which fall broadly into two groups, namely, first, where the person who seeks to hold the lady to the terms of her deed is one who stood towards her in a fiduciary character or in some relation of personal confidence; and, secondly, where the person who seeks to enforce the deed was an absolute stranger and dealt with her at arm's length. In the former class of cases, the Court will act with great caution and will presume confidence put and influence exerted; in the other class of cases, the Court will require the confidence and influence to be proved intrinsically; this is a fundamental distinction which does not appear to have been always kept in view. A great deal will also depend upon the intellectual attainments of the lady, and the Court will naturally not be inclined to set aside the deed, where the lady is proved to have been of business habits, to have been literate and to have possessed capacity to judge for herself. Tested in the light of these principles, how does the case before us stand? Here is a deed obtained by a brother from her sister. By that deed she parts with all her interest in the estate of her father for a sum of Rs. 4,500. There is no shadow of a doubt that the amount itself is wholly inadequate as the price of her share in the patrimony. It is represented to her that by the custom of the community, she is excluded from the inheritance. She is further told that her father had divested herself of all he possessed by two oral gifts. No doubt we have evidence given that the deed was read over to her and explained to her and that she had the advice of her husband. It is clear, however, that the deed is so expressed that its meaning and effect are by no means quite beyond doubt even with the aid of the elucidation by learned Counsel. It is to my mind equally clear that the husband of the plaintiff was absolutely untrustworthy and was ready to sacrifice the interest of his wife for the sake of his personal benefit. If, as a matter of fact, the custom of exclusion existed, if in truth the oral gifts were real transactions and were operative in law, a deed of release was wholly superfluous. The deed, after the most careful consideration of attendant circumstances, does not impress me favourably; I do not attach much importance to the recitals, some of which at any rate may be deemed exhibitions of the art of the conveyancer which, whether mediæval or modern, cannot be permitted to mislead the Court. I do not overlook the statement of the Registering Officer, which shows that the parties were careful to conform to all the formalities; but the substance of the matter still remains that the deed was obtained from the plaintiff by her brother on representation of a state of facts untrue in material particulars. In these circumstances I do not think the deed can stand. I am not unmindful of the importance of the rule that a settlement of a disputed or doubtful claim is a valid and binding arrangement which the parties thereto are not permitted to deny, ignore or repudiate. This principle is deducible from a long line of cases which will be found collected in the judgment of this Court in Upendra Nath Bose v. Bindeshri Prasad

(35), but that principle is not applicable to the circumstances of this case. The defendant does not assert that there was a compromise to put an end to dispute and to terminate or avoid litigation, and that the consideration for the compromise was, not the sacrifice of a right, but the abandonment of a claim. What we have here is a surrender of the rights of the plaintiff for a nominal consideration, obtained from her on the representation that she had no rights whatsoever; this cannot be deemed an honest settlement of an existing dispute which a Court of Justice should not permit the plaintiff to question.

As regards the actual payment of the consideration, the plaintiff has failed to satisfy me that she did not receive the money, so that she can be permitted to have her deed cancelled only on re-payment of that sum. This sum must consequently be debited against her when the accounts are taken under the decree.

I hold accordingly that this appeal must be allowed, the decree of Mr. Justice Greaves set aside and the suit decreed with costs in both Courts in the terms indicated in the judgment of Mr. Justice Woodroffe.

Appeal allowed.

GOPI LAL AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—PETITIONERS
versus

LAKHPAT RAI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS
—RESPONDENTS.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 126—Communication made to Vakil in course of employment, admissibility of—Communication, modes of.

For the purposes of section 126 of the Evidence Act, it is immaterial whether the communication which is sought to be protected was verbal, that is to say, by word of mouth, or by demonstration. [p. 606 col. 2.]

In a suit for the revocation of a patent in which the question for decision was the formation and process of working of a stove owned and used by the defendant, the plaintiff tendered in evidence a Vakil who had been employed by the defendant in some previous proceedings and had, in the course and for the purposes of his employment, visited the defendant's premises at the latter's invitation, in order to make himself acquainted with the working of the stove:

Held, that the knowledge acquired by the Vakil as to the formation and process of working of the stove amounted to a communication made to him by his client in the course and for the purposes of his employment and that, therefore, his evidence was inadmissible under section 126 of the Evidence Act. [p. 606, col. 2.]

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Remfry (with him Mr. Kamala Kanta Varma), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

WALSH, J.—It is necessary for us to dispose of a question which has arisen under section 126 of the Evidence Act. The proceedings before us are a suit or petition brought by the applicant or petitioner to revoke certain Letters Patent granted to the respondent firm, consisting amongst others of a member named Lakhpat Rai, and the question which arises for decision is the formation and the process of the working of a certain stove owned and used by the respondent firm for the manufacture of banslochan. In the course of the proceedings on behalf of the petitioner a Vakil of the name of A. K. Banerji was tendered in evidence on behalf of the petitioner to prove the formation and the process of the working of this particular stove which was then in the possession of the aforesaid Lakhpat Rai. In the year 1895 the Municipal authorities took proceedings against the said Lakhpat Rai, or the firm of which he was then a member, for a nuisance by smell in the preparation of banslochan. The witness was employed by the firm to represent them as defendants in answer to that charge and in his capacity as a Vakil he, at their invitation, visited their premises in order to make himself acquainted with the stove which it was alleged created the nuisance. A question was raised by a member of the Court as to whether any question could be asked from this witness as to the information conveyed to him by his clients with regard to the subject-matter in respect of which he was representing them. The decision of that question turns upon the language of section 126:—"No Vakil shall at any time be permitted unless with his client's express consent" (in this case the witness has got no consent from Lakhpat Rai) "to disclose any communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment as such Vakil by or on behalf of his client." Mr. Banerji told us that any knowledge which he had acquired as to the formation and the process of the working of the stove in question was acquired by him only in the course of and for the purpose of his employment as such Vakil. The only question, therefore, which remains is as to whether any communication within the meaning of the section was made to him by his client. The exact fact which he proposed to prove was not disclosed and the nature of the communication was not given. We thought it undesirable to hear the evidence without first deciding whether it could under any circumstances be admissible. We think that as a matter of law it is immaterial whether the communication was verbal, that is to say, by word of mouth, or by demonstration. To our mind if the communication were of such a nature that the client had, for the purpose of enabling his Vakil to defend the charge of nuisance, described the formation and the process of the working of the stove in his own language, it would be impossible to contend that such conversation would not be excluded by the rule of professional privilege laid down in section 126. We think it follows that if the client, instead of giving the Vakil a verbal description of the process itself, told him to go himself to see it, or pointed it out to him, that would equally be a communication within the meaning of the section.

This view is borne out really by proviso (2) of the section. In England there has been some discussion in the decided cases as to whether the rule of professional privilege applies to facts brought to the knowledge of a professional gentleman by his senses, i.e., facts observed by him; and it was decided, at any rate in one well-known case, that where a matter is in Court, and by his senses the Counsel becomes aware that an entry in a book has been fabricated or altered after its production in evidence before the Court, this is a matter which is brought to his senses by observation independently altogether of his client and is a matter which he is bound to disclose. But the Code says that any fact observed by the Vakil in the course of his employment as such, showing that any crime or fraud has been committed since the commencement of his employment, is not protected. That clearly indicates that facts observed may be just as much communication as other communication in the ordinary way by word of mouth. The rule is a statutory rule and ought to be strictly applied, for at least two reasons. It is in the interest of the proper and honourable conduct of an honourable profession. If communications coming either directly or indirectly to the knowledge of the Vakil or lawyer in the course of and for the purpose of his employment are not protected, it is easy to conceive cases in which the Vakil might become acquainted with circumstances, for example of crime, which it would be the ordinary duty of a citizen to communicate to the proper authorities, and he would render himself liable for prosecution under the Penal Code for not disclosing such information to the proper authorities. It is clear that professional gentlemen who do their duty ought not to be placed in a position of that kind. Secondly, it is of importance to the public that they should be protected in the right which the law gives them to defend themselves against proceedings of all kinds with absolute freedom, untrammelled by the embarrassment of the possible consequences of failure to disclose the full facts within their knowledge to the expert assistance on which they rely for the conduct of their cases. It would be impossible for the ordinary man to consult a lawyer with anything like confidence, for example, about some machinery or system in his own premises about which he is litigating with a rival in trade, if, when the public authorities threatened him with a case for nuisance, he had to call a lawyer to assist him in answering that charge without knowing whether or not the lawyer might not the next day turn round and present his opponent in the civil suit with all the information which the lawyer had obtained from his otherwise unauthorised visit to his client's premises.

One word I should like to add. It was suggested to Dr. Sen that he should open his case by giving some indication of the broad lines on which he would proceed to tender evidence. I attach great importance to that duty. I am afraid, judging from the cases which come in appeal before this Court, it is not always as strictly regarded in the Courts of Subordinate Judges as it ought to be, so that the legal gentleman who represents the plaintiff or petitioner fails to give sufficient indication of the lines on which he proposes to present his evidence in Court. Counsel are here to assist the Court, and in a delicate matter of this kind (as far as we can see, the respondents to this application had no intimation or warning that this question was going to be raised), a party in our opinion has a right to be warned that a professional gentleman previously employed by him is going to be put in the box to disclose a communication made to him in the course and for the purpose of his employment, in order that he may have a full opportunity, not in the hurry and suddenness of surprise, but with care and deliberation, to decide whether he shall exercise the undoubted option he possesses in his own interest, in the interest of the Court or in the interest of public time, to waive his objection.

In addition to this, as my brother has remarked in the course of the argument, there are a number of authorities on the Indian law as codified. It is better where a delicate question of this kind is going to be raised, that warning should be given so that an opportunity is provided for seeing whether the question is quite as clear as may be supposed by the legal gentleman intending to produce the evidence.

PIGGOTT, J.—This is a suit for revocation of a patent. It was agreed that the evidence taken in the previous suit, which we have just disposed of, should be admissible in this suit. Upon the broad issue of fact, namely, that the patent is bad in law, either because it has been anticipated, or because it is not a proper subject-matter for a patent, we have made up our minds against the plaintiff for reasons which are contained in the judgment in First Appeal No. 178 of 1917 [Lakhpai Rai v. Sri Kishan Das (1)] delivered to-day and which may be found there by the applicant if he cares to read them. We do not think, having listened to Dr. Sen's argument and to the testimony of the witnesses Gopi Lal and Kunji Lal, given orally before us, that they have succeeded in shaking the conclusions arrived at by us in the other suit. No serious question has been raised about our jurisdiction to entertain this suit, and we must simply dismiss it with costs upon the ground that the claim has not been proved. We were invited to read certain learned authors on the subject of the ancient process of manufacture of banslochan. We declined to do so. So far as they were matters of opinion on admitted facts, there was no necessity for us to read them; so far as they were tendered for the purpose of proving any controverted fact in the suit, we were unable to discover any section of the Evidence Act which entitled us to read them. We, therefore, hold them to be inadmissible. The suit is dismissed with costs.

Suit dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 6—Mortgage decree—Compromise providing for sale of properties not subject to mortgage—Order of Court, whether necessary—Procedure.

A compromise in a mortgage suit provided that if the amount due under the mortgage was not realised by sale of the mortgaged properties, the other properties of the judgment-debtor should be pursued in due course. A decree was passed in accordance with the compromise and the mortgaged properties having been sold; the decree-holders sought to proceed against the other properties of the judgment-debtor:

Held, that a formal order under Order XXXIV, rule 6, of the Civil Procedure Code was a necessary preliminary before proceeding against the properties not covered by the mortgage. [p. 608, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 11th November 1917.

Messrs. Mohammad Fakhruddin and Panchanan Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kailas Pati and D. N. Sirkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These proceedings arose from a decree made upon a mortgage in accordance with a compromise. That compromise provided that if the amount due under the mortgage was not realised by sale of the mortgaged properties, the other properties of the judgment-debtor should be pursued in due course. The properties covered by the mortgage were sold. It is not contested that there is a balance outstanding, but on the decree-holder's seeking to proceed against the other properties of the judgment-debtor two objections were made, firstly, that the judgment-debtors were minors and could not be pursued without guardians, and, secondly, that there had not been any order under rule 6 of Order XXXIV and until that order was made no proceedings against properties other than the mortgaged properties could be taken.

In the first objection, there appears, on the merits, to be no substance whatsoever, but there is substance in the contention that the making of a formal order under rule 6 is a necessary preliminary to pursue properties not covered by the mortgage. This has been the universal view taken, and the position is not altered by the fact that the original decree was a compromise decree. All that that compromise in effect does is to create an undertaking on the part of the judgment-debtor not to contest an order under rule 6. The benefit of an order under rule 6 is that a proper account is taken, the parties know exactly where they stand, and the proceedings are in order. As at present framed the proceedings are not in order. We, therefore, direct that a proper order be made under rule 6, stating the amount of the indebtedness of the judgment-debtor and formally authorizing the decree-holder to proceed against the properties not covered by the mortgage.

Order accordingly.

Under the Muhammadian Law, post-nuptial delegation of the power of divorce or tafveez-i-talaq made by a Muhammadian husband in favour of his wife and contained in a registered kabin-namah executed after marriage is valid and operative. [p. 609, col. 2.]

(Authorities reviewed.)

The plaintiff, a Muhammadian, executed a kabin-namah sometime after his marriage in favour of his wife, which provided amongst other matters that he would not take a second wife without the permission of his first wife, and that in case of violation of this condition the latter might, when she chose, divorce him and take a second husband. Thereafter without taking the permission of his wife the plaintiff took a second wife and upon that the first wife exercised the right of divorce contained in the kabin-namah. The plaintiff then sued her for restitution of conjugal rights:

Held, that the suit did not lie, as the wife had exercised the power of divorce given to her by the husband and had thus put an end to the marital relation between herself and her husband. [p. 611, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife, the defendant No. 1. The facts of the case are shortly these. The parties were married in 1308, when a Kabin-namah was executed but not registered. This document was subsequently lost. A dispute then arose between the parties, which was settled by the execution and registration of a second Kabin-namah in 1313. Among other matters the new Kabin-namah provided that the plaintiff would not take a second wife without the defendant's permission. The document concluded as follows:—'Be it noted that if I violate any of the aforesaid conditions or any portion thereof, I delegate to you my own power of giving three talaqs such as is possessed by males. Whenever you choose you may talaq or repudiate your person three times and then take another husband.'

It is found that between 1313 and 1320 the plaintiff-appellant took a second wife without obtaining the permission of the defendant. When the present suit for restitution of conjugal rights was instituted, the wife gave herself three divorces in accordance with Muhammadian Law under the authority given to her by the husband. Both the lower Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit and hence this appeal.

It has been contended before us that a post nuptial delegation of the power of divorce, or tafveez-i-talaq as it is called by Musalman lawyers, is not valid. No authority has been cited for such a proposition. A reference to books on Muhammadian Law makes it abundantly clear that such a delegation is valid. In fact most of the instances of tafveez given in the books are post nuptial and refer to authority given by a person to another who is already his wife. Reference may be made to Baillie's Digest of Muhammadian Law, page 241. The more difficult questions, however, that have been raised before us are the following:—

1. That the authority given to the wife could only be exercised immediately in the majlis in which it was given and was lost not being so exercised.

2. That the authority should have been exercised immediately on the happening of the event upon which it was contingent.

SAINUDDIN V. LATIFANNESSA BIBI.

3. That the delegation was revocable and the institution of the suit amounted to such revocation.

Before proceeding to a discussion of these questions, it would be convenient to refer to certain well-established principles of Muhammadan Law with reference to which the law on the subject of 'delegation' has been discussed in the text books. Muhammadan lawyers make a distinction between isbatat or acts which create rights and isqatats, i.e., acts which only extinguish existing rights. Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim refers to the distinction in his extremely valuable work on Muhammadan Jurisprudence at page 195. Tamleek, which means making another the malik or owner of a thing and includes ordinary cases of sale, gift and similar other transactions, belongs to the former.

The isqatat include release, divorce, emancipation of slaves, etc. Leaving aside exceptions to the general rule, it is a well-established rule of Muhammadan Law that in cases of tamleek, taleeq is not valid, i.e., it is not valid to make the transaction dependent on any condition or contingency.

* * * * *

All tamleeks must, as a rule, be unconditional, they must be accepted immediately in the majlis (sitting) itself and it is open in such cases to the mumallik (i.e., the person making another the malik of his rights) to revoke the tamleek before acceptance. Whereas in isqatat, (i.e., acts causing extinction of rights) taleeq is valid, i.e., these may be made dependent on conditions and generally acceptance in the majlis is not necessary nor is the authority revocable. The Muhammadan lawyers have found it difficult to apply to cases of delegation or divorce all the incidents of a tamleek. They argue that this is a special kind of tamleek, for the reason that in ordinary cases of tamleek, or the transference of a right, the transferor is completely deprived of his right which after the transfer vests in the transferee, but in the case of a delegation of the authority to divorce, the husband is not deprived of his right and both the husband and the wife have in their hands the power of divorce. It is also not strictly included in the isqatat, because the delegation does not by itself extinguish any rights though the exercise of the delegated authority does. They hold that the delegation of an authority to divorce partakes only partially of the character of tamleek. It, therefore, admits of taleeq, that is, it may be made dependent on conditions. Accordingly they lay down special rules for cases of this class. These may be stated thus:

(1) That where the delegation is unconditional and the woman is present in the majlis, the delegated authority must be accepted and exercised then and there or as the Muhammadan lawyers call it, 'in the majlis' as in ordinary cases of tamleek.

(2) That unlike ordinary tamleeks acceptance in the majlis is not essential, so that if the woman is absent, she may accept the delegation in the majlis in which she hears of it and must exercise the authority then and there, unless any time is fixed or she is expressly allowed to exercise the power at any time she chooses.

(3) That there is no power of revocation in such cases.

(4) That the delegation may be contingent or be subject to conditions and in such cases the contingency must have happened and the condition must have been fulfilled before the delegated authority could be exercised. This is unlike tamleek which, when coupled with any condition, either the condition becomes void or it vitiates the transaction. In cases of conditional or contingent delegation, the power must be exercised as soon as the contingency has happened or if the fulfilment of the condition is not in the immediate power of the wife, when the condition is fulfilled unless, as in the case of conditional delegation, words are used to indicate that the power is to be exercised within a particular period or at any time the wife chooses.

The following passages translated from text books on Muhammadan Law amply establish these propositions. The original texts are quoted* in the appendix to this judgment.

(1) It is stated in the Zakhira that this tamleek (i.e., delegation of the right of divorce) is different from other tamleeks, inasmuch as it continues after the majlis when the woman is absent and is not dependent on acceptance. It is, therefore, clear that this kind of tamleek does not require the acceptance on which the validity of other tamleeks depends, because it is a tamleek which ends alone with the person giving it without an acceptance and is not capable of being revoked—Fat-hul-Qadeer, a commentary on the Hedaya by Shaikh-ul-Islam Ibn-i-Hamam, Volume III, page 411, Calcutta Edition.

* Not quoted in this report.—Ed.

(2) The woman is authorised (to exercise the power of divorce that may be delegated to her) in the majlis in which she comes to know of the delegation either by being present when the delegation is made or (if absent) when she hears of it. But if she allows one or more days to pass, she is not entitled to exercise the authority after the majlis except where the husband adds, to the expression 'divorce yourself' or similar expressions, words such as 'when you desire' or 'whenever you desire', in which case the exercise of the authority will not be confined to the majlis and the husband has no right to revoke the authority given—Dar-rul-Mukhtar, Book 2, pages 475, 476, Egyptian Edition.

(3) The use of the words 'when' or 'whenever' embraces all times as if the man had said 'at any time you desire' and the delegation is not confined to the majlis—Rad-dul-Mukhtar, Volume II, page 437, Egyptian Edition.

(4) A delegation is confined to the majlis but where words 'when you choose' are added, the woman is authorised to divorce either in the majlis or after it.—Bah-rur-Raiq, Volume III, page 354, Egyptian Edition. (Exactly the same language is used in Hedaya, Egyptian Edition, page 435).

(5) If a man says to his wife your business is in your hand when or whenever you desire, it is open to her to divorce herself at once in the majlis or outside it at any time she desires—Fatawa-i-Alamgiri, Volume I, page 562, Calcutta Edition.

(6) A man left the business of his wife in her hand on this condition that when he beat her without fault, she could divorce herself whenever she wished. Then she went out of the house without her husband's permission. The husband then beat her. Would her business be in her hand? It is said it would not be in her hand if her prompt dower has been paid but if it is not paid, it is open to her to go to her father's house without his permission or to refuse her person to him for the realisation of her prompt dower. In that case her going out of the house will not be a fault (and the beating being without fault she would have the right to divorce herself)—Alamgiri, Volume I, page Calcutta Edition.

In this case there was a clear delegation of the right of divorce which the defendant was expressly allowed to exercise 'whenever she chose.' She has exercised that power and thus has put an end to the marital relation between her and her husband. The suit for restitution of conjugal rights cannot, therefore, lie and has been rightly dismissed. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A copy of the proclamation of sale must, under rule 67 read with rule 54 (2) of Order XXI of the Civil Procedure Code, be affixed upon a conspicuous part of the Court house, and under rule 68 of the Order the sale must take place after the expiration of at least 30 days from the day on which the copy of the proclamation is so affixed. An omission to comply with any of those formalities is a material irregularity in the publication of the sale within the meaning of Order XXI, rule 90, of the Civil Procedure Code and vitiates the sale. KHETTRA MOHAN SINGH v. SHIB DAS CHANDER.

Messrs. K. V. Desker and S. K. Duram, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. V. Joshee, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant is the assignee of a decree for sale passed on foot of a mortgage in favour of one Sadasukh Jankidas. A house, the subject of the mortgage, was ordered to be sold on the 29th March 1917. The appellant, who has been substituted as the decree-holder, bid at the sale, and the house was knocked down in his favour for Rs. 6,000. As he did not deposit the 25 per cent. of the price of the sale, the sale Amin put up the house for sale again, but there was no bid. On the executing Court receiving the sale Amin's report, it ordered a fresh sale proclamation to issue and a fresh sale to be held on the 14th May 1917. On this date the house was knocked down to the respondent for a sum of Rs. 650. The appellant applied to the executing Court to set aside the sale but the application was summarily dismissed. An appeal has now been filed to this Court by him.

On looking through the record I find that there was a material irregularity in the publication of the sale. A copy of the proclamation of sale must, under Order XXI, rule 67, read with rule 54 (2), be affixed upon a conspicuous part of the Court house, and under rule 68 the sale must take place only after the expiration of at least 30 days, from the day on which the copy of the proclamation has been affixed on the Court house of the Judge ordering the sale. The proclamation announcing the 2nd sale bears an endorsement, dated 14th May 1917, that a copy of it is affixed to the board. I take this prima facie to mean that it was affixed on that day. The house was sold on the 1st occasion for Rs. 6,000 and is said to fetch a rent of Rs. 80 per month. Its sale for Rs. 650 only on the second occasion cannot but be said to have resulted in a substantial injury to the decree-holder. I set aside the 2nd sale of the 14th May 1917 in favour of the respondent Purnabai. The question remains whether the first sale in favour of the decree-holder should be upheld. In view of the fact that the decree-holder took no steps to have the order of the executing Court, dated 5th April 1917, ordering a fresh sale set aside, I do not consider it necessary to interfere with that order. The result will be that a fresh sale will have to be held after the necessary preliminary formalities. As regards costs the appellant is to blame for not having taken proceedings to have the order of the executing Court, dated 5th April 1917, set aside. I direct that he will pay the costs of the respondent Purnabai throughout, including the costs of the sale certificate and Rs. 15 as Pleador's-fee in this Court. The appeal is allowed to the extent indicated above.

Appeal partly allowed.

Provincial Small Causes Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 23—Return of plaint in suit involving question of title—Court, power of.

Under section 23 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act a Small Cause Court has power to return a plaint, to be presented in the Court having jurisdiction to determine the question of title raised in the suit, even though the question is alleged to be res judicata by reason of a previous suit between the plaintiff and the lessor of the defendant [p. 613, col. 1.]

Rule against the order of the Court of Small Causes, Sealdah.

Babu Pitaram Banerjee, for the Petitioners.—This Rule was directed against an order passed under section 23 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act in a suit for recovery of damages for wrongful use and occupation. The learned Small Cause Court Judge has improperly exercised his jurisdiction in ordering the return of the plaint simply because the defendant raised a question of title. The learned Judge should have considered that the question of title now raised was decided in a former suit between the plaintiff and the person set up by the defendant as his lessor.

DEBENDRO NATH SAH DEO v. DEO NANDAN SINGH.

Under section 23 a Court of Small Causes is not debarred from determining a question of title, and if it does try the question it becomes res judicata. The learned Judge has looked at the thing from a wrong standpoint. His duty was to see whether the plaintiff had proved his title, but he has not done that. Again, when the defendant set up a title in favour of a third person, the Court should have seen which of the two persons had got a better title. The question whether the plaintiff or the person set up by the defendant has got a better title as his lessor, is also res judicata in view of the previous case between them in which the question of title was decided in plaintiff's favour.

Refers to Gopi Nath Chobey v. Bhugwat Pershal (1), Ran Bahadoor Singh v. Lucho Koer (2)

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. It is directed against an order by which, proceeding under section 23 of that Act, the Judge of the Court of Small Causes has returned the plaint to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to determine the question of title raised in the suit. That the right of the plaintiffs in the suit in question did depend upon proof of plaintiffs' title to immoveable property cannot be disputed, and we see no ground for thinking that in returning the plaint the Judge of the Court of Small Causes has improperly exercised the discretion vested in him under section 23 of the Act. It has been suggested that the question of title is in fact res judicata by reason of a suit brought in the preceding year between the present plaintiffs and the lessor of the present defendant. But for the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge and also by reason of the fact that the Court of Small Causes cannot finally determine a question of title, we cannot accede to that contention. This Rule is accordingly discharged.

Rai Gurusaran Prosad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case was a purchaser of an impartible estate situated in Chota Nagpur, the respondent being one of the younger brothers of the transferor. The suit by the respondent was for the recovery of a 1/3rd share of the property transferred. The learned Munsif dismissed his suit. The learned Subordinate Judge, on the ground that the respondent was entitled to maintenance out of the property alienated, held that in equity the respondent was entitled to a decree for a share in the property in lieu of the maintenance that he had lost by the transfer, and in this view of the case gave a decree for a 1/4th share of the property transferred. Against that decision there is an appeal and a cross-appeal.

In our view the appeal must succeed. The authority quoted by the learned Subordinate Judge [Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (1)] cannot be interpreted in the way suggested by him, and indeed it was interpreted in a directly contrary fashion in the Munsif's Court. It is brought to our notice that there are still other properties left with the head of the family. JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an application made by the decree-holders who purchased certain property in execution, asking the Court to set aside an order made by the District Judge affirming the decision of the Munsif. The District Judge has found that the applicants obtained by fraudulent suppression of sale-notices a property of considerable value for an inadequate price of Rs. 49 only. The decree-holders, being aggrieved by the judgment of the District Judge, have applied to this Court to have the order set aside. The first question that arises is this: Had the opposite party an interest entitling him to come to Court under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 90, Code of Civil Procedure. The opposite party had a mortgage—a mortgage securing the payment of paddy—and apparently there were endorsements on the deed. The learned Judge held that the opposite party had an interest. It is quite true that the learned Judge departed from the duties of a Judge when he stated that the mortgagors were morally bound to pay off the debt. But notwithstanding that, he in his capacity as a Judge adjudicated on the rights of the parties and held that the opposite party had a subsisting interest on the terms of the mortgage. That is a pure question of law. Whether or not the opposite party has under the terms of the mortgage an interest in the property is a matter on which, as far as I can see, the Judges of this Court are not all agreed as to what is the nature of the mortgage and what is the article of the Indian Limitation Act that applies to the case. But this is a question of law and it is quite clear that the Court will not and cannot interfere under the terms of section 115, Code of Civil Procedure, at the instance of the persons who complain of the learned Judge's decision on a point of law.

The next point that has been seriously pressed by Mr. Palit on behalf of the petitioners is as regards the finding of the learned Judge with reference to the applications to set aside the sale, having regard to the facts of the case, being within the time allowed to make such an application. It is quite true that if one takes that as the first part of the judgment and alone, the finding is not sufficient. Of course, it would have been much better if the finding had been given in clear and conclusive terms in an earlier part of the judgment. But what the learned Judge meant to say is quite clear. If one reads the next part of his judgment which is not dealing with the question of limitation, and takes the findings made therein coupled with the earlier portion of the judgment, it is quite clear that the learned Judge meant to find facts on which he could come to the conclusion that the application to set aside the sale was within time. I think in this case no ground has been shown to us to interfere with the decision of the learned District Judge. The present Rule, therefore, fails and is discharged with costs, one gold mohur.

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908), ss. 6 (2), 23, 45, 163—Landlord and tenant—Rent, right to recover, from persons not regular tenants—Jurisdiction of Revenue Courts—Grant of land for cultivation without fixity of property or tenure, validity of—Indefiniteness—Kandetha poruppuguthagai, payment of—Status of person paying—Permanent tenure, grant of, whether binding on grantor or his successor—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 64, 65—Copy of document exhibited by consent of parties—Appellate Court, power of, to reject copy.

Under the provisions of sections 45 and 163 of the Madras Estates Land Act read with the Explanation to section 6, clause (2) of the Act, a claim for rent against persons within an estate who occupy ryoti land, either by legal right or otherwise, must be instituted in the Revenue Court. [p. 618, col. 2.]

A grant allowing the grantees to cultivate whatever and whenever they like is not a grant with any fixity of property or of tenure, which the law will recognize as conferring a heritable right. [p. 619, col. 1.]

Except under the provisions of the Madras Estates Land Act, a permanent settlement of rent by a landlord is not binding on his successors. The burden is on the grantee to show that there is a grant of the kind mentioned in section 26 of the Act. [p. 619, col. 2.]

Where a copy of a document is exhibited in the trial Court with the consent of both parties, the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to reject it on the ground that the original has not been produced. [p. 617, col. 1.]

Per Seshagiri, Aiyar J.—Where the relationship of landlord and tenant is admitted, the mere fact that the tenant has not paid rent for a long number of years will not bar the landlord's right to recover what he considers to be a reasonable rent. [p. 620, col. 1.]

Per Napier, J.—Where there has been a bona fide mistaken belief that a document has been properly proved and where that document is of fundamental importance for the decision of the questions at issue between the parties, the Appellate Court should always give the parties an opportunity of producing proper evidence on the point. [p. 620, cols. 1 & 2.]

Obiter.—A grant on payment of a kandetha poruppuguthagai, i.e., by payment of a fixed rent, will not make the grantee a landlord but only a tenant. [p. 621, col. 1.]

Second appeals against the decrees of the District Court, Madura, in Appeal Suits Nos. 444 to 494, 496 to 504, 506 and 507 of 1915, preferred respectively against the decrees of the Court of the Deputy Collector, Usalampatti Division, in Summary Suits Nos. 817 to 827, 829, 831 to 834, 836 to 839, 841 to 844, 846 to 850, 852, 857 to 859, 861 of 1912, 1036 to 1038, 1041, 1042, 1044, 1045, 1047, 1050, 1053, 1054, 1056, 1057, 1060, 1062, 1063, 1064, 1066, 1067, 1069, 1072, 1073, 1074, 1077, 1081, 1086, 1089 and 1090 of 1913.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswamy Ayyar and K. V. Seshu Ayyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Panchapagesa Sastri, for Mr. K. S. Jayarama Ayyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

SESHAGIRI AIYAR, J.—The same point arises in all these second appeals. Second Appeals Nos. 1307 to 1340 arise out of suits by the landlord for rent in the Revenue Court. Second Appeals Nos. 1341 to 1370 are from suits by tenants against the landlord to set aside revenue sales. The first group of cases relates to the rent of Fasli 1318. The second group of cases relates to the sales for the rent due for Fasli 1321. The landlord is the Zemindarini of Bodinaickanur. The tenants are known as Mannadies and reside in the village of Agamalai within the Zemindari. The plaintiff, by which expression I refer to the landlord throughout this judgment, sued for rent, on the ground that Agamalai is within her Zemindari, that she is the landlord and that defendants are her tenants. The plea of the Mannadies is that the plaintiff is not their landlord, that from time immemorial, they have been paying a Bil Mukta amount of Rs. 50 a year known as Poruppuguthagai, that the said payment was not made by them in the capacity of tenants, that, consequently, this suit brought in the Revenue Court does not lie and also that the claim for rent is barred by limitation.

The Deputy Collector found against most of the contentions of the defendants, but he held that the suit was barred by limitation, that the defendants were not tenants and that consequently the plaint should be returned for presentation to the Civil Court. The judgment was practically confirmed in appeal by the District Judge. Some of the points raised by the tenants are not supported by any document filed in the case. The Courts below have drawn largely from the District Manual of Madura compiled by Mr. J. H. Nelson in arriving at their conclusions. Even this compilation does not help us in finding a solution for many points of antiquarian interest which have been raised by the defendants.

Before considering the points argued before us, I may state that we have been assisted a great deal in our task by the well-arranged and clearly thought out judgment of the Deputy Collector. The points which have to be considered in deciding whether the Revenue Court or the Civil Court has jurisdiction are these:— (a) Whether the village in which the properties in question are situated is part of an estate; (b) whether the plaintiff is a landlord; (c) whether the lands, in respect of which rent is claimed, is a ryoti land; (d) whether the defendants are tenants; (e) and, lastly, what is the amount of rent payable in respect of the holdings of each of the defendants?

As regards the 1st question, the Deputy Collector was of opinion that Agamalai is part of the Bodinaikkanur estate. The District Judge has differed from him, mainly on the ground that the Sannad relating to Bodinaikkanur has not been exhibited in the case. The original of the Sannad-undoubtedly was not filed. But, it is clear that both parties agreed that a copy of it printed in a Privy Council record may be exhibited in the place of the original. The District Judge says that the Sannad was not mentioned as an exhibit in the list of documents in the lower Court's judgment. His opinion was that the Deputy Collector, without exhibiting the document, perused it and used it irregularly in arriving at a conclusion on the question whether Agamalai was within the Bodinaikkanur Zemindari. The learned District Judge is clearly under misapprehension on this question. What happened was that the printed book was put in before the Deputy Collector. He marked that portion of it relating to the Sannad as Exhibit 62 and put his initials thereunder. Apparently the printed copy was returned to the party without getting a certified copy filed under Order XIV, rule 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This is undoubtedly an irregularity which has apparently misled the District Judge. But there is no ground for saying that the copy of the Sannad was not exhibited before the Deputy Collector. Apparently the District Judge is of opinion that a copy should not have been allowed to be filed. If he thought that the original should be referred to, he should have given the parties an opportunity of producing it, having regard to what took place in the Court below. Before us, the Vakil for the tenants conceded that the copy exhibited is a true copy of the original Sannad. We also find, on referring to the printed book, that this same copy was filed as an exhibit on a previous occasion in the Munsif's Court. We suggested to the Vakil for the respondents that if he desired to have an adjournment in order that the original may be compared with the copy we were willing to grant him time. But the learned Vakil said that there is no necessity for the original being sent for, the copy having been exhibited with the consent of both the parties it was not open to the District Judge to have rejected the Sannad. The Appellate Court has, no doubt, large powers in rejecting documents on the ground of their not being relevant. But on the question whether the original should have been produced and whether the lower Court was justified in putting on the file a copy,

KAMULAMMAL AVERGAL v. SANGALI SUBBA PILLAI.

I do not think the Appellate Court had any right to reject a document exhibited. The reason of the rule is that if one party objected to the copy going in, the other party could have taken steps to produce the original. As was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in A. B. Miller, Official Assignee of the Estate of Ramkisher Das v. Babu Madho Das (1), while the Appellate Court has jurisdiction to reject a document on the ground of its not being relevant, it has no right to object to a document on the ground of insufficiency of proof. This principle was recognised in Padman v. Hanwanta (2), Uppara Hanumanthu v. Peddapalle Samacharlu (3), Ohimmai Govind. Godbole v. Dinkar Dhondev Godbole (4) and Akbur Ali v. Bhyea Lal Jha (5). Mr. Justice Benson and Mr. Justice Sundara Aiyar, after reviewing all the authorities on the question, point out in Sri Rajah Parakasrayanim Garu v. Venkata Rao (6) "consent or want of objection to the reception of evidence which is irrelevant cannot make the evidence relevant. But consent or want of objection to the wrong manner in which relevant evidence should be brought on record of the suit disentitles parties from objecting to such evidence in a Court of Appeal." I entirely agree with this statement of the law and hold that the District Judge was wrong in not having considered the Sannad which was admitted in evidence by the Deputy Collector. On perusing the Sannad, it is clear that Agamalai is one of the villages within the ambit of the Bodinaickanur Zemindari. That was the view taken by the Deputy Collector and I agree with him. Therefore, the first requisite is satisfied, namely, that the suit village is part of an estate.

On the second point it is not easy to follow the tenants' allegations. In their written statement they say that the village originally belonged to the Travancore Government, that during that reign, the Mannadies themselves were landlords and paid a sort of quit rent to the Travancore Government, that after the British Government assumed sovereignty over this part of the country, their rights as landlords continued to subsist, that consequently when the village became a part of the Bodinaickanur Zemindari, the Zemindar could have been assigned only the right of collecting Poruppuguthagai or quit rent which was all along being paid by the Mannadies first to the Travancore Government and then to the British Government. There is nothing in the documentary evidence produced before us to support this contention. The reference in Nelson's District Manual does not support the contention that the defendants were landlords. Even if they had any special rights under the Travancore regime, unless they were recognised or continued by the British Government, they are not entitled to it, Secretary of State for India v. Bai Rajbai (7). On the other hand, there are two unimpeachable documents which show that the British Government did not recognise any proprietary rights in the Mannadies. Exhibit N is of the year 1802. It gives a list of the names of the Mannadies as cultivators and regards the Government as landlords. Exhibit N (1) is to the same effect. In both these documents Agamalai is mentioned as being within the Bodinaickanur Palayapat. The Jama-bandhi account Exhibit O (1) gives the boundaries of the village and speaks of a Nattamai as the lessee of the village. Apparently the village was not given to the Bodinaickanur Zemindars until the year 1834. In Exhibit BB, which is a statement recorded by the Tahsildar in the course of an enquiry regarding boundary disputes between the Zemin village of Agamalai and the neighbouring Government village, it is stated that the village belonged to the Bodinaikanur Zemindari. Apparently by this time the Government had granted the village to the Zemindars.

The next document of importance is Exhibit 6. That is a Takeed from the Collector to the Tahsildar, in which the latter officer is asked to inform the Zemindar "that he himself may collect from the 5th instalment the Teervai due in respect of the aforesaid land belonging to Zemindars and that, for realising the kist due for the four instalments from the ryots who ploughed his said land, if the Zemindar distrains their property according to law and sends the Yadast to the Huzur, the Commissioner will be ordered to put the same to auction, realise the money and pay it (to the Zemindar)." This was on the 7th March 1836. By this time the Government had completely severed their connection with the village; they had no doubt intended to directly deal with the Mannadies because, as was stated in Nelson's District Manual, the Government wanted to have control over these hill-tracts as they were places of refuge for bandits. The same authority points out that the Collector, Mr. Hurdiz, tried the experiment for one or two years to come to some settlement with the Mannadies and that he ultimately gave up the task and handed over the village to the Zemindars. This is all the evidence available in the case regarding the history of the village. There is practically no evidence on the side of the defendants to substantiate their contention that they were themselves the landlords. There is the unquestioned fact that the Eruvadees have recognised the Bodinaikanur Zemindars as their landlords. There is no reason for supposing that the Mannadies occupied a different position towards the Zemindar from the Eruvadees. I must hold with the Deputy Collector that it has been established that the Bodinaikanur Zemindars are the land-holders.

The third question is as to whether the land is a ryoti land. Section 23 of the Estates Land Act enacts that where the question is, whether the land is old waste or ryoti land, the presumption is that it is a ryoti land. But this is a presumption which can be rebutted. The question as to whether the land in respect of which rent is claimed is ryoti land has not been considered by the Courts below and although there is this presumption in favour of the landlord, I am not prepared to hold at present that these lands are ryoti lands. That is a question which will have to be considered by the Court of first instance.

The fourth question is whether the defendants are tenants. Mr. K. V. Krishnaswamy Ayyar argued that, where the lands are within a Zemindari and they are ryoti lands if a person is in possession of them, he can be proceeded against in a Revenue Court. Section 163 of the Estates Land Act provides for ejectment of a trespasser by a Civil Court. On the other hand section 45 of the Act enables a land-holder to recover from a person unlawfully in possession of ryoti land rent in the Revenue Court. When sections 45 and 163 are read together with the explanation to section 6, clause 2, it is clear that a claim for rent against persons within the estate who occupy ryoti land, either by legal right or otherwise, must be instituted in the Revenue Court. Therefore, even if it is found that the defendants are not regular tenants, the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court will not be ousted. But I think that in this case, having regard to the pleadings and to the defence raised by the defendants, there is hardly any room for doubt that the defendants are tenants. We asked the learned Vakil for the respondents to state the exact position he contended for his clients. If we reject the interesting but unfounded theory that the Mannadies were themselves landlords, we have to see what their status is otherwise. It was suggested rather faint-heartedly that they may have been Inamdars. There is not a scrap of paper to support this. Then it was argued that under Exhibit J they acquired a permanent right to be on the land not necessarily as tenants but as having a sort of under-tenure on payment of a favourable quit rent.

Now as regards Exhibit J, a document on which apparently the Deputy Collector and the District Judge have relied, I may at once say that I see no reason for holding that it is not receivable in evidence. It purports to have been written by a clerk of the Collector's Office, and he boldly quotes a statement of a Karnam who in the discharge of his duty compiled a list and the descriptive memoir added to the list. It was admitted that, excepting for the heading which says "that this is an account of the village taken from the statement of Chinnayya Asari, Karnam of the village," the rest of it is a verbatim report of the Karnam himself. I think that this is receivable in evidence as being an official record compiled in the course of business, under section 34 of the Evidence Act.

Now, as regards the value and effect of this document the tenants contend that by this document they obtained a right for all time to come to cultivate whatever extent of land they liked and wherever they liked and to pay only Rs. 50 per annum for such cultivation. There is no doubt the language in the document is in their favour. I may at once say that I do not agree with the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant that this right must be confined to certain particular forest tracts and not to the cultivable portion of the village. This construction would do violence to the language of the document. The real question is, whether such a comprehensive grant can convey any heritable right to the grantees. It is to be remembered that we have not any written grant. The Karnam purports to embody in this statement an oral promise said to have been made to the tenants by the Zemindar. As the grant is vague, there is no fixity of property nor fixity of tenure. That such a grant cannot confer a heritable right was laid down in Bhaskarappa v. Collector of North Kanara (8). Mr. Justice West points out at page 584: "Even in the case of a grant of a definite quantity of land, but of undefined locality, the two eminent lawyers Yorke and Talbot, both afterwards Lord Chancellors, said: 'We are of opinion that, in regard to the place where the said lands lie is not described, nor any method provided by which the same may be ascertained, such grant..... is by reason of the uncertainty thereof absolutely void in law.'" Again he says: "As there must be certainty in a grant as to the area conferred, so must there be certainty as to the area, or at least as to the identity of the object occupied, if the occupation is to raise the presumption of a grant of acquiescence in definite occupation: talis enim præsumitur titulus processisse qualis apparet usus et possessio." In the present case there is no ascertained locality; and an indefinite promise to allow the Mannadies to cultivate wherever and whatever they liked is not a grant which the law will recognise as conferring a heritable right. I must, therefore, hold that Exhibit J did not confer a perpetual tenure in favour of the tenants. There is a further difficulty in this case and that is that, even supposing that the grant was capable of conferring a permanent right, it is not available against the successors of the Zemindar who granted it. It was conceded that the original grantee is dead and that there have been three generations since his time. Section 26 of the Estates Land Act provides that except in the case of grants made by a Zemindar to enable the grantee to clear the jungle and to bring the waste land into cultivation, a permanent settlement of rent by a predecessor is not binding upon the successors. I do not want to say that it is not open to the defendants to show that the grant was made for the purpose mentioned in clause 1 of section 26, but the burden is on them to show that there was a grant of that nature and that it is binding upon the present Zemindarini. But it is unnecessary for the landlord to invoke the aid of section 26, as I have held that Exhibit J did not confer a fixed tenure.

It was argued before us that even though defendants may be tenants, they are not liable to pay anything more than Rs. 50 agreed to under Exhibit J. It was suggested in this Court that the defendants have acquired a limited prescriptive right to continue to hold the lands in their holding by paying an amount considerably less than what otherwise is being demanded in the present suits. There can be no question that until the present suits were brought the tenants have not been asked to pay anything like the amount now claimed against them. It may be that by long payment they have acquired a right to continue that payment, as argued in this Court. But that would not oust the jurisdiction of the Revenue Court, I express no opinion on the amount of rent payable by the tenants or on the question of prescription raised.

My conclusion is that the Revenue Court has jurisdiction to hear and determine these suits. I must, therefore, reverse the decrees of the Court below and remit the case to the Court of first instance to determine whether the land in respect of which rent is claimed is ryoti land, and what is the amount of rent payable by each of the tenants in respect of the lands in his possession.

It was rightly conceded before us that, if these defendants are tenants, the mere fact that for a long number of years they have not paid any rent, will not bar the right of the landlord to recover what he considers to be reasonable rent. Really no question of limitation can arise under the circumstances, excepting it be in respect of the particular sums claimed in the suits.

The costs hitherto incurred will be provided in the revised decree.

In disposing of the cases the right said to have been conceded in the Courts below and recorded in paragraph 41 of the Deputy Collector's judgment, will have to be borne in mind. As regards the Vakil's fee in this Court, we award Rs. 500 and direct that it be distributed, if costs are awarded against them or in their favour, among the tenants. The costs of printing will be similarly distributed.

NAPIER, J.—I agree. The District Judge was undoubtedly in error in supposing that the copy of the Sannad had not been properly exhibited in the case. I am satisfied that, by consent of parties, the printed copy was put on the file instead of the original. It is not suggested to us that it is not a correct copy, and indeed it must be so, being a print made for the purpose of an appeal to the Privy Council. Even if the District Judge had been right, he should not, in my opinion, have dealt with the case without giving the plaintiff an opportunity of producing the original Sannad. Where there has been a bona fide mistaken belief that a document has been properly proved and where that document is of fundamental importance for the decision of the question at issue between the parties, an Appellate Court should always give the party an opportunity of producing the proper evidence. The District Judge has, however, considered the case on the assumption that the copy is a true one, and has decided that, although the village in question is within the ambit of the Zemindari, the Zemindar is not a land-holder in respect of it within the meaning of section 3(5) of the Estates Land Act and that the defendants who hold possession are not ryots within the meaning of sub-section 15 of the same section. He has accepted the theory of original tenure of this village and of its dealings by the British Government which, I think, is not supported by the evidence. He considers it proved that this village was not originally a part of the Zemindari but belonged to the defendants' ancestors and that, therefore, the inclusion of it in the terms of the Sannad could not affect their vested rights. During the argument on appeal the claim of the defendants was put in two ways, one on the lines of the judgment of the District Court and the other on the theory of a perpetual grant from the Zemindar. I agree with my learned brother that neither of these contentions has been made out. There is nothing, in my opinion, in the information gathered from the District Manual of Madura to support this theory of an original grant to the defendants; and whatever may have been their rights under the previous Government, there can be no question that, at the time of the cession, Government dealt with this village as being at its own disposal unfettered by any previous grants. It appears from the District Manual that the Collector recommended the retention of this village in the hands of Government for the time being, as it was situated in the hills and was occupied by lawless persons who required close observation. This proposal was accepted by the Board of Revenue, who agreed with the Collector that the hill villages must be kept under Sarkar management. In pursuance of this policy the Collector fixed the rent payable for the village at 47.5 Pans by Jamabandi in 1802, but no period is mentioned in the document Exhibit O evidencing this transaction and it is obviously a settlement for one year only. It is clear that this temporary arrangement continued for a number of years but was subsequently put an end to,

KAMULAMMAL AVERGAL v. SANGALI SUBBA PHILLAI.

Exhibit VI, dated the 7th March 1836, is an entry in the book containing the orders of the Collector of the Madura District. It is an instruction to the Tahsildar to inform the Zemindar that he might collect Teervai from certain lands in the Agamalai village as those lands were comprised in his Agamalai village and not in the adjacent Tenkarai Government village. It recites that there had been a dispute between the Bodinaikanur Zemindar and the Government with regard to the boundary between the two villages, which dispute had terminated in favour of the Zemindar. And we have in Exhibit BB the evidence of a witness called during that boundary dispute to prove the true boundary between the villages. It appears in the form of an Attakshi given on the 1st September 1834, and the witness deposed that the land in question was in the village of Agamalai attached to the Bodinaikanur Zemindari. There can be no doubt, therefore, that some time before 1834 the Government had decided no longer to retain possession of this village but had granted it to the Bodinaikanur Zemindar. This grant was subsequently made permanent by the Sannad of 1880. I am constrained, therefore, to differ from the District Judge in his conclusion on this point.

The next line of argument is that there had been a perpetual grant of the ownership of the village to the ryots proved by the statement of the Karnam in Exhibit J. I agree with my learned brother that this document is receivable in evidence under section 34 of the Evidence Act. The statement is as follows: "Coming to know that the other ryots were not able to pay Porupuguthagai, the Kandetha Porupuguthagai was fixed for all time at Rs. 50 per annum, as per the oral orders of the late Zemindar in Fasli 61 (1852), whatever be the extent of land cultivated and wherever be the place cultivated by these ryots, and the said ryots had to pay the same in the Zemindar's Cutcherry and it was not included in the village Jamabandi. No documents have been secured in writing regarding the said lease." The contention for the defendants is that they thereby became the land-holders, they were not tenants within the meaning of clause 15, section 3. With regard to the argument that they were the land-holders by virtue of being "persons owning an estate or part thereof," I agree with my learned brother that this statement by the Karnam does not prove a grant of title to defendants' ancestors. The village is a forest tract and the cultivation is Kumati. All that the Zemindar purported to do was to permit the ryots to cultivate in this peculiar manner such land as they required at a fixed rent of Rs. 50. It is admitted that in the same area there are and have been for a great many years, a number of tenants not descendants of the original ryots who are known as Erewadees, and a number of grants on Darkhast to such persons by the manager of the Zemindari during the minority of one of the Zemindars have been put in (vide Exhibit VII series), and there is a mass of other evidence showing the same thing which is not disputed in this case. The existence of these other tenants made it impossible to hold that the Zemindar ever purported to make a grant of ownership of any definite portion of the tract. It is clear, therefore, that the defendants are not land-holders. They contend that they are not tenants, as it is not shown that they hold for the purpose of agriculture ryoti land in an estate on condition of paying rent to the land-holder. It is not necessary at this stage to decide the questions raised on this point. Land in a Zemindari which is not excepted under clauses (a), (b) and (c) of sub-section 16 of section 3 is ryoti land, and section 23 raises a presumption in favour of the Zemindari. That question is one which will have to be decided. If it is found that the land in question is ryoti land it will, in my opinion, be difficult for the defendants to make out that they are not ryots. The contention has been raised before us that their liability being limited to pay Rs. 50 a year, that is not rent within the meaning of the Act because it cannot be increased. During the argument I asked for any authority for this proposition or for any case in which it had been held that persons holding under a Zemindar in this manner, who were not land-holders themselves within the meaning of section 3 (5), were still not ryots within the meaning of sub-section 15, and no such authority was brought to my notice. It is quite open to question whether the right to cultivate as much land as they required at a fixed rental of Rs. 50 is still binding on the estate. It may be that the defendants can show that under the provisions of section 26, clause (1), they are entitled to pay only this fixed rent, but it rests on them to show this, if such rent is found to be lower than the rent payable upon land of similar description in the neighbourhood [vide section 26 (3)].

In the result I agree with my learned brother in reversing the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and remitting the cases to the Court of first instance to determine whether the land is ryoti land and what is the amount of rent payable by each of the tenants in respect of the lands in his possession.

An undischarged insolvent suing to recover a sum due to him from the defendant and earned by him subsequent to the adjudication cannot be compelled to give security for costs merely because he is an insolvent, unless he is a nominal plaintiff acting on behalf of the trustee or for the benefit of others. [p. 622, col. 1.]

An application for an order that the plaintiff, who is an undischarged insolvent, be directed to give security for costs of the suit is not covered by any provision of the Civil Procedure Code and should be dealt with under the general law. [p. 622, col. 2.]

It is well settled in English Law that a bankrupt is the proper plaintiff to sue in respect of property acquired by him after adjudication and that anything recovered by him remains in the bankrupt until the trustee intervenes, and the same principles are applicable in this country under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. [p. 622, col. 2; 623, col. 1.]

Mr. Hyam, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. N. Sincar (with him Mr. S. O. Bose), for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the defendant Company for an order that the plaintiff be directed to give security for the costs of the suit. The plaintiff is an undischarged insolvent and he is suing to recover from the defendant Company a sum of Rs. 33,731 for brokerage, said to have been earned by him subsequent to his adjudication. The total liabilities of the insolvent are said to amount, according to his schedule of affairs, to Rs. 11,604. In reply to an enquiry addressed by the defendant Company to the Official Assignee on the 22nd January 1918 as to whether he claimed any interest in the suit and if it had been instituted with his knowledge or consent, he replied on the 25th January 1918 that the suit would be continued by him; but so far as I am aware, he has not taken any steps with regard to it.

It is admitted that this application is not covered by any provision in the Code of Civil Procedure, but that Code is not exhaustive, and I must deal with it under the general law. It is well settled in English Law that a cause of action which accrues to a bankrupt subsequent to the adjudication in respect of after-acquired property, remains vested in him and does not vest in his Trustee in Bankruptcy and that he is the proper plaintiff to sue in respect thereof, and that anything recovered by him remains in the bankrupt until the Trustee intervenes, see William's Bankruptcy Practice, 11th Edition, pages 242 to 250, and I see no reason to doubt that the same principles are applicable in this country under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

Again, it is well settled in English Law that a plaintiff will not be compelled to give security for costs merely because he is a pauper or a bankrupt, see Chitty's Archbold, Volume I, Part 5, Chapter 33, page 398, quoted with approval by Lindley, L. J., in Rhodes v. Dawson (1), and see Cook v. Whellock (2), where Vaughan Williams

NAGO V. PAIKU.

J., states at page 659 that a plaintiff suing in respect of a cause of action accruing subsequently to the bankruptcy cannot, simply because he is an undischarged bankrupt, be called upon to give security for costs unless he is acting on behalf of the Trustee and that the order for security as to costs only applies where the plaintiff is a nominal plaintiff suing for the benefit of others, and Lord Esher states at page 662 that if the undischarged bankrupt gets a benefit, he is not a nominal plaintiff, see also Cowell v. Taylor (3), and the judgment of Bowen, L. J., at page 38.

I think that the same principles are applicable in this country.

What, therefore, I have got to decide on this application is, whether the plaintiff here is a nominal plaintiff suing only for the benefit of the Official Trustee. I think that he is not. I will assume in favour of the defendant Company that the letter of the Official Assignee of the 25th January 1918 amounts to an intervention by him, so that he will claim up to the sum of Rs. 11,604 any sum recovered by the plaintiff in the suit, but the claim is for Rs. 33,731 and accordingly any sum recovered in excess of Rs. 11,604 remains for the plaintiff's benefit, so that I cannot say that the plaintiff in any event gets no benefit and is a nominal plaintiff. In certain events he gets a substantial benefit and on this ground I dismiss the application with costs.

Application dismissed.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 566 OF 1917.

August 31, 1918.

PAIKU—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

C. P. Tenancy Act (XI of 1898), s. 35 (4)—

Surrender, implied, doctrine of, applicability of—Occupancy tenancy, alienation of, by female holder—Necessity, want of—Alienee, possession of, whether adverse to reversioner.

The doctrine of implied surrender contained in section 35 (4) of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act is intended to apply to normal circumstances where the landlord or the person put in by him holds adversely to the tenant. Where, however, a female holder alienates an occupancy tenancy and the alienation is not for legal necessity, the alienee does not begin to hold adversely to the ultimate reversioner until the death of the female holder, and the doctrine of implied surrender has no application to such a case. [p. 624, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Wardha, in Civil Appeal No. 141 of 1917, dated the 26th September 1917, arising out of the Civil Suit No. 27 of 1917, decided by the Sub-Judge No. 3, Wardha, on the 25th July 1917.

JUDGMENT.—The holding to which the appeal relates was the occupancy holding of Raghoba. He died on the 27th August 1893, leaving a widow Lakshmi and a daughter Tulsi by another wife, Jai. Jai kept Lakshmi out of possession, and Lakshmi recovered possession by a decree, dated 29th March 1894.

On 5th October 1894 Lakshmi transferred the holding to Nama, the 1st defendant-appellant's father, who was Raghoba's sister's son. The transfer was with the Malguzar's consent. The plaintiff-respondent Paiku is Tulsi's son, and sued for possession about 5 months after Lakshmi's death. It has been found that the transfer to Nama was not for legal necessity. After the transfer Nama and his adopted son, the appellant, have been in continuous possession, the landlord has accepted them as tenants and received rent from them and at Settlement they have been recorded as occupancy tenants. The defendants pleaded, among other things, that in the circumstances there was an implied surrender by Lakshmi under section 35 (4) of the Tenancy Act. The learned Additional District Judge has held, following Vithu v. Mendri (1), that the suit is maintainable and that the doctrine of implied surrender does not apply to the case. The suit in Vithu v. Mendri (1) was for a declaration during the lifetime of the female holder, but the principles enunciated are applicable to a suit brought by the reversioner after the death of the female holder.

The learned Advocate for the appellants relies on implied surrender, and points out that the question of implied surrender was not raised in Vithu v. Mendri (1); and he seeks to distinguish the present case on that ground. I have looked into the records of Vithu v. Mendri (1) and find that though the question of implied surrender was not put in issue, the transferee from the limited female holder had been accepted by the landlord as tenant. It is difficult to believe that the learned Judicial Commissioner entirely overlooked the rule of implied surrender and would not have taken it into consideration, if he had considered it applicable. The circumstances of the two cases are identical. Both the suits are governed by the Tenancy Act of 1883, under which a transfer was voidable by the landlord unless it was consented to by him. It is argued that the 1st appellant has become a tenant as he was put in possession by the landlord, and, therefore, can plead implied surrender according to the rulings of this Court, and that there has been constructive surrender by the widow by non-cultivation and by non-payment of rent for over two years. It has been held in Gunpat v. Trimbak (2) that a minor's rights are lost by a transfer by his guardian followed by possession by the landlord for over two years with failure to cultivate or to pay rent on the part of the minor tenant, and it is argued that a reversioner is not in a better position than a minor.

This is one of the cases where a difficulty arises in reconciling the Hindu Law with the special provisions of the Tenancy Act. It appears to me, as at present advised, that the doctrine of implied surrender contained in section 35 (4) of the Tenancy Act is intended to apply to normal circumstances where the landlord or the person put in by him holds adversely to the tenant. Where the alienation is not for legal necessity the alienee does not begin to hold adversely to the ultimate reversioner, until the death of the female holder. It is true that Nama was accepted as a tenant by the landlord, but it appears to me that this must be held to have been subject to the claim of the reversioner on Lakshmi's death. For these reasons I think the Additional District Judge was right in following the case of Vithu v. Mendri (1) and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 71—Mortgage bond signed by attesting witnesses before completion—Execution, proof of.

A statement by the attesting witnesses to a mortgage deed that they signed the blank paper and not the completed deed is sufficient to attract the operation of section 71 of the Evidence Act and entitles the mortgagee to prove execution by evidence other than that of the attesting witnesses. [p. 625, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Midnapur, dated the 25th of May 1916, modifying that of the Munsif, 3rd Court at that place, dated the 22nd of December 1914.

Babus Amarendra Nath Bose and Karunamoy Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Satcowripati Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage bond. The execution of the bond was admitted by defendant No. 1, the sole executant. Defendant No. 2 is a purchaser of a part of the mortgaged property. He alone contested the suit, his main objection being that the bond was invalid for want of consideration. This point was decided in his favour by the first Court; but that finding has been reversed by the lower Appellate Court and the suit has been decreed against both the defendants.

As regards the issue of payment of consideration, the finding of the lower Appellate Court is final in second appeal, but it is now contended that the suit should be dismissed on the ground that there has been no proof of execution of the bond or that it has been attested according to law.

As regards the question of execution, this, it is stated, was admitted in the written statement of defendant No. 1. It also appears to have never been denied by defendant No. 2 and further, the defendant No. 2 in his evidence stated that the bond had been signed in his presence. It cannot, therefore, be held that there was no evidence to support the finding of the lower Appellate Court and, if there was any evidence at all, this finding is final.

As regards the question of attestation, evidence in this case was first given on the side of the defence and the attesting witnesses were examined and they stated that they had signed blank papers and not the completed deed. This statement by these witnesses is sufficient to attract the operation of section 71 of the Evidence Act and enable the plaintiff to prove execution by other evidence than that of the attesting witnesses; and this, it has been held, he has been able to do. It has been found that the deed was attested and this also is a finding of fact. Though there seems to be no direct evidence of attestation, this fact could have been inferred from the signatures of the attesting witnesses on the deed when their story of how those signatures came to be there had been disbelieved.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara School—Succession—

Spiritual benefit, whether test for preference among rival bandhus—Maternal uncle, whether to be preferred to sister's daughter's son—Appeal—Appellate Court, interference by, on finding of fact—Evidence, weighing of.

By THE FULL BENCH.—(Sir Dawson Miller, C. J., and Sir Ali Imam, J., dissenting).—In a family governed by the Mitakshara school of Hindu Law the maternal uncle of the last male owner is preferred to the sister's daughter's son as next heir to the estate. [p. 639, col. 1; p. 656, cols. 1 & 2; p. 662, col. 2.]

Per Mullick, J.—Both the Dayabhaga and the Mitakshara recognize the principles of propinquity of blood and religious efficacy. The only difference is that in the Dayabhaga religious merits arising from the celebration of the Parbana Sradh is accorded greater weight and that in the absence of religious merit accruing from Parbana rights, the ability to benefit the deceased by some other religious ceremony is a sufficient foundation of a title to inherit. The Mitakshara, on the other hand, regards oblations presented by cognate kinsmen as secondary and conferring no claim against the whole body of agnates. The Dayabhaga, admitting that the oblations are secondary as compared with agnates of the same line, insists that the Parbana Pindas conferred by cognates should prevail against agnates of a remoter line. The true view is that nearness of blood determines the heritable right while the doctrine of spiritual efficacy determines the preferential right. [p. 633, col. 1.]

The test of religious and spiritual benefit can and should be applied to determine the preferential right, that is to say, where the principle of affinity by blood relationship does not clearly indicate with which claimant the preference lies. [p. 639, col. 1.]

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—The first and foremost rule of preference among several claimants is that the nearest in degree, ascertained by the simple method of counting given in the Mitakshara, excludes those more remote and when the degree is equal only then other considerations might be resorted to for the purpose of preference among the rival claimants. [p. 645, cols. 1 & 2.]

The rule that the heirs ex parte paterna should be preferred to those ex parte materna is not to be found in the text relating to Bandhus in the Mitakshara and there is no authority for supplying any omission in that text. [p. 649, col. 1.]

Per Imam, J.—In the Mitakshara religious efficacy is not the determining guide for the purpose of inheritance. [p. 657, col. 2.]

Per Thornhill, J.—As between Bandhus of the same class a rule of preference may be found in the quantity of spiritual benefit which they confer. [p. 662, col. 1.]

By THE DIVISION BENCH. (Sir Dawson Miller, C. J., and Justice Sir Ali Imam).—A Court of Appeal should not readily disturb the findings of fact arrived at by the trial Judge even if it might be inclined to take a different view from reading the evidence, but if the Appellate Court is satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt on considering the evidence that the findings are erroneous, then it ought to interfere. Or again, if the reasons given by the Judge of the lower Court for arriving at his conclusions are such that they cannot be supported then the Court of Appeal is clearly entitled to disregard those findings and form its own independent judgment of the facts from the evidence and probabilities of the case. [p. 664, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 16th June 1915.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.

MILLER, C. J., AND IMAM, J. — (May 20th, 1918).—In this case an important question of law is involved as to the succession of Bandhus under the Mitakshara Law and the question for determination is, whether in a family governed by the Mitakshara school of law a sister's daughter's son is to be preferred to the maternal uncle of the last male owner as his heir. Having regard to the importance of the question and the apparent conflict of decisions on the point we think it desirable that the case should be referred to a Full Bench for an expression of opinion on the point of law involved. A Full Bench will be appointed to consider this question at an early date.

Messrs. Krishna Sahay, Abani Bhusan Mukherjee and Panchanan Banerjee, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kailaspati and Mrityunjay Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—The question for determination in this reference is, whether in a family governed by the Mitakshara school of law the sister's daughter's son or the maternal uncle of the last male owner is to be preferred as next heir to his estate. The pedigree set out below shows the relationship between the parties. The last male owner of the property in suit was Chamman Lal Upadhya.

The persons whose claims to succeed to Chamman Lal's estate have to be considered are (1) the plaintiff Uma Shankar, and (2) Raghunandan Missir. The former is Chamman Lal's sister's daughter's son, the latter is his mother's brother. Chamman Lal died childless in the year 1910 and his widow Musammat Parmeshri Koer succeeded to his estate. She died in 1912 and the plaintiff Uma Shankar claimed to succeed to the estate as nearest Bandu and next heir to Chamman Lal. His claim was opposed by one Ganesh Prasad Panday, a nephew of Parmeshri Koer, Chamman Lal's widow, and by Musammat Nageshri Koer, a sister of the same lady. The nature of their claims is not material to the present issue. They were based on a transfer and an adoption alleged to have been made by the widow. During the course of the trial, however, it transpired that Raghunandan Missir, the maternal uncle of Chamman Lal, was alive. He had made no claim to the estate, but the learned Additional Subordinate Judge at Gaya who tried the case came to the conclusion that even if the plaintiff could succeed in establishing his case in other respects, the maternal uncle of Chamman Lal would succeed to his nephew's property in priority to the plaintiff whose relationship was that of sister's daughter's son. On appeal to this Court, the question, being considered one of importance in which there was some conflict of authority, was referred to a Full Bench.

UMA SHANKAR PRASAD V. NAGESWARI KOERI.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents (defendants) that although under the Mitakshara consanguinity may determine the right to inherit in the first instance, nevertheless as between rival claimants of the same class the efficacy of religious offerings is the determining factor establishing priority. In the present case both the plaintiff and Raghunandan Missir are Atma Bandhus of the propositus. Raghunandan Missir could confer some spiritual benefit on the deceased by his offerings. The plaintiff could confer none. The appellant contends that whatever may be the rule prevailing under the Bengal school, the right to inherit under the Mitakshara as well as the order of succession are determined solely by nearness of blood, subject to certain rules founded on the text itself or based by analogy on the principles to be deduced therefrom and that the efficacy of religious oblations forms no part of the scheme of succession prescribed by the Mitakshara. It is true that under the Mitakshara the nearest agnates who succeed are those who confer the greatest spiritual benefit on the deceased proprietor, but when the more distant agnates are considered it is clear that their claims to inherit in priority to near cognate relations, such as the sister's son whose religious offerings rank much higher than those of distant agnates up to the 14th degree to whom he is postponed, cannot be based on any considerations of religious efficacy. Mr. Mayne, in his well-known treatise on Hindu Law and Usage, says: "The doctrine that heirs are to be placed in the direct order of their spiritual merit was announced for the first time by Jimuta Vahana and has been expanded by his successors," and points out that this necessitated a remodelling of the order of succession in the Bengal system, the cognates being shuffled in amongst the agnates to the exclusion of those mentioned in the Mitakshara and whereas in Bengal the inheritance follows the duty of offering sacrifices, elsewhere the duty follows the inheritance. According to that learned author the cardinal distinction between the two schools of Hindu Law governed by the Dayabhaga and the Dayakrabha Sangraha on the one hand and the Mitakshara on the other is that in the former the order of succession is based on the efficacy of religious offerings and in the latter on consanguinity. Mr. Mayne goes so far as to say that the Mitakshara in dealing with succession never once alludes to the test of religious merit. There is a passage in the Mitakshara which might appear to conflict with this dictum where the commentator distinguishes between Sapindas and Samanodakas, stating that the former succeed before the latter and that the former offer funeral cakes and the latter only libations of water. This Mr. Mayne explains as merely a way of indicating different degrees of propinquity and not as evidencing different degrees of religious merit, and there is certainly no room for doubt that under the Mitakshara those who confer high religious benefits on the deceased owner are in many cases postponed to those who confer little or none. Sir Ernest Trevelyan, an authority of weight on this subject, when dealing with the difference between the law of inheritance prescribed by the Mitakshara and that of the Bengal school, also says: "In the system of inheritance under the Mitakshara school of law propinquity of relationship is the guiding principle for determining the order of succession." (Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 377.) Colebrooke's celebrated paraphrase of the word Sapinda in his translation of the Mitakshara as "connected by funeral oblations" no doubt afforded material for the supposition that Vijnaneswara has in mind the efficacy of religious offerings, and not propinquity, as the criterion determining the order of succession. This translation of the word Sapinda made over a century ago would hardly appear to be justified by reference to other passages in the Mitakshara which have more recently been translated, but its effect has undoubtedly been felt in many of the judgments dealing with questions of inheritance under the Mitakshara Law. That part of the Mitakshara known as the Acharakanda which was not translated by Colebrooke makes it clear beyond doubt that the meaning attributed to the word Sapinda by Vijnaneswara himself was blood relationship. He says: "Sapinda relationship arises between two people through their being connected by particles of one body," and truly enough observes that "the word Sapinda on account of its etymological import (connected by having in common particles of one body) would apply to all men", and accordingly restricts its signification as shewn in the text to relations connected by a common ancestor not more than 6 degrees removed from either. It is true this passage does not occur in that part of the text which deals with inheritance, but there is nothing to suggest that the use of the same word in other portions of the commentary was meant to have a different signification. I have stated that Colebrooke's translation has been accepted by learned Judges when dealing with questions of inheritance under the Mitakshara Law, but in such cases it does not appear to have been questioned. In Omrit Koomaree Dabee v. Luckhee Narain Chuckerbutty (1) decided in 1868 the question was whether a person could be heir to his maternal uncle as a Bandhu, although not one of those specially named in the text of the Mitakshara. Dwarka Nath Mitter, J., in dealing with Colebrooke's translation of the Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 5, verse 3, made some observations which may be urged as shewing that that learned Judge accepted Colebrooke's rendering of Sapinda in connection with the definition of Bandhu. He says at page 81: "It will be observed that two conditions are necessary to meet the requirements of this definition, namely, first that the claimant should be a kinsman sprung from a different family and second that he should be connected by funeral oblations." Colebrooke's translation is as follows: "For kinsmen sprung from a different family but connected by funeral oblations" (Sapindaship) "are indicated by the term cognate (Bandhu)." Both these conditions were fulfilled in that case by the claimant, a sister's son of the propositus, and it did not become necessary to discuss the accuracy of Colebrooke's translation nor does it appear to have been questioned. But in a later passage the learned Judge says: "It is perfectly true that the lawyers of the Benares school sometimes use the word Sapinda in the sense of consanguinity or mere connection through the body," and on either view he decides that the sister's son was a Bandhu. The real point decided in that case was that the enumeration of Bandhus in the

Mitakshara was illustrative and not exhaustive, which was the view also taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gridhari Lall Roy v. Bengal Government (2) decided in the same year. In the latter case also Colebrooke's translation was accepted without comment but it was not necessary to consider the point. In 1880 the case of Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (3) came before their Lordships of the Privy Council. It was a Bombay case and concerned the claim of the widow of a paternal cousin, who was a Gotraja Sapinda of the deceased, to succeed in preference to a more remote male heir, also a Gotraja Sapinda. It was contended inter alia that the passages in the Acharakanda of the Mitakshara defining Sapinda relationships connected by particles of one body should apply also to the same word in the parts of the text which treat of inheritance. The Court below had so decided. Their Lordships in dealing with this proposition said they were "prepared to assent to the conclusion to which the Judges of the High Court upon consideration of the authorities arrived that by the Law of the Mitakshara as interpreted and accepted in Western India, the preferential right to inherit in the classes of Sapindas is to be determined by family relationship or the community of corporal particles and not alone by the capacity of performing funeral rites."

In the same year the case of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (4) was decided by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court. In that case the rival claimants to the property of the last male owner were the plaintiff whose father had purchased from the widow of the deceased owner and the defendant who was his sister's daughter's son. His relationship to the propositus was identical with that of the plaintiff Uma Shankar in the present case. The question turned upon whether the defendant as sister's daughter's son of the propositus could be an heir. This depended upon the meaning to be attached to the word Sapinda in Chapter II, section 5, verse 3 of the Mitakshara. The defendant was certainly not connected by funeral oblations with the deceased. The Court consisting of Sir R. Garth, C. J., and four other Judges came to the conclusion that the word Sapinda should be used throughout the Mitakshara in the same sense, viz., connected by particles of one body as explained by the author himself in the Chapter on rituals and that Colebrooke's translation was wrong. They accordingly decided that the defendant was entitled to inherit. In this judgment reference is made to a further passage in the Mitakshara (Acharakanda), where the author cites a text of Vrihat Manu dealing with Sapinda relationship and that of Samanodakas in the case of agnates and says with regard to it: "Sapinda relationship with the father does not arise by reason of connection through funeral cakes but through the connection of particles of one body." This is significant, as the Sapinda relationship referred to in the text of Manu was evidently that of Gotraja Sapinda. Reference to other parts of the Mitakshara also supports the view that propinquity and not religious efficacy is the principle on which the selection of heirs is based. In Chapter II, section 3, verse 3, the mother is preferred to the father as an heir on the ground that "the father is a common parent to other sons (obviously meaning by another wife) but the mother is not so and since her propinquity is consequently greatest, it is fit she should take the estate in the first instance conformably with the text to the nearest Sapinda the inheritance belongs." This quaint process of reasoning is based on the doctrine that man and wife are Sapindas to each other as they together beget one body but the privilege of the husband to a plurality of consorts, which is not shared by the wife, is supposed to place him in a category more removed from his children than that of their mother. As the mother presents no oblations to her son whilst the father does, this is not only a striking instance of the meaning of the word Sapinda as used in the text dealing with inheritance but also indicates the doctrine on which priority of inheritance is based. A consideration of the Bandhus specifically named in the Mitakshara also discloses the fact that 4 out of the 9 mentioned confer no spiritual benefit at all on the means of the deceased. These are the 5th, 6th, 8th and 9th in the order given in the text. (Mitakshara, Chapter II, 6.) Moreover, after enumerating the 3 classes of Bandhus the text continues:—

"Here by reason of near affinity the cognate kindred of the deceased himself are his successors in the first instance, on failure of them his father's cognate kindred; or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred. This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended."

The Mitakshara also bases the claim of the daughter to inherit upon consanguinity alone and not, as in the Dayabhaga, on the expectation of religious offerings from her son and neither the sonless widows nor the barren are excluded as in the Bengal system (Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 2, verses 2—4). The question, however, appears to have been finally determined in so far as, Vijnaneswara's conception of the meaning of Sapinda is concerned, by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothe. (5) in the year 1914, where it is stated: "Mr. Colebrooke in his rendering of the Mitakshara has paraphrased Sapinda as a relation 'connected by funeral oblations', which resulted in virtually obliterating one of the main distinctions between the Benares and the Bengal schools. But it is now recognised that his paraphrase was erroneous and that the true theory of Sapinda relationship propounded by Vijnaneswara was based on community of blood."

There are no doubt passages to be found in many of the earlier cases which support the view that the order of succession in the Mitakshara is founded to some extent at least on the doctrine of religious benefits. It is not necessary to refer to those cases in detail. It would appear that in most, if not all, of them the translation of Sapinda as

'connected by funeral oblations' was the foundation of the opinions therein expressed, and in some instances much ingenuity has been expended in an attempt to reconcile the clear evidence to be found in the text of the Mitakshara itself that consanguinity and not funeral oblations is the guiding principle governing the order of succession with Colebrooke's translation which for many years was accepted without question. Once it is conceded, as it must be, that this translation was erroneous, the authority of the cases which accepted it as accurate is materially diminished.

But our attention has been urgently directed by the learned Vakil for the respondents to certain passages in the case of Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (6). The actual point there decided was that as between agnates the great-grandson of the grandfather was to be preferred to the grandson of the great-grandfather. The nearer stock up to 3 generations from the common paternal ancestor had to be exhausted before the nearer descendants of a more remote stock of descendant could take. The decision depended upon the meaning of the word Putra as used by Vijnaneswara in the Mitakshara; and this was interpreted as including three generations in descent from the common ancestor. There is a passage, however, towards the end of their Lordships' judgment which, whilst recognising that the right of inheritance arises from Sapinda relationship or community of blood, points out that in determining propinquity amongst the Gotraja the preferential heir may be discovered by applying the test of the capacity to offer oblations, and a passage in the Viramitrodaya is referred to as supporting this proposition as well as an earlier ruling of the Board in the year 1870 in the case of Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (7). The application of this test in the case of near Gotraja Sapindas up to three generations in descent from a common ancestor is no doubt one which can be safely resorted to in the cases named, but it does not determine the vexed question of whether the inheritance follows the duty of offering oblations or the duty follows the inheritance. The whole question is discussed at length by Mr. Mayne in Chapter XVI of his treatise, where he comes to the conclusion that the Hindu Law of inheritance in its inception is founded on nearness of blood and not on the capacity to offer oblations, and that this is the governing principle regulating the rules of inheritance observed when the Mitakshara was compiled, whereas some three centuries later the effect of Brahminical influence resulted in a remodeling of the basic principle of inheritance in accordance with the religious doctrine as expounded by Jimuta Vihana and his followers. However this may be, it appears to me that when applied to the order of succession amongst Bhinna Gotra Sapindas the religious test fails at nearly every turn, and I am unable to accept the view that it was the intention of their Lordships in the cases last referred to to lay down a rule of universal application which should govern the order of succession in a class of cases not then under consideration. The case of Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prosad Tewari (8) decided by a Bench of this Court in 1916 undoubtedly took a contrary view and decided that superior efficacy of religious oblations should be applied in the case of Bandhus even to the extent of preferring a Matri Bandhu to the son of one of those named in the text as an Atma Bandhu and who, according to a previous decision of the Bombay High Court in Bai Vilji v. Prabhalakshmi (9), was himself an Atma Bandhu. Assuming that Rajender in that case was an Atma Bandhu, and there is a series of decisions in addition to the Bombay case above cited which support this view [Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama Ayyangar (10); Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11)], it is difficult to see on what ground the claim of a Matri Bandhu can be preferred to that of an Atma Bandhu in face of the express text of the Mitakshara to the contrary. The case, however, is decided on the hypothesis that none of the descendants of the named Atma Bandhus are themselves Atma Bandhus, and the reason given by the learned Chief Justice in that case for arriving at this conclusion is that if the descendants of an Atma Bandhu are entitled to succeed in preference to all the Pitri or Matri Bandhus expressly mentioned, it may easily happen that an obviously remote Sapinda may exclude a nearer Sapinda. I confess that it is with some hesitation that I venture to differ from the view here expressed by the learned Chief Justice for whose attainments and ability I entertain a profound respect, but I am unable to share in the difficulty which weighed with him and assisted to the conclusion to which he came. The number of heritable Bandhus is not indefinite but limited in any one line of descent. [See Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (4).] Within these limits those tracing through a nearer common ancestor may well be regarded as nearer in blood relationship to the propositus than others descended from a more remote ancestor though less removed from the common ancestor. In the present case the plaintiff is more remote from the common ancestor than Raghunandan, but he traces his descent through the father and mother of the propositus whereas Raghunandan traces through the maternal grandfather. This question was considered in Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11), where preference was given to the sister's son's son over the mother's brother's son, although the latter was 2 degrees only and the former 3 degrees removed from the common ancestor. Two main principles were relied upon and given effect to in that case, (1) that amongst Bandhus of the same class those ex parte paterna are preferred to those ex parte materna, (2) that the nearer line is preferred to the more remote.

The earlier case of Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (12) is also an authority for the first of the above propositions. In another case, Subramania Mudaliar v. Ranganathan Chettyar (13), the father's sister's son's son is preferred to the mother's brother on the same principle.

The claims of the present plaintiff would appear to be even stronger than those of the successful claimant in the case last cited if it is admitted, as I think it must be, that the intervention of a greater number of females makes no difference except in cases where other tests fail. It has been so decided in Madras [Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama Ayyangar (10), Tirumalachariar v. Andal Ammal (14)] and I see no reason to differ from the rule there followed. In Bombay also where women are permitted to inherit as Bandhus, the preferential claim of the father's line over that of the mother has been recognized to the extent of postponing the mother's full brother to the father's half sister [Saguna v. Sadashiv Pandu (15)]. The rule that the nearer line excludes the more remote is accepted by Sir Ernest Trevelyan (Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 401), subject to the rule that in each of the 3 classes of Bandhus preference is given to those related through the father over those connected through the mother. In laying down the order of succession, however, in the case of Atma Bandhus it is obvious that he does not exhaust the nearer line before bringing in the more remote. His reason appears to be that sons of daughters of the family (i. e., daughters who would have inherited if they had been sons) come first, then sons of daughters' sons and lastly sons of daughters' daughters. Subject to this the nearer line is preferred to the more remote. But he follows consistently what he regards as the dominant rule that in each of the 3 classes the Bandhus of the deceased connected with him through his father have preference over those connected through his mother. In this he is supported by Dr. Rajkumar Sarvadhikari and Dr. Jogendranath Bhattacharya. The authority of the former as an expounder of Hindu Law has been recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council on more than one occasion and the reputation of the latter is well known. The question for determination is, I feel, one of some doubt and difficulty, but I think the principles to be gathered from the text of the Mitakshara and the weight of authority on the subject favour the claim of the plaintiff and, in my opinion, the sister's daughter's son should be preferred to the maternal uncle.

MULLICK, J.—I am of opinion that the defendant must succeed. The term Bandhu is said to have been used for the first time in Hindu Law by Yajnavalkya. To him the term was synonymous with Bandhava and applied indiscriminately to relatives in general, both agnates and cognates, and even to friends. In some out of the 17 texts in which he uses the term, he applies it to the kinsmen on the mother's side reserving for other kinsmen related through a female the term "Yonisamandha." He was the first to prescribe obsequial offerings to maternal ancestors and their issue, and it would seem that his object in doing so was to find a reason for giving the heritable right to relations on the mother's side. In truth the concession was made in deference to the continuous disintegration of communistic life. Though economic causes had begun to operate long before Gautama and the sages compromised with individualism by adopting spiritual benefit as a condition of heirship, Yajnavalkya found a further advance necessary and brought widows, daughters and some others within the circle of heirs who were incapable of offering the funeral cake. Not so courageous was his predecessor Manu who, while bowing before the advancing wave and affirming the principle of affinity by blood relationship, seems still to have retained allegiance to the principle of spiritual benefit, rendering himself liable to the charge of indecision and inconsistency by such texts as "the funeral cake follows the family and the estate." "To three ancestors must water be given for three is the funeral cake ordained, but the fourth in descent is the giver of oblations to them and the fifth has no concern with the gift of funeral cakes." (Manu, IX-185, IX-187, IX-186.)

The efforts of the lawgivers, however, were powerless and compromises did not avail. Little use was it for Gautama to seek to stem the tide by ruling that "Those who are allied by the funeral cake should take the wealth of the deceased" or for Manu to temporize or for Yajnavalkya to extend the heritable right while still clinging to Gautama's rule. The fact remains that by the time of Vijnaneswara, that is within the next 900 years, the doctrine of spiritual benefit had lost further ground. But the vitality of Hindu institutions is proverbial and although that commentator in clear and unequivocal terms declared Sapinda relationship to be dependent on community of blood, nevertheless between the 11th and the 15th centuries spiritual benefit still continued to affect the preferential right. In my opinion this explains why Vijnaneswara did not insist upon the father's line being exhausted before any of the grandfather's line were admitted.

The position in the 16th century is further elucidated by the Viramitrodaya, which repeatedly contains passages to the effect that "comparative propinquity is evidenced by the amount of spiritual benefit conferred on the deceased proprietor and that spiritual benefit can be conferred by the presentation of Pindas in the Parvana Sradh held in honour of the deceased and of his ancestors." (Viramitrodaya III, 1-11; III, 5-1.) Again in book II, section 1, verse 23 of that work, Mitra Misir, the author, gives the following remarkable opinion: "Blood relations alone are entitled in the first instance to celebrate Parvana rights of the deceased and their competence to benefit the Bandhus is in proportion to the nearness of their deceased relative. If we know the one, we know the other. Where there are many claimants to the heritage among the Gotrajas and the like, then the fact of conferring spiritual benefits on the deceased merely settles the question of precedence among the heirs."

The next stage in the development of the theory of religious benefit is furnished by the Dayabhaga, which finally and definitely recognised it as a ground of preference in the case of both agnates and cognates. Whereas in the Mitakshara no cognate is allowed to succeed in preference to an agnate, however superior the offerings of the former may be in religious efficacy, the Dayabhaga adopted the more logical basis and applied the test equally to both. The result was that many cognates, who were excluded by the Mitakshara, took precedence under the Dayabhaga over more distant agnates. It would be wrong, however, to say that the Dayabhaga discarded the principle of propinquity by blood. Equally wrong would it be in my opinion to say that the Mitakshara took no account of the principle of religious merit. In my opinion both systems recognise propinquity of blood and religious efficacy. The only difference is that in the Dayabhaga religious merit arising from the celebration of the Parvana Sradh is accorded greater weight and that in the absence of religious merit accruing from Parvana rights, the ability to benefit the deceased by some other religious ceremonies is a sufficient foundation of a title to inherit. The Mitakshara, on the other hand, regards oblations presented by cognate kinsmen as secondary and conferring no claim against the whole body of agnates. The Dayabhaga, admitting that the oblations are secondary as compared with agnates of the same line, insists that Parvana Pindas conferred by cognates should prevail against agnates of a remoter line. The point of difference between the two systems depends upon the interpretation of the scriptures relating to the efficacy of oblations presented by agnates and cognates. It would be wrong, therefore, to say that the doctrine of spiritual efficacy was, as has been observed by one learned author, a segment of the Brahminic brain in Bengal and that in the Mitakshara it has no place. The true view appears to be that nearness of blood determines the heritable right, while the doctrine of spiritual efficacy determines the preferential right.

The position of Bandhus could not fail to remain unaffected by the vicissitudes of the doctrine of religious efficacy and we find, therefore, that while Yajnavalkya left the question of their heritable right undetermined in his list of heirs and while he made express mention only of the "maternal uncle and the rest" in regard to their right to succeed a trader dying abroad, Vijñaneswara was the first to extend the list by the inclusion of nine selected cognates.

The next development that followed was the addition of the daughter's son as a special heir and for nearly four centuries thereafter the commentators appear to have recognised only ten Bandhus.

Next Mitra Misser added three, namely, the maternal uncle of the deceased, of his father and of his mother.

Since then the number does not appear to have been added to for the next 300 years till the claims of the maternal uncle and of the sister's son came up for consideration in the case of Omrit Koomaree Dabee v. Luckhee Narain Chuckerbutty (1). In that case Mitter, J., held that the list of Bandhavas given by Vridha Satatappa was not exhaustive and that although a sister's son was according to their Lordships a Pitri Bandhu, he took precedence over other Bandhus on the ground of superior religious efficacy.

Following the principles enunciated by their Lordships it seems to me clear that we must look to a large expansion of the list of heritable Bandhus, but at the same time there does not seem to me to be any doubt as to how the present case should be decided.

Now the first point for consideration is, whether the plaintiff and Raghunandan have any heritable right at all. They are undoubtedly cognate Sapindas. For the purpose of marriage Sapinda relationship is prescribed by the Mitakshara to extend to seven degrees when relationship is claimed through the father and five degrees when claimed through the mother. There was some divergence of opinion between text-book writers as to whether these limitations applied also for the purpose of determining the heritable right and Professor Golap Chandra Sarkar was of opinion that Sapinda relationship for purposes of inheritance extended to seven degrees both on the father's and the mother's side. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have, however, now ruled that the limits applicable to marriage also apply to inheritance, Ramchandra Martanda Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (5).

Professor Golap Chandra Sarkar also doubted the correctness of the dictum of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (4) to the effect that in order to establish the heritable right Sapinda relationship must be mutual. On this point also their Lordships of the Privy Council in the above-mentioned case have pronounced in favour of the view of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court,

UMA SHANKAR PRASAD V. NAGESWARI KOERI.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council have not, however, yet pronounced any opinion on the point whether Sapinda relationship through cognates can be claimed through an ancestor more remote than the father's or mother's grandfather. Professor Raj Kumar Sarbadhikari in his Tagore Law Lectures answers this question in the negative, basing his conclusion on the following passage of the Mitakshara where Vijnaneswara quoting the text of Vridha Satatappa observes as follows. I give the translation made by West and Buhler, which is now accepted as more correct than that made by Colebrooke and which differs from the latter on the point whether the term Sapinda means connected by particles of the same body or connected by funeral oblations. The passage runs thus:—

"On failure of agnates, the cognates are heirs. The cognates are of three kinds, related to the person himself, to his father, or to his mother, as is declared by the following text. The sons of his own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister and the sons of his own maternal uncle must be considered as his own cognate kindred. The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt, and the sons of his father's paternal uncle must be deemed as his father's cognate kindred. The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt and the sons of his maternal uncle must be reckoned as his mother's cognate kindred. Here by reason of near affinity the cognate kindreds of the deceased himself are his successors in the first instance. On failure of them his father's cognate kindred, or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred. This must be the order of succession here intended.", Mitakshara (II, section 6.)

This indeed is the only other text besides the text of Yajnavalkya regarding the goods of a trader dying abroad in the whole of Hindu Law as at present known to us which is of any assistance in determining the limits of the heritable right of Bandhus. From this text Professor Sarbadhikari derives the following rules:

"I. A Bandhu is a cognate Sapinda within four degrees counting (1) from the deceased himself, in ascent or descent: (2) from any one of the four immediate ancestors of the deceased."

"II. The right of inheritance accrues to a Bandhu if the late owner and the person claiming the heritable right were related as Sapindas to each other, either directly through themselves or through their mothers or fathers.

"In other words, a heritable Bandhu is a cognate Sapinda within four degrees counting from—

"1. The deceased in ascent or descent.

"2. Deceased's paternal ancestor within four degrees.

"3. Deceased's maternal ancestor within four degrees.

"4. Deceased's father's maternal ancestor within four degrees.

"5. Deceased's mother's maternal ancestor within four degrees.

"N. B.—The word 'five' is to be substituted for 'four' in the case of father's Bandhus. If the deceased or his ancestor be related through father's mother, then five degrees instead of four should be counted in both directions. Thus grandson's daughter's grandson is related to the deceased (or his paternal ancestor) through father's mother.

"Rule of exclusion:—

"1. The cognate descendant of each of these classes is excluded from inheritance when (i) the deceased or (ii) the deceased's ancestor does not belong to—

"(a) His maternal grandfather's line.

"(b) His father's ditto.

"(c) His mother's ditto.

"2. The cognate ascendant of the deceased is excluded from inheritance when he does not belong to—

"(a) The deceased's maternal grandfather's line.

"(b) The deceased's father's ditto.

"(c) The deceased's mother's ditto."

The learned Professor proceeding upon these rules classifies Atma Bandhus into Atma Bandhus ex parte paterna, namely, the sons of the daughters of the family, sons of the daughters' sons of the family, sons of the daughters' daughters of the family; next into Atma Bandhus ex parte materna beginning from mother's father; next into

UMA SHANKAR PRASAD V. NAGESWARI KERI.

Atma Bandhus ex parte paterna to whom the deceased was 'Atma Bandhu ex parte paterna; next into Atma Bandhus ex parte materna to whom the deceased was Atma Bandhu ex parte materna; next into Atma Bandhus ex parte paterna to whom the deceased was Pitri Bandhu; and finally into Atma Bandhus ex parte materna to whom the deceased was Matri Bandhu. He adopts the same method for Pitri Bandhus and Matri Bandhus.

Now it is to be observed that the learned Professor's two rules of exclusion are inconsistent with the text which includes within the circle of Bandhu heirs all who claiming through the mother are within five degrees of the common ancestor. Mr. Mayne in his work on Hindu Law would seem to partially accept Professor Sarbadhikari's view, for he does not seem to give the heritable right to the heirs of the maternal grandfather's grandfather though he gives him the 27th place in his chart. In the case of Ramchandra Martand Walker v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (5) to which I have referred above, Mr. Lowndes in his address to their Lordships of the Privy Council noticed this inconsistency between the text on marriage and the rule adopted by Professor Sarbadhikari, but it became unnecessary for their Lordships to decide the point. Following Professor Sarbadhikari, Professor Jogendra Nath Bhattacharya and Professor Trevelyan would seem to base their conclusion on that part of Vridha Satatappa's text which appears to limit Pitri and Matri Bandhavas to those descended from the mother's or father's grandfather. This conclusion might perhaps be justified if, as was thought by Mitter, J., in Omrit Kumaree's case (1), the term Bandhavas in Satatappa's text were synonymous with Bandhava, the plural of Bandhu; but Professor Jogendra Nath Bhattacharya has clearly demonstrated that this is not the case and that Bandhavas is not the plural of Bandhu and signifies what is known among Hindus as cognate brother or first cousin. Speaking with the greatest respect I think this is the correct rendering of the term and that Professor Sarbadhikari's rules of exclusion are not warranted by the text. I think also that I am supported in this view by Professors Golap Chandra Sarkar and Jogendra Nath Ghose, whose works on Hindu Law have often been referred to by their Lordships of the Privy Council.

In my opinion Satatappa in enumerating the nine Atma, Pitri and Matri Bandhavas did not intend to limit heritable right to the descendants of the mother's and father's grandfather within five degrees. Nor is there anything to show that Vijnaneswara was of a different view to that which I have ventured to take.

If this is the correct interpretation of Satatappa's text, then it follows that the classification given in the text into Atma, Pitri and Matri Bandhus applies only to the nine Bandhavas specially enumerated therein. All other Bandhus are subject to one and only one limitation, namely, that given in the text on marriage.

In support of the view I take, it is to be noticed that neither Professor Sarbadhikari, nor Professor Bhattacharya, nor Mr. Mayne are agreed as to the classes within which certain heirs should be grouped. Indeed it has been said that Professor Sarbadhikari has been guilty of reading into the text words which do not occur therein, so as to give the status of Atma Bandhus to persons who would otherwise be classed as Pitri Bandhus.

Similarly it is to be noticed that their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in Omrit Koomaree's case (1) have classed a sister's son as a Pitri Bandhu, though the learned Vakil for the plaintiff before us relying on Professor Sarbadhikari's view strenuously contends that he is an Atma Bandhu.

In this state of doubt and uncertainty it would, in my opinion, be unsafe to insist on the classification within the group of Atma, Pitri and Matri Bandhu of heirs other than the nine specifically enumerated in the text. In my opinion the son of one of these nine is not entitled to claim membership in the class to which his father belongs and I think the doubt thrown out by Chamier, C. J., in Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tewari (8), which is binding on this Court till overruled, was well grounded. In that case the learned Judges gave effect to their doubt by preferring one who would be a Matri Bandhu according to Professor Sarbadhikari's classification to one who would be a Pitri Bandhu, because he was nearer in degree counting from the common ancestors in their respective lines, and also on the ground of religious merit.

It follows from the above view that when there is a contest between Bandhus other than the nine Bandhavas or between one of the former and one of the latter, the principle of numerical propinquity alone will determine the heritable right, supplemented in case of doubt by the rule of religious benefit and such other rules derived from the succession of agnates as may be appropriate.

Let us next consider what is the position of the claimants in the case now before us.

Both parties seem to be agreed that the plaintiff and Raghunandan are Atma Bandhus. If Atma Bandhu is the same thing as Atma Bandhava and if Bandhava has not the special meaning of cousin, brother or first cousin, then if a maternal grandfather's son's son is an Atma Bandhu in the sense of one specially near to the propositus, it would be reasonable to class the grandfather's son also as an Atma Bandhu. But is the sister's daughter's son also an Atma Bandhu? I think not, although he has been classed as such by Professor Sarbadhikari. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court observed in Omrit Koomaree's case (1) that the sister's son was both an Atma and Pitri Bandhu, but they seem to have classed him as a Pitri Bandhu on the ground that he was nearer in degree to the father of the propositus than to the propositus.

But as I have already observed, the Mitakshara does not warrant the inference that all Bandhus must be classified into the three classes assigned to the nine enumerated Bandhavas and I respectfully venture to differ from those decisions of the Madras Court which hold that every descendant of an Atma Bandhu within the requisite limits is entitled to claim the status of his ancestor.

The difficulty in following out this classification logically in the case of the descendants of the daughters of the family compelled Professor Sarbadhikari to alter the text to an extent which has been pronounced unwarrantable by other text-book writers. I think, therefore, that Bandhus other than the nine Bandhavas named in the text cannot appropriately be placed in the three groups reserved for the latter.

Assuming, however, that the three classes are exhaustive on the point of classification and that there can be no heritable right without membership within one of these three classes, then I think Raghunandan being an Atma Bandhu and the plaintiff Pitri Bandhu, the former is entitled to preference.

Let us assume next that both are Atma Bandhus as has been held by Professor Sarbadhikari.

If the principle of nearness by particles of the body is applied, how is the calculation to be made? We have no means of ascertaining how much the plaintiff has in common physiologically with the deceased as compared with the maternal uncle. We can only estimate through the common ancestor through whom they respectively claim and if that test is applied, then obviously the maternal uncle and the deceased have greater community of blood than the plaintiff and the deceased.

Let us take next the mode of counting sanctioned by the Hindu Law. The Indian Succession Act, following the principle of the civil law, prescribes that counting is to be made from the propositus upwards to a common ancestor, each ancestor representing one degree, and then downwards till the claimant is reached. The Mitakshara prescribes that counting is to be made from the common ancestor, from whom the branch divides beginning with such common ancestor as the first degree. Adopting this mode of counting Raghunandan is two degrees removed while the plaintiff is four degrees removed. In the absence of any detailed order of succession for cognate, Sapindas, I think Raghunandan is entitled to priority.

But then it is said that the rule of the Mitakshara is that the nearer line excludes the more remote and, therefore, the line of the father of which the plaintiff is a member must be exhausted before the line of the maternal grandfather can come in. Now this rule is not based upon any text. It is derived from the order of succession as given in the Mitakshara relating to certain named agnates, but even in that connection the rule is not of general and universal application. In the earlier decisions in Upper India the limit was placed on the authority of Colebrooke at the seventh lineal descendant, according to later decisions, in Madras [it was fixed at the second degree, while their Lordships of the Privy Council have now definitely held that the limit of collateral descent is three degrees in each line. Thus the grandson's grandson, though a lineal and nearer descendant, is excluded by descendants within three degrees in the lines of the father and the grandfather. The Mitakshara in this respect is not singular, for we find that in other systems too the law has recognised the propriety of preferring some collaterals to lineal descendants of the fourth and the fifth degree. If, therefore, the rule is limited in application with regard to agnates, I see no reason why it should be applied without restraint and restriction in the case of cognates. Upon the admitted mode of counting, a maternal uncle is nearer in degree than a father's daughter's daughter's son and I cannot find any equity in defeating his rights by a resort to analogy and by the arbitrary extension of a rule applicable to another class.

I am unable, therefore, to exclude Raghu-nandan on the ground that he claims descent through a more distant line than the plaintiff. If the principle is to apply at all, it must apply to cases where the respective candidates are numerically of the same degree. In such an event this test as well as other tests may be taken into account for the purpose of determining the preferential right.

Next it is said that the Mitakshara favours the male against the female heir, and, therefore, the plaintiff, who is connected through the father, is preferable to Raghu-nandan who is connected through the mother. Here again the rule is derived not from an express text in the Mitakshara but from the order of succession given by the sages as regards agnates. But even among the latter the preference for males is not rigorously enforced and female relatives, such as a mother, daughter, and sister and a male relative descended through a female, namely, the daughter's son, have been accorded high places within the circle of agnatic heirs, the last named being even preferred to one nearer in degree on the male side, namely, the father's son. Here again the question arises whether the preference for males shown by the Hindu Law in the case of agnates generally, and in particular in Satatappa's text as regards Bandhavas, is to be applied regardless of numerical nearness in degree. It may be noticed that Satatappa and Vijnaneswara seem to limit the preference to cases where the degree of relationship is equal, as for instance when they give precedence to Pitri Bandhavas over Matri Bandhavas. Even in Madras where their Lordships of the High Court have applied the rules of agnatic succession to the case of Bandhus more freely than other Courts in favour of claimants who would be otherwise excluded, the decisions have not been uniform and we find that in spite of the superiority ascribed by analogy to males a mother's sister's son has been preferred to a mother's brother's son.

I think, therefore, that the correct rule in regard to these analogies has been laid down by Professor Golap Chandra Sarkar as follows:—

(1) The nearer in degree on either side must be preferred to one more remote.

(2) Of those equal in degree the one related on the father's side is to be preferred to the one related on the mother's side.

(3) When the side is the same, the circumstance of one being related through a male and another through a female makes no difference.

Applying these rules I do not consider that the fact of plaintiff's being connected through a nearer branch or through a male can operate in his favour.

On the other hand if the latter fact operates in this case at all, then the circumstance that he claims through two females must also be taken into account as a counterpoise. At the same time it must in fairness be remembered in this connection that although their Lordships of the Madras High Court in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (16) preferred the mother's sister's son to the mother's brother's son, their Lordships of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Charan Lal v.

Rahim Bakhsh (17) were of a contrary opinion, holding that the mother's sister's son being removed by two females the principle of preference in favour of males rendered the mother's brother's son nearer in affinity.

Being, however, clearly of opinion that Raghunandan is nearer in affinity than the plaintiff from every point of view, I do not think the interposition of two females affects the present case.

For the same reason the question of spiritual benefit also does not arise. In this respect the position, as I have already said, appears to be this, that while the Dayabhaga recognizes the principle of affinity as well as the principle of spiritual benefit for the purpose of creating the heritable right and admits into the circle of heirs persons by reason of their capacity to confer spiritual benefit alone, the Mitakshara makes affinity the sole test of the heritable right, leaving the preferential right to be regulated by the doctrine of spiritual benefit. This position has been repeatedly affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in a long line of decisions beginning from Gridhari Lall Roy v. Bengal Government (2) and ending with Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (6), and it could not have been more emphatically recognised by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court than it was in Gunesh Chunder Roy v. Nil Kamul Roy (18), where a father's daughter's son was preferred to a mother's sister's son on the ground of spiritual benefit. Applying this principle to the case under consideration, it is immaterial whether the plaintiff and Raghunandan are both ordinary Bandhus or both Atma Bandhus; in either event Raghunandan is clearly entitled to preference because he can offer spiritual benefit upon the maternal grandfather of the propositus, while the plaintiff can confer no spiritual benefit upon the propositus of any kind whatsoever.

In the various Courts in India the strongest resistance to the application of the doctrine of spiritual benefit has perhaps come from their Lordships of the Madras High Court and particular reliance has been placed by the plaintiff on Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11), where a maternal uncle was defeated by a sister's son's son on the ground that the nearer line must exclude the more remote, and also on the ground that an Atma Bandhu ex parte paterna excludes an Atma Bandhu ex parte materna. Their Lordships declined to consider the principle of religious efficacy at all but with great respect, I venture to say that this view is not in accordance with that of other Judges of the same Court and is certainly in direct conflict with the latest pronouncement of the Privy Council.

As an illustration of this divergence of opinion I need only cite the case of Muttusami v. Muthukumarasami (19), where their Lordships of the Madras High Court decided in favour of the maternal uncle of the half blood against the son of the father's paternal aunt and laid down the rule that as between Bandhus of the same class the spiritual benefit conferred upon the propositus is, as stated in the Viramitrodaya, a ground of preference. That decision was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (20) and no exception was taken to the above statement of the law. The unsatisfactory condition produced by subsequent conflicting decisions has been somewhat sharply commented upon in a recent judgment by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in Subramania Mudaliyar v. Ranganathan Chettyar (13). His Lordship there, although approving of the claim of the father's sister's son as against a maternal uncle on the ground that the former is an Atma Bandhu ex parte paterna, characterizes Satatappa's text as illogical, incomplete and inconsistent, but feels himself bound to accept the law as settled by the Courts even though based on less authoritative treatises than the ancient authoritative Shastras. He points out that a mother's sister's son need not necessarily be always a Bhinna Gotra Sapinda, as sometimes the mother of the propositus and her sister might marry husbands of the same Gotra. He is nevertheless of opinion that the rule as to religious benefit laid down in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (19) is not supported by the law and custom within the Presidency of Madras, where the question of spiritual benefit or of death pollution or of the right of performance of obsequial ceremonies does not operate in determining the preferential right. He considers that Mr. Mayne's classification is inaccurate and misleading as he gives the maternal uncle the 9th place and the maternal grandfather the 17th place, and does not carry the class of Bandhus to the fifth degree. He agrees with the decision of Aikman, J., sitting as a single Judge in Ram Bharos v. Ram Parshad (21), where preference is given to a father's brother's daughter's daughter's son as against a mother's brother's son on the ground that the former is an Atma Bandhu ex parte paterna, but he feels that this position is really contrary to the Hindu Shastras and that legislation should intervene to alter the current of judicial decisions. The learned Judge's findings are admittedly limited to the Madras Presidency where the Smriti Chandrika and other later commentaries have acquired special predominance, but his observations are of general application in so far as they indicate the possibility of a different mode of interpretation of the texts.

So far as concerns the Province to which the parties before us belong and the territories which are now subject to the authority of the High Court at Patna, I am quite satisfied that the test of religious and spiritual benefit can and should be applied to determine the preferential right, that is to say, where the principle of affinity by blood relationship does not clearly indicate with which claimant the preference lies.

The result is that I would answer the reference in favour of the defendant.

This result is in conflict with the lists prepared by Professors Sarbadhikari and Bhattacharya, while Mr. Mayne, who gives precedence to the sister's son as against the maternal uncle, does not consider at all the claim of a sister's daughter's son.

On the other hand Professors Golap Chandra Sarkar and Jogendra Nath Ghose would seem to support the claim of the maternal uncle on the rule of nearness laid down by them.

In my opinion as the texts do not expressly declare the order of priority between the rival claimants we are entitled to apply the principles, of affinity and spiritual benefit, both of which have been pronounced by sages and commentators to be of universal application and here operate to establish Raghunandan's claim. Other principles, inferred from the order of succession for agnates who have been specially mentioned by name in the texts, cannot be invoked in this case as the claimants are not numerically of the same degree of nearness.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The question for determination is whether Uma Shanker or Raghunandan is the preferential heir of one Chaman Lal Upadhaya. Uma Shanker is the sister's daughter's son of Chaman Lal. Raghunandan is the mother's brother, or maternal uncle of Chaman Lal. The competition, therefore, is between a maternal uncle and a sister's daughter's son. The former bases his claim for preference over the latter on the following grounds :—

(1). That he is nearer in degree to the propositus than the sister's daughter's son inasmuch as he is 4 degrees removed from the propositus and 2 degrees from the common ancestor of the propositus (the maternal grandfather) and himself, whereas the sister's daughter's son is 5 degrees removed from the propositus and 4 degrees from the common ancestor of the propositus (the father) and himself.

(2). That the maternal uncle offers Pindas or funeral oblations to two ancestors of the propositus, namely, the maternal grandfather and the great-grandfather, to whom also the propositus offers Pindas, whereas the sister's daughter's son offers no Pinda to any of the ancestors of the propositus, and thus the maternal uncle confers spiritual benefit to the propositus, whereas the sister's daughter's son confers none.

(3). That the maternal uncle is related to the propositus through one female only, namely, the propositus's mother, whereas the sister's daughter's son is related to him through two females, namely, the sister and the daughter.

(4). That the texts of the Mitakshara and Viramitrodaya give to the maternal uncle a high position among heirs. Reference has been made to the Mitakshara, Chapter II, section 6, clause 1, where the maternal uncle's son is enumerated as an Atma Bandhu, to another part of the Mitakshara (page 322, 3rd Edition, 1829) where he has been expressly mentioned as a principal heir of a trader dying abroad, to Asharkanda, Chapter I, verse 52, where the maternal uncle has been mentioned as a prominent Sapinda, and to Viramitrodaya, Chapter III, part VII, section V, where the maternal uncle has been mentioned as an heir superior to the three classes of Bandhus. Sister's daughter's son or any of his ancestors, sister or sister's daughter, is not mentioned anywhere.

The above facts are not disputed, but it is contended that the sister's daughter's son should be preferred to the maternal uncle on the following grounds:—

(1). That he is related to the propositus through his father, whereas the maternal uncle is related to the propositus through his mother; and

(2). That he traces his descent through a nearer ancestor of the propositus, namely, his father, whereas the maternal uncle traces his descent through a remoter ancestor, namely, the maternal grandfather of the propositus.

The parties are governed by the Benares school of the Hindu Law. The remoter sources of the Hindu Law are the Institutes of Manu and of Yajnavalkya and other Rishis, who gave different Smritis. These ancient texts are common to all the schools. The authority of a commentator was received in one and rejected in another part of India. Hence schools with conflicting doctrines arose. The Mitakshara, which is a commentary on the Institutes of Yajnavalkya by Vijnaneswara Bhutta, is universally accepted by all the schools except that of Bengal where also it is received as of high authority, yielding only to Dayabhaga in those parts where they differ. In like manner there are glosses and commentaries upon the Mitakshara, which are received by some of the schools that acknowledge the supreme authority of that treatise but are not received by all [Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Rama- linga Sathupathy (22)].

Smriti Chandrika by Deonand Bhutta and Subodhani by Visheshwar Bhutta are generally followed in Southern India (Madras Presidency) and Vivahar Mayukha by Nil Kantha Bhutta in Western India (Bombay Presidency). They differ in essential rules of law from those followed in the Benares school [Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh (6)].

In the Benares school, which is said by their Lordships in Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (7) to be the most orthodox of the different schools, Viramitrodaya by Mitter Misser is followed concurrently with the Mitakshara [Omrit Koomaree Dabee v. Luckhee Narain Chuckerbutty (1.)]. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee as well as all the Courts in India from the earliest times up to the present moment have recognized Viramitrodaya as an authoritative commentary on the Mitakshara and as governing the Benares school [vide Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (22), Gridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (2), Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (7), Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Oasibai (3), Buddha Singh v. Sarafraz Kunwar (25), Buddha Singh v. Laltu Singh (26), Lallubhai v. Manukvarbai (27) and Mohandas v. Krishnabai (28)].

In Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy (22) their Lordships point out that in administering Hindu Law, the duty is, not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular school which governs the district with which he has to deal, and has there been sanctioned by usage. This has been emphasised in Bhyak Ram Singh v. Bhyak Ugur Singh (7) and recently in Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (5) in the following words:—"Questions arising under the Hindu Law cannot be determined by abstract reasoning or analogies borrowed from other systems of law, but must depend for their decision on the rules and doctrines enunciated by its own lawgivers, and recognised expounders."

UMA SHANKAR PRASAD V. NAGESWAR KOERI:

The question whether a maternal uncle or a sister's daughter's son will have a preferential right to succeed to the properties of the propositus will, therefore, be determined by the rules laid down in the Mitakshara by Vijnaneswara and in Vira-mitrodaya by Mitter Missir.

The text of Manu upon which all the rules of inheritance in the Hindu Law are founded consists of two Slokas 186 and 187, Chapter IX—* * * * *

Translation:—186. "Let a man do the water rite and offer oblations to his three ancestors (i. e., father, grandfather and great-grandfather); no Sapinda relationship exists between the offerer of such oblations and his fifth ancestor (i. e., great-great-grandfather)."

187. "Of the Sapinda relations one nearest to the deceased shall inherit the property (in exclusion of one more remote); in the absence of one's Sapindas one's Sakulyas shall inherit his property, and in the absence of a Sakulya his preceptor, and in the absence of a preceptor his disciple (shall inherit his property)."

It is clear from the above that Manu, whose antiquity is not unknown, prescribed oblations to the three ancestors and held that no Sapinda relationship exists between the offerer and the fifth ancestor—great-great-grandfather, the offerer being the 4th. Manu does not mention of any oblation to the maternal ancestors and does not expressly mention Bandhus among the heirs. As held by their Lordships in Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (5), Yajnyavalkya, who lived in the 2nd century of the Christian era, was the first to introduce Bandhus or distant kinsmen related to the deceased through females, as heirs and he was also the first to mention the offering of a cake to maternal ancestors—* * * [Translation:—Thus (he should give rice balls) even to the manes on the maternal side (Chapter I, section 10, Sloka 242, Yajnyavalkya, Acharkanda), (Mandalik, page 190)]. Consequently it became necessary to allow those who could offer Pindas to inherit and this let the Bandhus in. The cake offered to maternal ancestors was offered to 3 ascendants of the mother and no lapa was offered to higher ascendants and no water offerings. So the right of inheritance was confined to 5 degrees, counting the offerer, which is the exact limit allowed to persons claiming relations through mother.

By the time that Vijnaneswara flourished in the 11th or the 12th century, the right of inheritance came to depend upon blood connections and not upon the right to offer funeral oblations. But there can be no doubt that the latter had still great influence upon the right of inheritance and the two were still regarded as going together.

In verse 135, Yajnyavalkya has enumerated the heirs of a sonless man and in verse 136 has said that on failure of the first among those enumerated, the next in order is the heir of the deceased and that this rule extends to all persons and classes. Bandhus have been mentioned to succeed after the Gotrajas or gentiles.

The Mitakshara, commenting upon the aforesaid verses, has defined Gotrajas to mean Sapindas and Samanodakas and has given the rules and the order of their succession in Chapter II, section 5. In clause 3, section 5, it says that by the word 'Bandhu' must be understood a Sapinda relation belonging to a different Gotra or family—(connected with the propositus through females) * * * * *

In Mitakshara, section 6, Chapter II, the following rules have been laid down regarding the succession of Bandhus:—

Clause 1.—"On failure of Gotrajas or gentiles the Bandhus are heirs. The Bandhus are of three kinds—the Bandhus of the man himself, the Bandhus of the father and the Bandhus of the mother, as is declared by the following text:—The sons of his own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister, and the sons of his own maternal uncle must be considered as his own Bandhus.

"The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal aunt and the sons of his father's maternal uncle must be deemed to be his father's Bandhus. The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt and the sons of his mother's maternal uncle must be regarded as his mother's cognates kindred."

Clause 2.—"Here by reason of nearness the cognate kindred of the deceased himself are his successors in the first instance; on failure of them his father's cognate kindred, or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred. This must be understood to be the order of succession here indicated."

Viramitrodaya, Chapter III, part VII, section 5, quoting the above passages from the Mitakshara, adds the following:—

"In the text of Manu, namely,—'In their default, a Sakulya, or the preceptor, or a pupil (becomes heir)',— the term Sakulya includes the Sagotras (Sapindas) and Samanodakas, the maternal uncle and the like, and the three classes of cognates. Also in the text of Yogiswara the term 'cognate' or Bandhu comprises also the maternal uncle. Otherwise the exclusion of the maternal uncle and the like would be the result. And it would be extremely improper that their sons are heirs, but they themselves though nearer are not heirs" [quoted in Gridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (2), Cmrit Koomaree Dabee v. Luckhee Narain Chuckerbutty (1)].

Viramitrodaya, therefore, recognised that the above quoted text of the Mitakshara is not an exhaustive enumeration of all the Bandhus who are capable of inheriting, but is only an illustration of the proposition that there are three kinds of Bandhus, as is held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (2). This is now a settled proposition of Hindu Law.

In addition to the 9 persons mentioned in the Mitakshara, many other persons have been let in as heritable Bandhus and their place in the order of succession has to be determined.

According to the definition of Bandhu as Bhinna Gotra Sapinda given in the Mitakshara, it is obvious that a heritable Bandhu must be a Sapinda of the propositus, and according to the text of Manu (Chapter IX, section 187)—"The property of a near Sapinda shall be that of a near Sapinda," the Sapinda relationship must be mutual. Among agnates the Sapinda relationship is always mutual but amongst cognates it is not in a few cases. In order, therefore, to determine whether any persons are heritable Bandhus, it is necessary to see whether they are Sapindas to each other—Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Venayak Venkatesh Kothekar (5).

Chapter II, section 6, clause 2, no doubt clearly lays down the order of priority among Bandhus of each of the three classes. But no special rule has been laid down by the Mitakshara, or Sanskrit text writers and commentators as to the order in which the heritable Bandhus of each class should take preference amongst themselves, as pointed out in Ram Charan Lal v. Rakim Bakhsh (17) and Gridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (2).

According to the Mitakshara the rule given for the preference of Atma Bandhus to those of Pitri Bandhus and so on is said to be "by reason of nearness;" (Chapter II, verse 6, clause 2). The Sanskrit words used are * * * * * literally meaning "by reason of nearness or proximity" (vide Monier William's Sanskrit English Dictionary). The reason "of nearness" assigned by the Mitakshara for the preference of one class of Bandhus to the other class is in accordance with the text of Manu itself "to the nearest Sapinda the inheritance belongs." This, therefore, is the only rule prescribed by Manu and the Mitakshara for determining the claims of rival Bandhus—the nearest of the Bhinna Gotra Sapindas or Bandhus will exclude the others.

The question then is now to determine the nearness or proximity among the Bhinna Gotra Sapindas of a propositus.

Manu in Chapter III, verse 5, recommends for marriage a girl not related to one's mother by the tie of Sapinda relationship nor to one's father as Sagotra and has limited the Sapinda relationship to seven degrees on the paternal side, Chapter V, Sloka 60. Yajnavalkya in Chapter I, verse 52 (Acharkunda), says, "a Sapinda should not be married." Commenting upon this verse Vijnaneswara in Mitakshara defined a Sapinda relationship and declared that definition to apply to the word 'Sapinda' used elsewhere in the Mitakshara, namely, in Chapters on Sradha and Inheritance.

Verse 53, Chapter I, runs as follows:—

"He should marry a girl who is a non-Sapinda (with himself). She is called his Sapinda who has particles of the body (of some ancestor, etc.) in common (with him). Non Sapinda means not his Sapinda. Such a one he should marry. Sapinda relationship arises between two people through their being connected by particles of one body. * * * *

Thus the son stands in Sapinda relationship to his father because of particles of his father's body having entered (his). In like (manner stands the grandson in Sapinda relationship) to his paternal grandfather and the rest, because through his father, particles of his grandfather's body have entered into (his own). Just so is (the son) a Sapinda relation of his mother, because particles of the mother's body have entered into (his). Likewise (the grandson stands in Sapinda relationship) to his maternal grandfather and the rest through his mother. So also is (the nephew) a Sapinda relation of his maternal aunts and uncles and the rest, because particles of the same body, the paternal grandfather, have entered into (his) and (theirs). Likewise does he stand in Sapinda relationship with paternal uncles and aunts and the rest, so also the wife and the husband are Sapinda relations to each other, because they beget one body. Likewise brothers' wives are in Sapinda relationship to each other. They produce one body, the son, with those (severally) who have sprung from one body (that is, because they bring forth sons by their union with the offspring of one person and thus their husbands' father is the common bond which connects them). Therefore, one ought to know that whenever the word Sapinda is used there exists (between the persons to whom it is applied) a connection with one body either immediately or by descent." The Sapinda relationship is limited in verse 53 as follows:—

"After the fifth ancestor on the mother's side," and "after the seventh on the father's side"—"on the mother's side in the mother's line after the fifth, on the father's side in the father's line after the 7th (ancestor) the Sapinda relationship ceases; these latter two words must be understood, and, therefore, the word Sapinda, which on account of its etymological import (connected by having in common) particles (of the body) would apply to all men, is restricted in its signification, just as the word Pankaja (which etymologically means growing in the mud, and, therefore, would apply to all plants growing in the mud) designates the lotus only, and the like: and thus the 6th descendant beginning with the son and one's self counted as the 7th in each case are Sapinda relations. In the case of a division of a line also the enumeration should be until the 7th degree commencing from whence the direction of the line changes. This rule should be applied in every case."

The above translation is to be found in the Digest of Hindu Law of West and Buhler, page 120, and also in the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Lallubhai v. Mankuwarbai (27) and in Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (3) and recently in the case of Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kotheekar (5). The rest of the verse 53 runs as follows:—

* * * * *

It has thus been translated by Pandit Rajkumar Sarvadhikari, pages 604 and 605 (Tagore Law Lectures, 1880):—"A girl is said to be related to a given person through his mother if in reckoning upwards from the mother to the common stock (e.g., the maternal grandfather, the great-grandfather and the rest), she is found to stand in the 5th degree of the kindred in the mother's line. Similarly, a girl is said to be related to a given person in the 7th degree through his father if in reckoning upwards from the father to the common stock (e.g., the paternal grandfather and the rest) she is found to stand in the 7th degree of kindred to the common ancestor in the father's line."

In Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kotheekar (5) their Lordships held that the limitation prescribed in verse 53 regarding Sapindas connected through females, applies only to Bhinna Gotra Sapindas and that the right of a Bhinna Gotra Sapinda or a Bandhu ceases with the 5th degree from the propositus not merely for the purpose of marriage but generally, and, therefore, for the purposes of inheritance also.

UMA SHANKAR PRASAD V. NAGESWARI KOERI.

The limits of Sapinda relationship prescribed by Manu in Chapter V, Sloka 60, and those prescribed by Yajnavalkya and Mitakshara on marriage apply to Sradha, impurity and inheritance (vide Mitakshara, Chapter I, verse 253, Chapter II, verses 135 to 137, and Chapter III, verse 18).

In Soorendronath Roy v. Musammat Heerz-monee (29) their Lordships observe: "Still there is in the Hindu Law so close a connection between their religion and their succession to property that the preferable right to perform the Sradha is commonly viewed as governing also the question of the preferable right to succession of property and as a general rule they would be expected to be found in union." According to Manu the near Sapinda is enjoined to perform the funeral rights and he is also entitled to inherit the property of the deceased.

For the purpose of inheritance and Sradha, the Mitakshara, therefore, in the aforesaid verses 52 and 53, Chapter I, lays down the rule for ascertaining in what degree of kindred a Bandhu or Sapinda belonging to a different Gotra stands to the deceased both in the direct line as well as when the line or lineage diverges. This rule of counting the number of degrees that a person is removed from the propositus is for the purpose of determining his nearness or propinquity with the propositus, and is, therefore, also the rule for the order of preference among several Bandhus for the purposes of inheritance and Sradha. Referring to the aforesaid verses 52 and 53 the learned Judges of the Sadr Dewani Adaulat, Agra, in their judgment quoted in Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (7), hold: "We have thus furnished to us a rule for computing the order of succession in regard not only to Sapindas but to Samanodakas." That was a case of Gotrajas, but the above remarks would apply to the case of Bandhus as well.

It must, therefore, be held the Mitakshara in the said verse has laid down the rule that the nearest in the degree ascertained by the mode of calculation indicated there exclude those more remote. The mode of calculating in what degree a person stands to the pro-positus has been clearly laid down in the said verse both when the line is direct as well as when the lineage diverges. For the latter it is said:—"Should the line diverge the enumeration should be made until the 5th degree commencing from whence the line varies. This should be applied in every case," that is, among collateral Bandhus the degrees of propinquity are counted from the ancestor from whence the line diverges (vide Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 712 and illustration, and Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (5), where the collateral Bandhus, per genealogy given therein, beyond 5 degrees from the propositus were held not to be heritable). According to Sarvadhikari's Tagore Law Lectures, 1880, pages 633, 635, the degree in which a Bandhu stands to the deceased is ascertained by counting from the deceased himself to the Bandhu in question allowing a degree for each person, and among collaterals the counting commences from the common ancestor from whence the line diverges. At page 728, the same author says: "Within a well-defined range the degrees of Sapinda relationship are allowed to be heritable and the distance from the common ancestor is the test of propinquity."

This is also the method of determining nearness or propinquity adopted in the Indian Succession Act, Part III, section 22, where it is laid down that—"for the purpose of ascertaining in what degree any collateral relative stands to a person deceased, it is proper to reckon upwards from the person deceased to the common stock and then downwards to the collateral relative allowing a degree for each person both ascending and descending."

The table annexed to that section illustrates the method of determining the nearness of degree. The nearest in degree of kindred to the propositus thus ascertained excludes remoter degrees: (vide section 44).

Adopting the method of computation laid down in the Mitakshara, the sister's daughter's son is 5 degrees removed from the propositus, whereas the maternal uncle is only 4 degrees removed from the propositus. Again the former is 4th in descent from the common ancestor of himself and the propositus, whereas the latter is only 2nd in descent from the common ancestor of himself and the propositus. According to the English method of counting (vide Table to the Succession Act, section 22, mutatis mutandis) the former is 4 degrees removed and the latter 3 degrees removed from the propositus. Thus if the nearness or propinquity of Sapinda relationship depended upon the number of degrees removed either from the propositus or the common ancestor, there can hardly be any doubt that the maternal uncle is nearer than the sister's daughter's son, whatever mode of counting be adopted. In Sradha also where preference is given to the Sapindas on the ground of nearness, the method of determining the nearness is by counting the number of degrees removed from the common ancestor of the propositus. There is no reason, therefore, why this should not be the mode for determining the nearness or propinquity for the purpose of succession, particularly where there is no other rule mentioned expressly in the text or in the commentaries.

Brabhaspati—"Where there are many jnati, Sākulyas and Bandhavas, among them whoever is the nearest he shall take the property of the childless" [quoted in Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (27) and also in Ram Charan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (17)]. This is strictly in accordance with the text of Mann "to the nearest Sapinda the inheritance shall belong," and the Mitakshara, verses 52 and 53, Chapter I, as well as the Chapter on Bandhu where the only test is that of nearness. This again is the test applied in the Indian Succession Act.

Sarvadhikari has clearly laid down at page 728 that among the heritable Bandhus "the distance from the common ancestor is the test of propinquity;" and at page 711 that the "nearer excludes the more remote."

So does Golap Chandra Sastri in his Hindu Law, 4th Edition, at page 294 lay down—"the nearer in degree on whichever side is to be preferred to one more remote", as the foremost principle for determining the rival claims of Bandhus. Both of them have laid down other rules for selection among those equal in degree.

It is thus clear that the first and the foremost rule of preference among several claimants is that the nearest in degree, ascertained by the simple method of counting given in the Mitakshara, exclude those more remote and when the degree is equal only then other considerations might be resorted to for the purpose of preference among the other rival claimants.

In the present case the maternal uncle and the sister's daughter's son are not equal in degree. The former is nearer in degree than the latter and must on this ground alone be preferred. There is, therefore, no occasion for applying any other test to the present case and it would have been unnecessary to discuss the other tests for determining the preferential claims of Bandhus but for the great stress laid on them at the Bar during the hearing of this case.

It is said that although a sister's daughter's son is remoter in degree than the maternal uncle, yet the common particles of the body of the propositus in the former are greater than those in the latter. It is difficult to weigh with exactitude the common particles of body or blood, and an attempt to do that would perhaps be futile. The following illustration, suggested, during the hearing of this case, by one of my learned colleagues in this Full Bench (which I quote here with his kind permission) will, however, show that the maternal uncle and the propositus have more particles of body and blood of their common ancestor (the maternal grandfather and the maternal grandmother of the propositus) than the sister's daughter's son and the propositus have of their common ancestor (the father and the mother of the propositus). The propositus's mother and the maternal uncle had each 16 annas of the common particles of body and blood of the maternal grandfather and the maternal grandmother. The propositus had 8 annas of his mother in common with the maternal uncle. Now the propositus and his sister had 16 annas of the common blood of the father and the mother. The sister's daughter inherited 8 annas and the sister's daughter's son only 4 annas of that common blood. The sister's son or the sister's daughter may be said to have equal quantity of common blood or particles of body of the father and the mother as the maternal uncle and the propositus had of the maternal grandfather and the maternal grandmother, but in a descendant further removed, namely, the sister's daughter's son, the common particles of body and blood became less. Thus the descendant of a remoter ancestor as the maternal uncle will have more common particles of body and blood than one descended from a nearer ancestor but several generations down. The uncertainty of this test is obvious and cannot be the basis of a general rule.

It is then contended that the sister's daughter's son, being descended from the father or mother, should be preferred to the maternal uncle who traces his descent from a more remote ancestor, namely, the maternal grandfather: in other words, the line of the father must be exhausted before that of the grandfather is resorted to. This contention is supported by the view expressed in Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11), where a sister's son's son was preferred to a maternal uncle's son [followed in Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama Ayyangar (10)]. No text or authority was cited in support of the view taken by their Lordships. As an illustration the case of a nephew excluding his uncle was quoted. The analogy does not afford any principle, for the priority of the nephew (brother's son) over the uncle (paternal grandfather's son) is by virtue of a special text in the Mitakshara.

In Chapter II, placita 135 and 136, Yajnavalkya, the order of succession of (an Aputra) a sonless propositus is as follows:—"The wife, the daughter, both parents, brother likewise, and their sons (* ), gentiles: ( ), cognates ( *), a pupil and a fellow-student. On failure of the first among these the next in order is indeed heir to the estate of one who departed for heaven leaving no male issue."

In accordance with this text of Yajnavalkya, in Chapter II, section 5, the Mitakshara gives the rules and the order of succession of Gotrajas (Sapindas and Samanodakas) and in clause 1 declares that brother's sons (or * * * *) succeed before the paternal grandfather and his sons. In placitum 4, it is expressly laid down "on failure of the father's descendants (Santan) the heirs are successively the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, the uncles and their sons."

Placitum 5. "On failure of the paternal grandfather's descendants (Santan) the paternal great grandmother, the great-grandfather, his sons and their sons inherit. In this manner must be understood the succession of kindred belonging to the same Gotra or family till the 7th degree among the Sapindas."

* * 'Suta' in verse 136 of Yajnavalkya, 'Santan' and 'Putra' in placita 4 and 5 of the Mitakshara cited above, do not mean only son or descendant in the restricted sense, for in Yajnavalkya the word 'Putra' in the verse stands for son, son's son and son's son's son, as defined by Manu, Vishnu, Harita, Yajnavalkya, Sankha and Lakshita (Mitakshara, Chapter I, section 11, Sloka 3, Viramitrodaya, Chapter III, Part I, section 11, page 198).

Upon the aforesaid special meaning of the word 'Putra and Santan,' the texts enjoin that the three immediate descendants of an ancestor would succeed before the next ancestor and his 3 descendants can come in. This rule applies only in the case of 3 immediate ancestors of the deceased upon the text of Manu, Chapter IX, verse 187, and is also based upon the theory of religious benefit: "To three ancestors water must be offered, to three funeral cakes must be given, the fourth descendant is the giver of oblations, the fifth has no connection."

The Smriti Chandrika, an authority in Madras, has restricted the meaning of son to include only son's son and has further laid down that the son and grandson of an ancestor succeed even before the ancestor (vide Smriti Chandrika, Chapter IX, section 5). This view has been adopted by the Madras Court in Suraya Bhukta v. Lakshminarasamma (30) and Ohinnaswami Pillai v. Kunju Pillai (31). This would show that in Madras, either on the text or on the authority there is no general rule even in the case of Gotraja Sapindas of exhausting all the heirs in the nearer line before going up to a higher one. Far less this can be a rule in the case of (30) 5 M. 291; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 203.

UMA SHANKAR PRASAD C. NAGESWARI KOERI.

Bandhus. There is no such rule in the Benares school either.

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (6), affirming the decision of the Allahabad Court, laid down the order of succession among Gotrajas by working it up from the express texts, and not upon the general principle that 'the nearer line excludes the more remote.' Indeed if this were the rule, then the descendants up to the 7th degree of each immediate ancestor would have been exhausted before going up to a higher ancestor and the nephew's great-grandson would have excluded the grandfather and the great-grandfather and their three respective immediate descendants.

It is noticeable that among Gotrajas the heirs succeed in the order in which they have been named in verses 135 and 136, Yajnavalkya, but the Bandhus do not succeed in the order in which they have been enumerated in Chapter II, verse 6, as held in Ram Oharan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (17), dissenting from Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (15). Thus the analogy of the principal rule of succession among the Gotrajas is not extended in the Benares school to Bandhus. Why then should the analogy of an uncle succeeding before the nephew apply to the case of Bandhus?

As to the contention that, as in the case of Gotrajas so in the case of Bandhus three descendants of nearer line should be exhausted before going to a higher line, or his descendants, it is enough to say that the words "and their sons" have not been used against the Bandhus named in Chapter II, section 6, Sloka 2, as in the case of Gotraja Sapindas. Besides, it would hardly help the sister's daughter's son, for Putra means son's son's son, and a daughter does not come in.

In the recent case of Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prosai Tewari (8) this Court declined to adopt the rule that a descendant of a nearer ancestor must be preferred to that of a remoter one, and held that a mother's paternal aunt's son, who although traced his descent through the mother's father's father, was preferable to mother's sister's son's son who traced his descent through the mother's father, on the ground that the former was nearer in degree than the latter. Another ground for preference mentioned in that case was that the former offered religious oblations to two ancestors of the deceased, whereas the latter offered to none. This principle will be referred to later, but at present the decision of this Court is referred to for the purpose of showing that among Bandhus there is no such rule that the descendant of a nearer ancestor excludes that of a remoter one. Sir Edward Chamier, C. J., observed that if effect be given to this rule, "it may easily happen that an obviously more remote heir will exclude a nearer Sapinda" and will, therefore, override the cardinal principle of Hindu Law that "the inheritance belongs to the next Sapinda." Sir Edward Chamier was a party to the decision in Kalian Rai v. Ram Chander (32), where it was held that the grandson of a brother is preferable to a son of a paternal uncle, and that among the Gotrajas "the father's line as far as the grandson must be exhausted before the grandfather or his line can 'come in' and 'was, therefore, fully alive to the texts regulating the rule of succession among the Gotrajas; still he would not lay down a general rule that a nearer line excludes the one more remote and would not extend the rule by analogy to apply to the case of Bandhus. His long experience at the Bar and on the Bench in the United Provinces and lately on the Bench of this Court, where the Mitakshara Law of the Benares school prevails, is entitled to great weight, as showing that the Hindu Law, as administered in the United Provinces and here, does not admit of the rule that 'the nearer line excludes the one more remote'.

In the Madras cases Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11) and Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama Ayyangar (10), relied upon, no text or authority has been quoted. Besides, the rival claimants were equal in degree, and that also makes the ruling inapplicable to the present case, where the one claimant is nearer than the other. Sarvadhikari, at page 712 says, "all other things being equal, the nearer line excludes the one more remote."

It is then contended that the sister's daughter's son is a descendant from the father of the propositus, whereas the maternal uncle is connected on the mother's side of the propositus, and hence the former would exclude the latter on the principle that the heirs ex parte paterna exclude those ex parte materna. In the earlier decisions of the Madras Court the principle does not appear to have been recognised.

In Narasimma v. Mangammal (23) a maternal uncle was preferred to a father's sister and thus the above principle relied upon was not followed although in Madras females were heritable Bandhus, vide Nallanna v. Ponnal (33), Ramappa Udayan v. Arumugath Udayan (34).

In Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (19) maternal uncle was preferred to father's father's sister's son, although the former was connected through the mother and the latter through the father and grandfather. This decision was affirmed by the Privy Council in Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami (20), which is an indication that their Lordships did not give effect to or recognise the principle of preferring ex parte paterna to ex parte materna.

For the first time in Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliyar (12) it was simply stated, without deciding, that as between the plaintiffs, the daughter's son of the paternal uncle, and the defendant No. 3 who was mother's sister's son, the latter is ex parte materna while the former is ex parte paterna. The point could not be decided as there was no dispute in that case between the defendant No. 3 and the plaintiffs; they compromised the case in the Court below. The appeal was by defendants Nos. 4 and 5, who were the sister's daughters of the propositus, against the plaintiffs. That ruling, therefore, cannot be any authority for the proposition that a Bandhu ex parte paterna is to be preferred to one ex parte materna. Yet this was relied on in the case of Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11) for the proposition that the ex parte paterna excludes the ex parte materna and on that ground a sister's son's son was preferred to a maternal uncle's son. Here also no text of the Hindu Law was quoted in support of the general proposition.

The later decision in the Madras Court (33) 14 M. 149; 1 M. L. J. 46; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 105.

(34) 17 M. 182; 4 M. L. J. 30; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 125.

in Subramania Mudaliar v. Ranganathan Chettyar (13) shows that the Judges felt themselves bound to follow the decisions of that Court in Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliyar (12) and Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11). Miller, J., in answer to the argument that the rule is not based on any Smriti or accepted commentary, said that: "It is not a sufficient reason why we should refuse to follow the course of decisions in this Court." Sadasiva Aiyar, J., went further and said that "It is not the Shastra according to my views." The learned Judge, however, recognised that the Benares branch of the Hindu Law was different from that administered in that Presidency, as is expressly said by him within brackets "(and ignoring the Benares Branch of the school)." His Lordship further said that the father's sister's son would include father's sister's son's son, as son means son's son. I have already shown that the Mitakshara in enumerating the Bandhus does not add the words "and sons" as in the case of Gotrajas, and there is, therefore, no justification for including sons and grandsons of the persons named. Even if it be so, it would not apply to the present case. In the first place, sister or sister's daughter is not mentioned. In the second place, we are concerned here not with the sister's son's son, but with the sister's daughter's son, and the word 'son,' although it includes son and grandson, does not mean daughter and daughter's son. These Madras cases seem to accept the notion, as expressly held in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliyar (16), that amongst the persons inter se named in the text of Mitakshara they succeed in the order in which they have been named. This view was dissented from recently in an elaborate judgment of Banerji and Piggott, J.J., in Ram Oharan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (17), where the mother's brother's son was preferred to mother's sister's son and it was conclusively shown that the Madras authorities were wrong in holding that the order of priority among cognate Bandhus of each of the three classes is not the order in which those persons have been named in the text. In Madho v. Janki (35) relied upon, it is expressly mentioned that the decision is based upon the law and usage prevalent in the Bombay Presidency, where Mayukha and Smriti Chandrika are the authorities and have been given precedence over the Mitakshara. Mitter, J., said that "unless there were clear and cogent reasons for dissenting from the earlier decisions in Nagpur and in Bombay, where by custom the females are heirs, it would be my duty to follow them." The case of Ram Bhargos v. Ram Parshad (21), where father's brother's daughter's son was preferred to mother's brother's son, was decided by Aikman, J., sitting singly. The learned Judge did not discuss the point or cite any text. The decision, therefore, is not of any assistance in the case.

The rule that the heirs ex parte paterna should be preferred to those ex parte materna is not to be found in the text relating to Bandhus in the Mitakshara and there is no authority for supplying any omission in that text. It was well observed by Holloway, J., in Chelikani Tirupati Rayanagaru v. Rajah Suraneni Vencata Gopala Narasimha Rau Bahadur (36): "It is satisfactory to find it at least recognised that the rule of law is not to be derived...from the positive words of a commentator and still less from his omissions."

According to Mayne, those on the father's side take precedence over those on the mother's side "as regards two sets of persons equally near," and hence the nearer in degree on whichever side will exclude the one more remote (Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 812, paragraph 579).

Similarly Golap Chandra Sastri lays down among the governing principles of competition among Bandhus first rule—"the nearer in degree on whichever side is to be preferred to one more remote" and the second rule "of those equal in degree one related on the father's side—is to be preferred to one related on the mother's side." In the Madras cases the claimants were equal in degree. Thus the rule that ex parte paterna is to be preferred to ex parte materna becomes inapplicable to the present case where the claimants are not equal in degree, but the maternal uncle is nearer in degree than the sister's daughter's son. I do not see how the father's line should be preferred to the mother's on the text of the Mitakshara, for the Mitakshara as distinguished from Dayabhaga prefers mother and grandmother to father and grandfather respectively, on the ground that their propinquity is greater than the father and grandfather (vide Mayne, paragraph 512, page 714; also Mitakshara, Chapter II, placita 3, 4 and 5). According to Smriti Chandrika which governs the Madras Presidency, the father succeeds before the mother and this might be the reason for the decisions in that Province that persons connected through the father are to be preferred to those connected through the mother. There is an absence of direct authority of the Privy Council on the point but as already shown, the principle was not given effect to in Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumarswami Mudaliyar (20).

The reason urged for preferring persons related through males to those related through mothers or other females is possibly that in the case of the latter the Gotra becomes different by marriage, and where two females intervene the family becomes much more remote and is disconnected by two different Gotras or families. On this ground also the maternal uncle should be preferred because only one female intervenes between him and the propositus, whereas in the case of the sister's daughter's son two females intervene. There is apparently a conflict of decisions in the Madras Court on this point. In Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama Ayyangar (10) father's sister's daughter's son was preferred to paternal grandfather's sister's daughter. As regards the intervention of two females in the case of the former, it was said as follows:—

"Whether having regard to the preponderating influence in the Hindu system of law of relationship through males with reference to the devolution of the heritage of a man, such a circumstance (intervention of females) as that relied on may or may not avail when the competition is between Bandhus of the same category and of the same degree, it is unnecessary to consider."

(36) 6 M. H. C. R. 278 at pp. 285, 291.

Andal Ammal (14), where a daughter's son's son was preferred to a daughter's daughter's son on the grounds stated that "it is legitimate to prefer that claimant between whom and the stem there intervenes one female link to that claimant who is separated from the stem by two such links." It may be noted that in Madras a daughter's daughter is an heir and Bandhu [Ramappa Udayan v. Arumugath Udayan (34), Nallanna v. Ponnal (33)]. With regard to the decision in Tirumalachariar v. Andal Ammal (14), it was said in the case of Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (16) that the principle of two females intervening would not apply to the case, because of the important qualification "of all other considerations being equal," and the mother's sister's son was preferred to the maternal uncle's son on the ground that he was mentioned before the latter in the list of Bandhus given by the Mitakshara in the text, section 6, Chapter II. This view has been dissented from recently in the case of Ram Oharan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (17), where it is held that the mother's sister's son, though named before the maternal uncle's son in the enumeration of Bandhus in the Mitakshara, cannot still be preferred to the latter inasmuch as he is separated from the propositus by two females, whereas in the case of the maternal uncle's son only one female intervenes. So far as the present case is concerned, the Allahabad decision must be preferred to those of the Madras and the Bombay Courts. Apart from the aforesaid decision of the Allahabad Court, I think that the intervention of two females would more diverge the Gotra and family of the person so related from that of the propositus than where only one female intervenes and that there would be less or no possibility of the former classes of relations conferring any spiritual benefit to the propositus or his ancestors. This might possibly be the reason for the rule, if any, of postponing females or relations through females to males, and those connected through males. The reason will apply with greater force to exclude persons connected through two females in preference to those connected through one female. This was the reason adopted in Tirumalachariar v. Andal Ammal (14) and Ram Oharan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (17).

I have discussed all the tests for determining the rival claims of Bandhus and I would conclude by saying that none of those tests are mentioned in the text either of the Rishis or by Vijnaneswara in the Mitakshara, or in the authoritative commentary of Mitakshara, namely, Viramirodaya, received as a treatise of high authority and as exposition of what may have been left doubtful by the Mitakshara. I have also shown that there is no authority for resorting to any of those tests where the claimants are not equal in degree.

The claim of the maternal uncle rests upon a firmer ground, namely, that he offers oblations to the two common ancestors of the propositus and thereby confers spiritual benefit to him, whereas the sister's daughter's son offers oblations to none of the ancestors of the propositus and confers, therefore no spiritual benefit at all. It is said that some of the persons named in the Mitakshara as heritable Bandhus do not confer spiritual benefit and in particular one of the Matri Bandhus, who confers spiritual benefit, is postponed till some of the Pitri Bandhus who confer none, and hence the Mitakshara abandoned the doctrine of spiritual benefit to be applied to the case of Bandhus.

We are dealing here with the case of claimants who are not expressly mentioned in the Mitakshara as Bandhus, and there is no reason why their nearness or propinquity to the propositus should not be determined by the religious benefit they confer upon the deceased in order to give preference among rival claimants.

In the case of Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (7) the Board affirmed this ruling in the following words:—

"When a question of preference arises, as preference is founded on superior efficacy of oblations, the principle must be applied to the solution of the difficulty. It obtains properly when a succession opens to the deceased, when the question mooted is a real one (at least in the contemplation of pious Hindus), viz., who best can confer on the deceased and his ancestors not fully benefited the benefits which the grades of oblations offer in differing degrees."

In the recent case of Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (6), their Lordships, relying upon the text of Viramitrodaya, Chapter II, Part I, section 23 (A), observed—"Now it is absolutely clear that under the Mitakshara whilst the right of inheritance arises from Sapinda relationship or community of blood, in judging of the nearness of blood relationship or propinquity among the Gotraja the test to be applied to discover the preferential heir is the capacity to offer oblations."

Similar was their Lordships' observation in the case of Soorendronath Roy v. Musamat Heeramonee (29), already referred to in the earlier part of this judgment.

It is contended that the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council applies only to the case of Gotraja Sapindas and not to the Bhinna Gotra Sapindas or Bandhus. There does not appear to be any substance in this contention. Their Lordships do not restrict the application, and the authorities that will be presently quoted will show that the rule applies also to the case of Bandhus. Besides, if the rule applies to the Sagotra Sapindas, there is no reason why it should not apply to the Bhinna Gotra Sapindas. The passage in Viramitrodaya relied on by their Lordships occurs in Chapter II, Part I, section 23 (A), relating to the Partition of Heritage: "But when there are many claimants to the heritage amongst the gentiles and the other class, then the fact of conferring benefits on the proprietor of the wealth by means of the offering of oblations and the like, only excludes those that do not confer such benefits though this is not the criterion here." The Sanskrit words are:—

(vide page 39, Sanskrit Text, and page 91, Translation by Golap Chandra Sastri). The expression means "Gotrajas and other (class)" as rendered by Dr. Sarvadhikari. It clearly lays down the general rule applicable not only to Gotrajas but to all classes of heirs including Bandhus. This is by using the word 'Gotraja,' and the other classes.

Devala says, "Sages declare partition of heritable property to be co-ordinate with gifts of funeral cakes." Vishnu and Gautama support the theory of religious oblations as a determining factor in inheritance.

Mitter Missir has conclusively shown that according to Manu, Yajnavalkya and other Rishis as well as the Mitakshara, inheritance is intervoven with capacity to offer funeral oblations. It is needless to quote these passages. They have been referred to in Viramitrodaya, Chapter III, Part I, section 11, pages 134, 155, 157, 186 and 200. Relying upon those texts, Viramitrodaya says: "the three descendants beginning with the son confer the greatest amount of spiritual benefit on the three ancestors beginning with the father, consequently the estate, conducing as it does to the benefit of the owner himself when taken by the sons, etc., continues as it were the owner's own by reason of the proximity of benefit. And the nearness on account of the spiritual benefit is consistent with reason: thus it is ordained..... Since, in the Chapter on Partition of Heritage, the conferring of spiritual benefit is by the term 'therefore' set out as the reason; hence it is indicated that he alone is entitled to get the estate, on whom the estate being devolved conduces to the greatest amount of spiritual benefit of the deceased owner, and that proximity in this way is to be accepted as a general rule and reasonable." Indeed Mitter Missir has considered the religious efficacy in discussing the claim of every heir separately and has throughout his work maintained that the degrees of propinquity are determined by religious merit. West and Buhler accept the principle of religious efficacy as propounded in Viramitrodaya. Aparakba, another commentator of great repute, who flourished a century before Mitter Missir, has also upheld the same principle of preference among several claimants. There are passages in the Smriti Chandrika supporting the same view in Chapters on Inheritance of Gotrajas and the last paragraph (15) in Chapter XI regarding the succession of Bandhus.

I next deal with the principle of religious efficacy as accepted in the judicial decisions. The Calcutta High Court in the Full Bench case of Omrit Koomaree Dabee v. Luckhee Narain Chuckerbutty (1), per Mitter, J., applied the doctrine of spiritual benefit for holding that sister's son and maternal uncle, though not specifically mentioned in the list given by Mitakshara, are heritable Bandhus, and affirmed the views of Sir William Jones that "the doctrine of funeral cakes is the key to the whole Hindu Law of Inheritance. All the schools of Hindu Law that are current in the country are agreed in accepting this principle as their guide, however much they might differ from one another with reference to particular points connected with its application."

In Gunesh Chunder Roy v. Nil Kamul Roy (18) the principle of spiritual benefit was accepted to be the general principle of Hindu Law and as a general guide in determining the preferential claims of the parties where their respective position is not settled in the Mitakshara itself or by any decided case, the principle was applied and a sister's son was preferred to a mother's sister's son of the deceased on the ground that the former "confers greater spiritual benefit upon the soul of the deceased than the latter."

Similarly the Allahabad High Court in the Full Bench case of Janki v. Nand Ram (24), upon the authority of Viramitrodaya and the Mitakshara, held that although propinquity is the rule of inheritance and the spiritual benefit cannot create the heritable right, yet it determines with precision the preferable right of Gotrajas and other heirs, where there is more than one claimant to the heritage.

Mahmood, J., agreed with the above and went the length of saying: "The Hindu system went further and laid it down as an imperative rule, that the right to inherit a dead man's property is exactly co-extensive with the duty of performing his obsequies. The devolution of property depends upon the competence to perform the obsequial rites of the deceased."

In the Full Bench case of Suba Singh v. Sarafraz Kunwar (25) with regard to the passage in Viramitrodaya already referred to, Banerji, J., observed that "It may be that, where two Sapindas stand, with reference to propinquity, in the same degree of nearness to the propositus, the capacity to confer the highest amount of spiritual benefit should be applied as a test to determine the order of priority. But, where the degrees of propinquity are different, the rule of religious efficacy has, according to the Mitakshara, no application."

According to Banerji, J., therefore, even if the maternal uncle and the sister's daughter's son were equal in degree, the former would have been preferred and being nearer in degree, his claim is much more preferable.

The Bombay Court in Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (27) held that the Mitakshara adopted, in lieu of religious efficacy, the theory that Sapindaship is based upon community of corporal particles, or in other words, upon consanguinity. This was affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (3). Neither the Bombay Court nor their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that spiritual benefit could not be taken into consideration in determining the preferential right of rival claimants. Their Lordships say that by the law of Mitakshara as interpreted in Western India, the preferential right to inherit in the classes of Sapindas is to be determined by family relationship or community of corporal particles and not alone by the capacity to perform the funeral rights. Moreover, in that case the right of the widow of a first cousin was upheld upon the local law and usage and upon the Mayukha which has precedence over the Mitakshara in Gujerat and Bombay Presidency. Except for the principle referred to above the authority is not applicable to the Benares school as females, unless specially mentioned, do not succeed in Northern India to the exclusion of male heirs [Gauri Sahai v. Rukko (37)].

Later on in Mohandas v. Krishnabai (28) the Bombay Court applied the principle of religious efficacy and preferred the maternal uncle to mother's sister's son. It was observed—"When it is once admitted that the list of Bandhus given in the text is not exhaustive and that other relatives take before some of those specified in the list, there is no other logical conclusion except that the relative who as the nearest of kin is capable of conferring the greatest spiritual benefit on the soul of the deceased, must in all cases be preferred to a more remote Bandhus."

This Bombay case [Mohandas v. Krishnabai (28)] has been referred to in the later decisions of the same Court in Gojabai v. Shrimant Shahajirao Maloji Raje Bhosle (38) and the Privy Council case of Bai Kesserbai v. Hunsraj Morarji (39). But the principle laid down there has not been at all dissented from or adversely commented upon. The case of Parot Bapalal Sevakram v. Mehta Harilal Surajram (40) has also been referred to, but in that case there were no rival claimants and no question arose as to preference by religious efficacy.

The views of the Madras Court have been conflicting. In Chelikani Tirupati Rayanagaru v. Rajah Suraneni Venkata Gopala Narasimha (36), Innes, J. observed as follows:—

"Putting the Mitakshara aside for the present, all the treatises on Hindu Law just referred to seem to disclose the intention of including as heirs in the order of propinquity all kindred, however remote, except when propinquity requires to be postponed to the superior benefits which another relationship is capable of conferring in funeral oblations."

In Lakshmanammal v. Tiruvenguda Muzali (41) Turner, C. J., referring to Chelikani Tirupati Rayanagaru v. Rajah Suraneni Venkata Gopala Narasimha (33), said that "that ruling has the support of at least one text, although the right to perform funeral rites is a sequence and not a cause of inheritance and the recognition of the right in a person may fairly be regarded as recognition of the claim of inheritance in the same person."

In Muttusami v. Muttukumarsami (19) a maternal uncle of the half blood was preferred to father's paternal aunt's son; the Court, relying on and quoting a passage from the Viramitrodaya, Chapter III, Part I, section 2, page 158, observed:—"This passage indicates that as between Bandhus of the same class, a rule of preference may be found in the quantity of spiritual benefit which they confer..... As between Bandhus of the same class the spiritual benefit they confer upon the propositus is, as stated in Viramitrodaya, a ground of preference."

On appeal to the Privy Council Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (20) their Lordships affirmed this decision but did not take exception to the observation of the Madras High Court. On the other hand, their Lordships expressly recognized the authority of Viramitrodaya.

In Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (12) relied upon by the appellant, the decision in Muttusami v. Muttukumarsami (19) was referred to, but the doctrine laid down there regarding the preference to be given by reason of spiritual benefit was not dissented from. On the other hand, the analogy of the sister's son excluding the sister was quoted with the remark that the sister is a mere relative and being a female, "can offer no funeral oblations."

In Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11) and Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (16) the doctrine of religious efficacy was not acted upon. In the latter case their Lordships felt themselves more at liberty not to follow the doctrine "by the fact that the parties were Jains and that though the Hindu Law is prima facie held applicable to them, its religious developments should not have unrestricted operations." The actual decision in the case, that the mother's sister's son is preferable to the maternal uncle's son, has been dissented from recently by the Allahabad Court in Ram Charan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (17). In the former Madras case [Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11)] it was held that the doctrine ought not to be resorted to in derogation of the principles (1) the nearer line excluding the more remote, and (2) that persons ex parte materna should be preferred to those ex parte paterna on the ground that these principles are the cardinal principles of the Hindu Law and pervade the law of inheritance under the Mitakshara system. But no text or authority was quoted in support of the aforesaid view, or that these principles should override the rule of religious efficacy for the purpose of giving preference in the case of rival claimants as laid down in the earlier decisions of the same Court. But both the aforesaid Madras decisions in Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11) and Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (16) have admitted that "the Privy Council and the Madras Court have adverted to considerations of religious efficacy of oblations as a factor in determining the relative priority of competing claimants," particularly "as between Bandhus of the same class." The doctrine, therefore, has not been wholly abandoned by the Madras Court. Indeed a reference to the Smriti Chandrika itself will show that the doctrine has been referred to in more places than one in Chapters relating to succession of Gotrajas. In Chapter XI, section 5, paragraph 14, Smriti Chandrika has quoted from the Mitakshara the enumeration of Bandhus. In paragraph 15, it says "of the kinsmen, distant kinsmen, and cognate kindred, in default of one that stands nearest in the order expressly given, he that may be somehow viewed to stand on a par with him, may be selected, it being generally declared by Gautama 'let those take the inheritance who give the funeral cake' (Pinda), who are the descendants from the same Gotra, or who are sprung from the same Rishi." I do not know how in face of the above, it can be said that the Smriti Chandrika did not lay down that (1) the nearest in degree should be preferred to those more remote, and (2) that religious efficacy may be resorted to for the purpose of preference of the rival claimants. This exactly agrees with the view in Viramitrodaya and as stated in the rules given in Dr. Sarvadhikari's Tagore Law Lectures and Golap Chandra Sastri's Hindu Law already referred to. Whatever may have been the view in the other Presidencies, the proposition has been stoutly affirmed and followed in Northern India, where the Mitakshara as interpreted by Viramitrodaya governs the rule of succession.

The Privy Council as early as 1868, in Gridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (2), observed, after quoting the text of the Mitakshara re the enumeration of Bandhus: "This sub-division of Bandhus into 3 classes is possibly a consequence of that part of the definition already referred to, which treats them as kinsmen connected by funeral oblations." As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (7), "The compiler of the Mitakshara is said to have been an ascetic or a devotee and from that source nothing at variance with the religion of the Hindus is likely to have flowed." Yajnavalkya was the first to mention the offering of a cake to the maternal ancestors in Chapter I, Sloka 242, and to introduce Bandhus as heritable heirs and could not ignore the religious considerations from inheritance, much less his commentator, Vijaneswara, the author of the Mitakshara, could do.

Mayne on Hindu Law, 8th Edition, section 516, page 723, dealing with the succession of Bandhus, says: "The Mitakshara recognized the difference between the offerings which A and B were bound to make to X, but it used the difference in order to ascertain which of the two was nearer to X in a direct line."

Coming to this Court, in the recent case of Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prosad Tewari (8) Sir Edward Chamier, C. J., referred to Viramitrodaya and to the Privy Council authorities and gave effect to the religious benefit in determining the claims of the mother's paternal aunt's son to that of a mother's sister's son's son, although the latter was the son of an Atma Bandhu expressly named in the Mitakshara. Sir Edward Chamier in Kalian Bai v. Ram Chandar (32) had also referred to Viramitrodaya for the proposition that religious consideration should be resorted to in order to prefer the claims of competitors.

In another case, Harihar Oharan v. Jang Bahadur (42), a Division Bench of this Court per Roe, J., held that although the succession of a Bandhu is based on consanguinity, it must still be supported by the right to offer oblations to a common ancestor. There is no reason why the two decisions of this very Court should not be followed in this case. It appears to me clear that the maternal uncle must exclude the sister's daughter's son on the ground that he confers spiritual benefit on the propositus, whereas the latter confers none.

There is a difference of opinion among the recent commentators as to the rights of the present claimants. Those who have placed (42) 34 Ind. Cas. 183.

the sister's daughter's son above the maternal uncle have apparently done so on the authority of the Madras cases which, as has already been shown, do not apply to the Benares school. They have not supported their views by any text of the Mitakshara or the Hindu Law. The claims of the parties must be determined in accordance with the texts. According to Sarvadhikari's Tagore Law Lectures, page 728, father's paternal aunt's son should take precedence over mother's brother or mother's sister's son, but this is obviously contrary to what has been held in Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (20). We cannot, therefore, depend upon a commentator's views but upon the text.

The claim of the maternal uncle to succeed ranks high after the Gotrajas under the Mitakshara. In verses 52 and 53, the Mitakshara itself, while enumerating the Sapindas, mentions maternal uncle as occupying a high position.

Viramitrodaya, Chapter III, Part VII, section 5, at page 200 of Golap Chandra Sastri's Translation, after quoting from the Mitakshara the list of Bandhus, adds—"In the text of Manu, namely—"In their default, a Sakulya or the preceptor or a pupil (becomes heir)"—the term Sakulya includes the Sagotras (Sapindas) and Samanodakas, the maternal uncle and the like, and the three classes of cognates. Also in the text of Yogisvara the term 'cognate' or Bandhu comprises also the maternal uncle. Otherwise, the exclusion of the maternal uncle and the like would be the result. And it would be extremely improper that their sons are heirs but they themselves though nearer are not heirs."

Dr. Jolly in the Tagore Law Lectures for 1883 at page 215 is of the same view.

According to Viramitrodaya, the maternal uncle would even have precedence over the 3 classes of Bandhus. There is no reason why the authority of Viramitrodaya, right or wrong, which has been accepted for centuries in the Benares school, should be discarded on any strained analogies or on account of its being either unreasonable or even repugnant to the text of Mitakshara, for the Benares school is governed not by the Mitakshara alone, but by the Mitakshara as interpreted by Mitter

Missir in Viramitrodaya. There is another passage in the Mitakshara itself, page 322 3rd Edition, 1829, quoted in Gridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (2), Omrut Koomaree Dabee v. Luckhee Narain Chuckerbutty (1): "When one having gone to a foreign country dies, let the descendants, cognates (Bandhus), gentiles, or his companions take the goods. In their default, the King. When of those who are associated in trade, any one having gone to a foreign country dies, then his share shall be taken by his heirs, i.e., the son and other descendants, cognates, Bandhavas." This passage was relied on by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the aforesaid case at page 466,* in the following words:—"Here then is a passage written by the author of the Mitakshara himself, which treats the maternal uncle as capable of inheriting. The learned Judges of the Court below meet this authority by suggesting that the heirship of the maternal uncle, as well as that of the co-trader, may be exceptional and confined to the case of the trader dying abroad. Their Lordships however, cannot admit the reasonableness of this hypothesis." Therefore, the maternal uncle occupies the foremost position among the Bandhus and according to Viramitrodaya is superior to the Bandhus. Sister's daughter's son is nowhere mentioned. Besides, it is doubtful whether the sister's daughter's son is an Atma Bandhu or a Pitri Bandhu. If he is a Pitri Bandhu, he will clearly be excluded by the maternal uncle. The doubt was also expressed in the case of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (4), and in fact I am not satisfied that the persons not named in the Mitakshara should necessarily be classed in one of the three classes mentioned there. In the already cited Patna case, Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tewari (8), it was not accepted that the descendant of an Atma Bandhu is necessarily an Atma Bandhu, for the reason that then "it may easily happen that an obviously more remote Sapinda will exclude a nearer Sapinda."

I have refrained from quoting any translation from Colebrooke for the reason that the accuracy of his translation has been doubted. On a consideration of the original texts and of such translations as have been accepted by the authorities, particularly of the Privy Council, I have come to the conclusion that the theory of religious efficacy is based upon the original text of the Smritis, the Mitakshara and the Viramirodaya, the authoritative commentary thereof. The rule has been accepted by all the authorities on the Hindu Law and has been affirmed by judicial decisions, both in this country and of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council prior to and after Colebrooke's translation of the word Sapinda was doubted. The rule has nothing to do with the meaning of the word 'Sapinda,' whether it means a connection through the particles of one body or a connection by balls of rice, but is founded upon the fact that the rules of succession and religion are indissolubly blended in the Hindu Law and cannot, by any process of reasoning or analogies, be separated. This has been affirmed recently by the Privy Council, as already adverted to, in Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (6) (a case of the Benares school and applicable to the parties in the present case).

*Page of 12 M. I. A.—Ed.

To conclude, the maternal uncle must be preferred to the sister's daughter's son for the reason that (1) he is nearer in degree than the latter, (2) he confers spiritual benefit on the propositus, whereas the latter confers none (3) he is mentioned in certain texts of the Mitakshara as occupying a high position among heirs, whereas the sister's daughter's son is not mentioned anywhere, and (4) he is connected with the deceased through one female, whereas the latter is connected with the deceased through two females and is thus much more remote.

I do not think that the fact that the sister's daughter's son is related to the deceased through his father, whereas the maternal uncle is related through his mother, or that he is descended from a nearer ancestor, namely, the father, whereas the maternal uncle is descended from a more remote ancestor, namely, the maternal grandfather, does in any way give him any preferential right, for the simple reason that these are not the tests mentioned in the Smritis, the Mitakshara, or any authoritative commentary.

I, therefore, hold that the maternal uncle should be preferred to the sister's daughter's son and would answer the reference accordingly.

IMAM, J.—The question, referred to us for determination by this Full Bench is whether in a family governed by the Mitakshara School of Law a sister's daughter's son is to be preferred to the maternal uncle of the last male owner as his heir. The answer to this question depends upon the order of succession among the Bhinna Gotra Sapinda under the Mitakshara as expounded in the Benares school. The Mitakshara has placed Bhinna Gotra Sapindas, that is Bandhus, into three classes in the order in which they stand to the deceased for the purposes of inheritance. These are Atma Bandhus, who are cognate kindreds of the deceased; Pitri Bandhus, who are cognate kindreds of the father of the deceased, and Matri Bandhus, who are cognate kindreds of the mother of the deceased. This is evident from the following passage in Chapter II, section 6, paragraph 1, of the Mitakshara:—

"On failure of gentiles cognates are heirs. Cognates are of three kinds, related to the person himself, to his father or to his mother as is declared by the following text,—'the sons of his own father's sister, the sons of his own mother's sister and the sons of his own maternal uncle must be considered as his own cognate kindred'. The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal uncle must be deemed his father's cognate kindred. The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt and the sons of his mother's maternal uncle must be reckoned his mother's cognate kindred."

The passage was relied upon in Omrit Koomaree Dabee v. Luckhee Narain Chuckerbutty (1). It will be observed that the text of the Mitakshara does not mention sister's daughter's son or maternal uncle as heirs, but it has been repeatedly held that the enumeration in the text is only illustrative and not exhaustive [vide Gridhari Lall Roy v. Bengal Government (2), Mathuswami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (3), Umair Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (4), Babu Lal

v. Nanku Ram (43). Taking the text as only illustrative it is clear that sister's daughter's son and maternal uncle are Atma Bandhus of the deceased. This is admitted in the argument addressed to us by both sides at the Bar. The question then is, which of these two Atma Bandhus has preference for the purposes of inheritance. They both have a place in the first group of heritable Bandhus.

Paragraph 2, section 6, Chapter II, of the Mitakshara runs as follows:—

"Here by reason of more affinity the cognate kindreds of the deceased himself are his successors in the first instance; on failure of them his father's cognate kindred; or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred. This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended."

The text lays down the order of precedence among the three main classes of Bandhus known as Atma Bandhus, Pitri Bandhus and Matri Bandhus. This is not questioned by the parties before us and is supported by judicial pronouncements [vide Muthuswami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (20), Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliyar (16)]. There is no text of the Mitakshara which definitely lays down any rule of precedence when the competition is between Bandhus of the first class inter se. That a sister's daughter's son is a heritable Bandhu received the sanction of judicial authority in the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Umaid Bahadur's case (4).

The learned Vakīl appearing on behalf of the appellant does not dispute that the mother's brother is also a heritable Bandhu, nor could this be doubted once the illustrations given in the Mitakshara are accepted to be not exhaustive. We have, therefore, to decide between the rival claims of two cognates who are both admittedly heritable Bandhus. If the test as a determining factor were the efficacy of religious benefit, there is little doubt that the mother's brother would have preference over a sister's daughter's son, for the former admittedly would offer Pindas to the maternal grandfather of the propositus; whereas the latter suffers from complete incapacity to render any religious service whatever to the propositus or his antestors. One of the cardinal differences between the Dayabhaga of the Bengal school and the Mitakshara of the Benares school is that inheritance under the latter law is regulated by propinquity of relationship as the guiding principle for determining the order of succession [vide Suba Singh v. Sarafraz Kunwar (25), Parot Bapalal Sevakram v. Mehta Harilal Surajram (40), Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11)].

Indeed the mistake by Colebrooke in translating the word "Sapinda" in the Mitakshara by the phrase "connected by funeral oblations" has become a matter of history in the case-law of India and was discovered so long ago as 1876, when their Lordships of the Bombay High Court gave their decision in the well-known case of Lallubhai v. Mankuwarbai (27). That religious efficacy is not the determining guide for the purpose of inheritance in the Mitakshara is also evident from the fact that no less than 4 heritable Bandhus out of the 9 specifically mentioned in the text (Chapter II, section 6, paragraph 1) can confer no religious benefit whatsoever. The proposition that Vijnaneswara, the author of the Mitakshara, construes Sapinda relationship to arise from community of blood is supported by judicial decisions [vide Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (5), Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliyar (16), Parot Bapalal Sevakram v. Mehta Harilal Surajram (40)].

I do not, therefore, think that the mother's brother's capacity to render religious service can be relied upon in a case governed by the Mitakshara as a ground of preference over a sister's daughter's son. It was contended by the learned Vakīl for the respondent that though propinquity of blood determines the preferable right to succeed, the test to determine propinquity is closeness in religious benefits and not blood parties. No text has been placed before us that the principle enunciated by the learned Vakīl is one that has application to succession by Bandhus under the Mitakshara. It has, however, been argued that where the Mitakshara is silent, the authority of Viramitrodaya must be received as an exposition of what has been left in doubt by Vijnaneswara. That Mittra Missir, the author of Viramitrodaya, has a high place in the Benares school is not denied [vide Gridhari Lall Roy v. Government of Bengal (2)]. But no text from Viramitrodaya has been placed before us to establish the proposition that among Bandhus preference must be given to one that renders religious service over another who does not, or that among Bandhus the capacity to offer such service is the test of propinquity of blood. Reliance has been placed upon a passage of Viramitrodaya quoted by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (6). The passage in question is as follows:—

"When there are many claimants to the heritage among Gotrajas and the like, then the fact of conferring benefits on the proprietor of the wealth by means of the offering of oblations and the like only excludes those that do not confer such benefits."

The rival claimants before their Lordships of the Judicial Committee were agnates of the propositus and in dealing with the case their Lordships were pleased to observe as follows:—

"Now it is absolutely clear that under the Mitakshara whilst the right of inheritance arises from Sapinda relationship, the community of blood, in judging of the nearness of blood relationship or propinquity among the Gotraja the test to be applied to discover the preferential heir is the capacity to offer oblations."

So also in the case of Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (7), where the claimant was a Gotraja, the Board made the following observation:—

"When a question of preference arises, as preference is founded on superior efficacy of oblations that principle must be applied to the solution of the difficulty."

The learned Vakil for the respondent has failed to produce any authority except a decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court in support of his contention that the passage of the Viramitrodaya is applicable to a case in which the claimants are not Gotrajas of the propositus but Bhinna Gotrajas. To my mind there is a material difference between the two classes of cases. The Gotrajas are agnates and descendants in the male line from a common ancestor or ancestors of the propositus. In their case the male line of descent is not broken or disturbed by a Gotra springing from a different family as in the case of Bandhus. It is quite evident that in cases where the rival claimants are Gotrajas, greater propinquity of blood is identifiable by greater capacity to render religious rights. But this is not necessarily the case when the rival claimants are Bhinna Gotrajas. The point may be illustrated by a reference to the case of Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tewari (8) decided by a Divisional Bench of this Court and relied upon by the learned Vakil for the respondent. In that case the rival Bandhus were an Atma Bandhu and a Matri Bandhu as will appear from the genealogical table given below:—

UMA SHANKAR PRASAD v. NAGESWARI KOERI.

The question of preference in this case was between Hanuman and Rajendra. Their Lordships who decided the case applied to the issue before them the test of finding out the nearest Sapinda by the capacity to offer oblation. As I have said before, that principle will apply to the case of preference among Gotrajas without doing any violence to the Mitakshara rule, which bases succession on community of blood. The same rule, when applied to the case of rival Bandhus, will produce a result which does not seem to me to be in agreement with the text of the Mitakshara itself. In deciding the case reported as Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tewari (8) their Lordships recognized the fact that the test of religious efficacy to determine nearness of blood was a test that had been applied in reported cases with reference to disputes between agnates. With profound respect to their Lordships who decided that case, I have not been able to discover the ground upon which the test was applied for deciding the issue between Bhinna Gotrajas. There can be no question that Hanuman, a Matri Bandhu, could offer oblation to the great-grandfather of the propositus. On the other hand Rajender was incapable of offering such religious service. The application of the principle held to be the test among the Gotrajas to a case among Bhinna Gotrajas resulted in the exclusion of an Atma Bandhu by a Matri Bandhu. It appears to me that this is inconsistent with the clear and explicit text of the Mitakshara already quoted (Chapter II, section 6, paragraph 2). Fully recognizing the high authority of the Viramitrodaya in the Benares school in matters left doubtful by the Mitakshara, I am unable to accept a view which subordinates the Mitakshara to a merely possible interpretation of the text of the Viramitrodaya.

I am not unmindful of the dictum laid down by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Gunesh Chunder Roy v. Nil Kamal Roy (18). In that case the contest was between a sister's son and the mother's sister's son. Preference was given to the sister's son as he conferred greater spiritual benefits upon the soul of the deceased than a mother's sister's son. In that case the test of spiritual benefits was applied, as it was held that in the Mitakshara itself the respective positions of the parties were not definitely settled and the general principle of the Hindu Law was, therefore, applied to determine the issue. The decision in that case is nonetheless consistent with the general principle of the Mitakshara based upon affinity of blood. It is also quite evident that the Mitakshara gives preference to the male line over the female line. The Mitakshara kinsmen ex parte paterna have preference over kinsmen ex parte materna. The text of the Mitakshara already quoted clearly indicates that Bandhus ex parte paterna should be preferred to Bandhus ex parte materna. This is a view that is supported by the order of succession of Atma Bandhus laid down by Dr. Jogendra Nath Bhat-tacharya and Pandit Raj Kumar Sarva-dhikari. According to these learned authors the first group in order of merit is made up of Bandhus who are sons of the daughters of the family of the propositus. The second group is made up of sons of daughter's son of the family. The third group is composed of sons of daughter's daughters of the family, and it is in this group that father's daughter's daughter's son has been placed and is the seventeenth in the list given in Trevelyan's Hindu Law. On the other hand, mother's brother's son is outside these three groups and has the 23rd place in order of merit as an Atma Bandhu. This is evidently due to the Mitakshara preference of the Bandhus of the deceased connected with him through his father over those connected through his mother. The principle of the Mitakshara has been the guide in the decisions given in Saguna v. Sadashiv (15) and Ram Bharos v. Ram Parshad (21). This is also the view taken in Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (12) and was followed in Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau, (11). In the last case the doctrine of religious efficacy based upon the authority of the Viramitrodaya was dealt with. Their Lordships who decided this case, while unwilling to hold that the doctrine in question could never be resorted to in dealing with difficult questions arising under the Mitakshara and for which no rule was expressly or impliedly stated in the treatise of the Benares school, did nevertheless emphatically lay down the rule that the doctrine of the Viramitrodaya was not to be resorted to in derogation of the great principles governing the law of inheritance under the Mitakshara. The competition in that case was between a sister's son's son of the deceased and his maternal uncle's son. Their Lordships held that the latter had no preference, inasmuch as one of the pervading principles of the Mitakshara Law of Inheritance was that the nearer line excluded the more remote. The sister's son's son, tracing his descent from the father of the propositus, was given preference over the maternal uncle's son who traced his descent from a more remote ancestor, namely, the maternal grandfather. It is quite evident that the decision in the case turned on the nearness or propinquity of blood, and not religious service. The principle has been applied by the Allahabad and Calcutta Courts to a reversioner of the full blood excluding one of half blood [vide Suba Singh v. Sarofraz Kunwar (25) and Sham Singh v. Kishun Sahai (44)]. It seems to me that these principles governing inheritance under the Mitakshara are clearly deducible from the well-known text of Manu "to the nearest Sapinda the inheritance next belongs."

In the case before us the sister's daughter's son seems to have two distinct advantages over the maternal uncle. Firstly, he descends from the father of the propositus, while the other from the maternal grandfather. Descendants of the nearer ancestor exclude those of the more remote. Secondly, though both are Atma Bandhus, the sister's daughter's son is ex parte paterna unlike the mother's brother who is ex parte materna. These advantages are based upon the broad principles of the law of inheritance laid down in the Mitakshara. Can it, therefore, be said that the authority of the Viramitrodaya is sufficient to outweigh the principles of the Mitakshara? I think, not. There is no authority for such a proposition. I am unable to accept the view that on any point on which the principles of the Mitakshara are clear the authority of the Viramitrodaya can have any place. [vide Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (16), and Ram Charan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (17)].

I do not, therefore, think that the capacity to offer oblation can be permitted in the present reference to influence the decision. This view is also supported by a decision of the Madras High Court [Subramania Mudaliar v. Ranganathan Chettyar (13)]. In this case the rival claimants were sister's son's son of the propositus and his maternal uncle. The decision was against the latter and in favour of the former.

One of the disqualifications of the sister's daughter's son in competition with the maternal uncle was pointed out by the learned Vakil for the respondent to be the intervention of two females in the case of the former. I do not think there is any substance in this contention. The rival claimants are no doubt both Atma Bandhus, but as has already been pointed out, the sister's daughter's son is of a nearer line and is also ex parte paterna. The rule based on the intervention of two females is, therefore, inapplicable to the present case, where the claimants do not stand on the same place [vide Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama Ayyangar (10)]. It is only when all considerations are equal that the rule applies [vide Tirumalachariar v. Andal Ammal (14)].

It was suggested in the course of his address by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the decisions of the Madras Court on points arising in the present case were in the light of the Mitakshara Law as understood in the Madras Presidency and probably influenced by the text of the Smriti Chandrika and the Saraswati Vilas, which are of high authorities in that province but not here. It is worthy of note that neither of these authorities contains any text laying down any order of precedence among Bandhus of each of the three classes inter se. All that they contain is reproduction of what is laid down in the Mitakshara. This feature of these two books was noticed in Ram Charan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (17). Nothing has been placed before us to establish the proposition that the decisions of the Madras Court on the issues raised in this case are inconsistent with the principles of the Mitakshara as expounded by such eminent authorities as Mayne, Trevelyan, Golap Chandra Sarkar Sastri, Bhattacharji and Sarvadhikari. Nor has any case-law been relied upon to show that the cardinal principles of the Mitakshara have received a provincial interpretation in the Madras decisions.

Having given my most careful consideration to the reference, my opinion is that the sister's daughter's son has preference over the maternal uncle under the law of inheritance as laid down in the Mitakshara.

THORNHILL, J.—The appellant, Uma Sankar Prasad, claims to succeed to the estate of Chuman Lall, deceased, on the ground that he, as sister's daughter's son of the said deceased, must, under the Mitakshara Law of Inheritance, be preferred to the maternal uncle of the said deceased. Both are Bhinna Gotra Sapindas or Bandhus. It is admitted the sister's daughter's son confers no spiritual benefits on the deceased whereas the maternal uncle does.

It was on this account the learned Vakil for the appellant devoted a considerable time to the meaning of "Sapinda" relationship. He has authoritatively shown that the word "Pinda" as used in the Mitakshara is used in the sense of "body" and not in the sense of "funeral cakes" and that Sapindaship is based upon community of corporeal particles, or, in other words, upon consanguinity. The Mitakshara, after enumerating the three classes of Bandhus, that is to say, those related to the person himself, those related to his father and those related to his mother, declares that "by reason of mere affinity, the cognate kindred of the deceased himself are his successors in the first instance, on failure of them his father's cognate kindred or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred. This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended."

Thus it would appear that the order of priority of the three classes of Bandhus is established, but the Mitakshara lays down no rules for our guidance as to the order of succession inter se of the Bandhus comprised in each class, but case-law has made it clear that in the system of inheritance under the Mitakshara school propinquity or nearness of relationship is the guiding principle for determining the inheritance.

The Viramitrodaya by Mitra Missir, which is an authority to be looked to of what may have been left doubtful by the Mitakshara [Gridhari Lall Roy v. Government of Bengal

(2)] says at page 194: "Greatness of propinquity is alone the criterion of succession."

The method of counting Sapinda relationship according to the Mitakshara is referred to in Mayne, 8th Edition, page 707, but no matter what method of counting is adopted, the maternal uncle in the present case would be nearer in degree of relationship.

It is, however, argued that the appellant's claim must be postponed in conformity with the two rules which are to be found in Trevelyan's Hindu Law, Second Edition, page 401:—

(1) In each of these classes as between cognates related through the father of the deceased and those connected through his mother, preference is given to those related through his father.

(2) Subject to the above, the nearer line excludes the more remote.

The former of these rules appears to be founded on Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliar (12). There the plaintiffs compromised with a number of the defendants and the competition for the decision by the Court rested between the males and females. The case does not appear to me to satisfactorily lay down any cardinal rule. In Tirumalachariar v. Andal Ammal (14) the competition was between Bandhus of equal degree in nearness to the propositus. The learned Judges in their judgment stated: "We base our decision on the general preference exhibited by the Mitakshara for the male over the female line. We think that that preference, of which it is unnecessary to give instances, may legitimately be extended so as to prefer, all other considerations being equal, that claimant between whom and the stem there intervenes only one female link, to that claimant who is separated from the stem by two such links."

This seems to indicate that preference of a male line over female was resorted to because the competition was between Bandhus of the same class and in the same degree of propinquity.

There has been one case, however, which has been referred to, Madho v. Janki (35), decided in the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court, where a competitor connected through the father, though further removed from the propositus by one degree, was preferred to a competitor connected through the mother. There seemed to be a doubt in the mind of the Court as to whether the successful competitor was a Gotraja Sapinda or a Bandhu, and admittedly the law applied was the Mitakshara as interpreted and followed in Western India. It cannot, therefore, be taken as laying down a principle to be followed in the present case.

The second rule appears to be based upon the decision in Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (11), where it is said that "the doctrine of religious benefit ought not to be resorted to in derogation of the great principles pervading the law of inheritance under the Mitakshara system. The first of such principles is that the nearer line excludes the more remote." In this case also the competition was between persons who were removed from the propositus, or deceased owner, by an equal number of degrees of relationship. This was followed in Krishna Ayyangar v. Venkatarama (10), where the competitors were also removed from the propositus in an equal number of degrees and where the Court decided that an Atma Bandhu had preference to a Pitri Bandhu. Such rules, if applied in the present case, would seem to me to be completely inconsistent with the principle "Greatness of propinquity is alone the criterion of succession." It is pointed out in Mohandas v. Krishnabai (28) that the maternal uncle occupied amongst Bandhus an important status. The passages from the Mitakshara, quoted at pages 40 and 41 of the judgment in the Calcutta Full Bench case, Omrit Koomare Dabee v. Luckhee Narain Chuckerbitty (1), tend to show that the maternal uncle was regarded by Yajnavalkya as the principal representative Bandhu, while the passage from the Viramitrodaya cited at page 42 is still more clear upon the point.

In Upper India, however, where the Viramitrodaya is taken as the greatest authority, Chapter III, Part I, section 11, pages 157, 158, there is a distinct indication that as between Bandhus of the same class a rule of preference may be found in the quantity of spiritual benefit which they confer. In Buddha Singh v. Lattu Singh (6), where the dispute was between agnates, the Privy Council made it clear that while under the Mitakshara the Sapinda relationship arises from community of blood and the right to offer oblations, still it does not exclude the right to offer oblations from consideration as a test of propinquity or nearness of blood. No case has been cited showing that the right to offer oblations may not be taken into consideration as a test of propinquity when dealing with the claims of Bandhus of the same class.

I would, therefore, hold on the ground of propinquity the maternal uncle has preference over the sister's daughter's son.

By THE COURT.—The order of the Full Court is that in a family governed by the Mitakshara school of law the maternal uncle of the last male owner is preferred to the sister's daughter's son as next heir to the estate. The case will be returned to the Division Bench for disposal.

JUDGMENT OF THE DIVISION BENCH.

MILLER, C. J., AND IMAM, J.—(August 6, 1918).—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Gaya, dated the 16th June 1915. The suit was instituted on the 3rd March 1913. The plaintiff seeks a declaration that he is the nearest Bandhu and legal heir to the property of Babu Chaman Lal Upadhyaya and entitled to succeed to his estate after the death of his widow, who died on the 30th August 1912. He further claims a declaration that neither of the defendants, whose claims to the estate are based upon a deed of sale and a deed of adoption executed by the widow a few months before her death, has any lawful title to the property and that the said deed of sale and deed of adoption may be declared void and that possession of the property may be given to the plaintiff. Chaman Lal died on the 23rd November 1910, leaving a widow Musammat Parmeshwari Koer but no issue. Under the Mitakshara Law which governs the family, his wife Parmeshwari succeeded as his next heir taking a life interest, and on her death on the 30th August 1912 the succession to Chaman Lal's estate re-opened. The plaintiff Uma Shankar Prasad Prasad claims to be the nearest Bandhu, there being no son or agnatic relation of Chaman Lal alive. He traces his relationship through his mother Poon Bibi, who is the daughter of Chaman Lal's sister Musammat Chuni Bibi. Defendant No. 1, Musammat Nageshwari Koer, was a sister of Musammat Parmeshwari and she claims an 8-annas share in the property, alleging that she acquired it by purchase from her sister during the latter's lifetime by a Kabala, dated the 28th April 1912, the sale being for valuable consideration and justified by legal necessity. The defendant No. 2, Ganesh Prasad Pandey, is a nephew of Nageshwari, being the son of her deceased brother Ram Prasad Pandey, and he claims the remaining half of the estate which was not acquired by his aunt Nageshwari under the Kabala referred to, alleging that he is the adopted son of Chaman Lal, the ceremony having been performed by Chaman Lal's widow Parmeshwari after her husband's death with his verbal permission and under his instructions, and in support of this he relies upon a deed of adoption executed by Parmeshwari on the same day as the Kabala just mentioned in favour of Nageshwari. It is clear that if the defendants' case can be made out, they would defeat the title of the plaintiff even if he proved his relationship to Chaman Lal. The defendants, however, by their written statements set up a second line of defence. They say that the plaintiff is not the son of Poon Bibi and they go further and say that Poon Bibi never had a child at all and, therefore, the plaintiff cannot be her son. The written statement on behalf of the defendant No. 1 states in paragraph 3 as follows:—"That the plaintiff is not the son of Musammat Poon Bibi and is not the grandson of Musammat Chuni Bibi. As a matter of fact no child has been born to Musammat Poon Bibi." The written statement on behalf of defendant No. 2 also says in paragraph 4: "That the plaintiff's allegation in paragraph 1 of his plaint that he is the son of Musammat Poon Bibi the daughter of Musammat Chuni Bibi, who is the sister of the late Babu Chaman Lal Upadhyaya, is entirely false and the genealogical table therein referred to is also untrue and false and incomplete and has been fabricated to support a false case and as a matter of fact no child has been born to the said Poon Bibi and the plaintiff cannot be and is not either the son of Poon Bibi or grandson of Musammat Chuni Bibi." It would have been sufficient for the defendants simply to deny the parentage of the plaintiff, but they have by their written statements set up a case which they called evidence to support that it was entirely untrue to say that Poon Bibi had ever borne a child. At the trial the learned Subordinate Judge arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiff was not the son of Poon Bibi on the ground that she had not in fact given birth to any child. He, however, decided that assuming the plaintiff to be the son of Poon Bibi he was not the nearest heir to Chaman Lal, but that the latter's maternal uncle who was alive had a prior claim to inherit his nephew's property. Having come to this conclusion, he thought it was not necessary to decide the other issues which were raised by the defendants as to the Kabala and the deed of adoption upon which they relied. We should like to say here that in our opinion it is desirable when issues of fact are raised before the Court of first instance that those issues about which evidence has been adduced should be considered and determined by the trial Judge notwithstanding that the determination of one issue only may decide the case in favour of one or other of the parties. In the event of the judgment being overruled on appeal upon the issues in fact decided, it becomes necessary to send back the case on remand to the Court of first instance to have the other issues determined, and this must necessarily involve additional expense to the parties which might have been avoided had those issues been determined in the first instance.

From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed and asks this Court to overrule the findings of fact as well as the conclusions of law arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge. There are certain general principles which ought to guide the Court of Appeal in dealing with questions of fact which have been decided by the trial Court. The Court which tries the case has a great advantage over the Appellate Court in that the Judge of first instance has an opportunity which is denied to the Appellate Court of observing the demeanour and behaviour of the witnesses when giving their evidence before him and has special facilities for judging of their credibility, and, therefore, as a general rule the Court of Appeal should not readily disturb the findings of fact arrived at by the trial Judge, even if it might be inclined to take a different view from reading the evidence, but if the Appellate Court is satisfied beyond all reasonable doubt on considering the evidence that the findings are erroneous, then it ought to interfere. Or again if the reasons given by the Judge of the lower Court for arriving at his conclusions are such that they cannot be supported, then the Court of Appeal is clearly entitled to disregard those findings and form its own independent judgment of the facts from the evidence and probabilities of the case. As already mentioned, the case made by the defendants both in their written statements and by their evidence is that Poon Bibi never had a child at all. Both Poon Bibi and her husband have given evidence to the effect that the plaintiff is their son. This is supported by a considerable volume of evidence of relations and neighbours who support the plaintiff's case. It is inconceivable that Poon Bibi and her husband could possibly be mistaken as to the fact of her having had a child or children, and it is highly improbable that the neighbours and relations who speak to the circumstances surrounding the birth of this child could have been deceived as to the fact that Poon Bibi had given birth to a child. The nature of the defence, therefore, involves a charge of wilful conspiracy to defraud, certainly on the part of Poon Bibi and her husband, and almost as certainly involves in that conspiracy the others who were near neighbours at the time and who speak to the events connected with the birth of a child by Poon Bibi. Moreover, the fact that a woman has borne a child is one which can be established without any reasonable doubt by proper medical examination by qualified doctors, and in the present case evidence of this nature has been adduced by the plaintiff in the form of certificates given by two lady doctors holding a distinguished position in charge of the Dufferin Hospital at

Lucknow, and one of these ladies has also given oral evidence to the effect that Poon Bibi has at some previous time borne a child.

Altogether apart from Poon Bibi and her husband Kalika Prasad, some 7 witnesses gave evidence to the effect that the plaintiff was Poon Bibi's son and in addition two medical certificates were put in, one dated the 9th September 1913 signed by Mrs. Hutton, the Lady Superintendent of the Dufferin Hospital at Lucknow who was temporarily in charge during the absence of Miss. O'Brien, the permanent doctor in charge, and another dated the 4th February 1914 signed by Miss O'Brien who had then resumed her duties and who was subsequently examined as a witness. These documents certify that Poon Bibi had been examined by the ladies in question and that she had at some period borne a child, and Miss O'Brien's evidence is to the same effect. There is, therefore, a large volume of positive evidence in support of this part of the plaintiff's case. The evidence of the defendants on this issue is of a negative character only and is to the effect that Poon Bibi never had a child. The defendants' main witnesses consisted of the defendant Nageshwari Koer herself who is a sister-in-law of Poon Bibi, Lalita Bibi a sister of Poon Bibi, and Chandrika Koer the wife of a distant relation. In addition Ram Lal and Ram Saran Ram, old servants of Chaman Lal and now in the service of one or other of the defendants, were called and stated that Poon Bibi never had a son. The other witnesses who were called spoke to the other issues in the suit but added nothing material to the question now under consideration. Poon Bibi and her husband Kalika Prasad as well as the principal witnesses called for the plaintiff resided at Badaun near Lucknow, whereas the defendants and their witnesses resided in the District of Gaya some hundreds of miles distant. The plaintiff's witnesses, therefore, would obviously be in a better position to speak to the truth of the plaintiff's parentage than those of the defendants, but at the same time one would hardly expect that the sister and sister-in-law of Poon Bibi could have remained in ignorance of the fact that that lady had borne a son. Although there was nothing in the nature of a quarrel between them, Poon Bibi does not appear to have had any close association with her relations at Gaya since her marriage, which took place some 20 years or more before the date of the suit. During that time so far as the evidence goes, she visited Gaya very seldom and only on ceremonial occasions, one being when Chaman Lal died and another on the death of his widow. It appears from the evidence of Lalita Bibi that she was anxious that the defendants should succeed and would be very grieved if they should fail, and the three ladies who supported the defendants' case, including Nageshwari herself, were undoubtedly on very intimate terms with each other. Both Lalita Bibi and Chandrika affirmed that they had not been informed by anybody as to the nature of the evidence that would be required of them and that until the moment they were examined they had no idea as to the facts they would be asked to depose to. Such a state of things is so improbable that it casts considerable suspicion upon the ingenuousness of their evidence.

Looking at the case broadly, the first outstanding feature is that the existence of the plaintiff as the reputed son of Poon Bibi and her husband cannot be disputed. The defendants, beyond denying his parentage, do not attempt in their written statement to set up any affirmative case alleging who his parents were. It was suggested, however, in the course of the trial that he was probably the son of Kalika Prasad by his first wife, it being admitted that Poon Bibi was the second wife. The evidence on this point, which is not contradicted, appears to make it quite clear that although Kalika Prasad had been married some years before he married Poon Bibi, his first wife died before the Gaona ceremony was performed, and, therefore, the marriage was never consummated. On reading the whole of the evidence we should have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff has established satisfactorily that he was the son of Poon Bibi and Kalika Prasad, but as the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived at a different conclusion it becomes necessary to examine his judgment with care to see how he arrives at that conclusion. The learned Judge in the earlier part of the judgment has made a calculation, based upon the evidence of Poon Bibi herself and the evidence contained in one of the medical certificates, from which he arrived at the conclusion that the plaintiff, being admittedly 18 years of age or over at the time when the judgment was delivered, could not possibly have been the son of Poon Bibi. With respect to the learned Judge we cannot help feeling that he has misinterpreted the effect of Poon Bibi's evidence, where she states that she was married 20 or 23 years ago. He has assumed that the effect of this evidence is that Poon Bibi's marriage according to her own statement took place either exactly 20 years ago or exactly 23 years ago, and that in either case the age of the plaintiff coupled with the other evidence in the case does not fit in with that statement. If, however, the marriage took place somewhere between 20 and 23 years previously to the date when her evidence was given, which was in March 1914, the difficulty which weighed on the mind of the learned Judge at once disappears. It is a well known fact that Pardanashin ladies frequently have no very definite and precise ideas of time or dates and are not accustomed to calculate the number of years that have passed since a given event with any great nicety, and it may safely be assumed that when Poon Bibi in answer to questions put to her in cross-examination stated that she was married "about 20 or 23 years ago", she was allowing a margin to cover an event about the exact date of which she was not absolutely positive. The certificate (Exhibit 1) relied upon by the learned Judge as his starting point was that granted by Miss O'Brien, in which she says that she is of opinion that Poon Bibi is about 39 years of age on the date when she examined her, which was on the 4th February 1914. This agrees with Poon Bibi's own evidence given in the following month, when she deposed that she was 39 years of age and that her son was then 18. She further says that she was married at the age of 17 and that her son was born 4 years later,

UMA SHANKAR PRASAD V. NAGESHWARI KOER.

Taking the time when her evidence was given, if she was then 39 years of age and was married at the age of 17, that would mean that she had been married 22 years and if her son was born 4 years after her marriage that would make him exactly 18, which appears to have been in fact his age at that time and unless it is to be taken that her statement that she was married about 20 or 23 years ago is inconsistent with her having been married in fact 22 years ago, the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge does not appear to be well founded. It is only necessary to read that portion of his judgment in which he deals with this matter to see how he has been misled. After stating that the onus of proof is on the plaintiff he refers to Poon Bibi's evidence and continues: "Her deposition was begun to be recorded on the 28th March 1914. The lady doctor's certificate Exhibit 1 shows her age on 4th February 1914 to be about 39 years only. She also gives her age in the deposition to be 39 years. She says that she was married at the age of 17 and she was married 20 or 23 years ago from the time of her deposition. She could not have been married 23 years ago, as in that case her age at the time of her deposition would be 40 years, which neither she nor the doctor says. I, therefore, have no alternative but to take the other figure, namely, 20 years from 1914 March, as the probable time of her marriage from her own words. She then says that 4 years after her marriage she gave birth to a male child, meaning apparently the plaintiff. Therefore, the plaintiff was born to her 16 years ago from 1914. Now, therefore, the plaintiff would be 17 years of age or more properly speaking 17 years and a few months old, i. e., not even a major. The plaintiff, however, says that he is a major now..... From these it follows that Poon Bibi's first child, if there was one, is not the plaintiff who is now over 18 years of age, though she apparently means him as her first child." It seems to us with great respect to the learned Judge that having rejected 23 years ago as the date of Poon Bibi's marriage he was not justified in saying that he had no other alternative but to take the other figure, namely, 20 years ago, as the probable time of her marriage from her own words. An obvious alternative was to take a period somewhere between 20 and 23 years, which would make the whole of the evidence consistent. Another reason why the Judge rejected the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff on this issue was because from the appearance of the plaintiff whom he saw in Court, it seemed to him that he was in fact over 21 years of age. There are few things more difficult than to guess the age of a person by his appearance within 2 or 3 years, and we do not think that the learned Judge was entitled to rely upon his own judgment based on the appearance of the plaintiff in coming to the conclusion that he was in fact 21 years of age and not, as he would have been in June 1915 when the judgment was delivered, something over 19 years if the evidence of his mother is accepted. The only other reason which influenced the learned Judge in rejecting the evidence as to the plaintiff's age was a statement made by the witness Raghunandan Missir, who stated that on the birth of the plaintiff he was sent by Chaman Lal with clothes, dolls, etc., to Budaun and that that was 17 or 18 years ago. That evidence was given in June 1915 when the plaintiff would be about 19 years of age, but the fact that this witness may have been a year or even two years out in his calculation appears to be such a trivial matter that it ought not to have weighed with the learned Judge as against the great bulk of positive evidence given by the witnesses who were called on behalf of the plaintiff. It is quite true that the evidence of this witness was somewhat discounted by the fact that he had on a previous occasion in an affidavit sworn that the age of Nageshwari Koer the defendant was about 25 years, whereas she was obviously older than that. But assuming, as the Judge was quite entitled to do, that this witness was unreliable, that was not sufficient reason for discarding the whole of the other evidence given by the plaintiff's witnesses.

Turning to the evidence of the lady doctors it seems to us that the learned Judge has given no sort of reasons which can be accepted for refusing to believe this evidence. The first certificate was granted on the 9th September 1913, when Poon Bibi was examined by Mrs. Huffton. On applying later to endeavour to get this lady to attend as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff it was discovered that she had left the Dufferin Hospital and had gone to England. The plaintiff thereupon applied for a further examination by Miss O'Brien, who had resumed the duties of doctor in charge when Mrs. Huffton went away, and a second examination was accordingly made, this time by Miss O'Brien, on the 4th February 1914, when that lady granted the certificate already referred to, and on the 21st January 1915 Miss O'Brien was examined on commission on behalf of the plaintiff. It appears that Poon Bibi gave evidence on commission on the 28th March 1914, that is, something less than two months after Miss O'Brien's certificate had been granted. Nothing was said by Poon Bibi in her evidence either about the certificate or about the fact that she had been medically examined shortly before by Miss O'Brien and previously by Mrs. Huffton and these certificates had not at that time apparently been filed in the case. This fact appears to have weighed very much with the learned Judge, and from that he argues that the certificates could not really have been obtained on the dates alleged but must have been obtained at a much later period and after Poon Bibi gave her evidence, because she did not mention them and they were not filed until the 2nd January 1915. He then goes on and says that it is doubtful whether the real Poon Bibi was produced before the lady doctors at all and arrives at the conclusion that the certificates are so suspicious that he cannot act upon them. The suspicious nature of these certificates, he says, is corroborated by the persistent refusal of Poon Bibi to be examined by any Gaya lady doctor, and then the learned Judge continues as follows: "She had experience of lady doctors of Lucknow and she suspected that the Gaya lady doctors could be purchased with money and thus I think her refusal so persistent. Had she really given birth to a child and had she any reason to think that the lady doctors would do their work honestly, then I think she would not have refused in the way she had done in this case. I cannot from these certificates hold that Poon Bibi, the sister's daughter of Chaman Lal and the wife of Kalika Prasad, gave birth to any child..... Even if these certificates be considered reliable about which I have already said that they are not; I cannot think that they would go to shew that the plaintiff is the son of Poon Bibi." Now it will be seen from the reference which I have made to the learned Judge's judgment that he first of all doubts the genuineness of the certificate of the 4th February 1914 granted by Miss O'Brien, and, secondly, he doubts whether Poon Bibi was in fact the lady who was examined by Miss O'Brien, and, thirdly, he hints pretty clearly that the evidence of these two ladies had been deliberately bought by those acting on behalf of the plaintiff. Not only is there no evidence to justify these conclusions but it seems to us that the slightest consideration of the circumstances of the case must lead to the conclusion that these findings of the learned Judge are wholly unwarranted and cast an unmerited slur upon the character of two ladies who have been devoting their lives to a most laudable object.

First of all turning to the evidence of Poon Bibi, it is obvious that at the time when she gave her evidence, which was rather less than two months after the date of Miss O'Brien's certificate, she at all events was acquainted with Miss O'Brien, because when asked in cross-examination whether she was willing to be examined by a lady doctor, she stated that she had no objection to being examined but would not be examined by any lady doctor from Gaya where the defendants live, and she then stated after her examination was completed that she would keep a lady doctor of her own, Miss O'Brien of Lucknow who treated her, by her side if she were to be examined by a lady doctor of any other place. Poon Bibi could obviously not have made a statement of this sort unless at that time she had at least been acquainted with Miss O'Brien, and from the evidence of Miss O'Brien herself it appears that the first occasion upon which she saw Poon Bibi at all was on the 4th February 1914 and that although she was not her family doctor, she had seen her 3 or 4 times since and had treated her. It is, therefore, quite impossible to believe that this certificate, dated the 4th February 1914, was not obtained until many months later, as found by the learned Judge. Again it seems to us that the learned Judge's suspicions that the lady produced for examination by the doctors was not Poon Bibi is totally refuted by the evidence of Poon Bibi herself, who at that time stated in the passage of her evidence already referred to that she would like Miss O'Brien to be present if any examination were made by the defendants' doctor. If in fact those conducting the case on behalf of the plaintiff, including Poon Bibi herself, which is the suggestion, had been guilty of the fraud of obtaining some other lady to impersonate Poon Bibi for the purpose of medical examination and had in this manner imposed upon Miss O'Brien, it is inconceivable that Poon Bibi should insist upon Miss O'Brien being present when a further examination was made, which would inevitably result in the fraud being discovered by Miss O'Brien. Again if these certificates were concocted and were not obtained until sometime after Poon Bibi had given evidence in March 1914, there would appear to be no possible reason for dating them at a much earlier period. Or if again the lady doctors were themselves involved in this conspiracy, which is suggested by the learned Subordinate Judge, it would seem to follow that the certificate from Mrs. Hufiton was obtained from her at a time when she had left India and gone to England and that those conducting the case on behalf of the plaintiff had gone to the trouble of writing to England to a lady doctor whom they did not know, offering her a bribe to forge a certificate on behalf of an Indian lady who was nothing to her, and that the lady doctor in question had consented to making herself a party to this conspiracy. For these reasons it seems to us that the grounds upon which the learned Judge based his decision in rejecting the plaintiff's evidence cannot be supported, and once it is admitted that Musammatt Poon Bibi had at some time or other borne a child, the evidence of the defendants' witnesses who pledged their word to the fact, which they positively swear to, that she never had a child at all, is entirely unreliable and cannot be accepted. In these circumstances having from a perusal of the evidence come to the conclusion that the preponderating weight of evidence is in favour of the plaintiff, it follows that in our opinion that part of the learned Judge's judgment which finds that the plaintiff is not the son of a daughter of a sister of Chaman Lal Upadhya must be set aside and the plaintiff must be held to have established the fact that he is the son of Kalika Prasad and Poon Bibi.

This, however, is not sufficient to entitle him to the declaration No. 1 prayed for in the plaint to the effect that he is the next reversioner as nearest Bandhu and legal heir of Chaman Lal Upadhya, seeing that Raghunandan Missir, the maternal uncle of Chaman Lal, was alive at the date of the latter's death. When this appeal originally came before this Bench, the question of whether the plaintiff, assuming him to be the son of Poon Bibi, was entitled to succeed to Chaman Lal's property in priority to Raghunandan was considered and as the question appeared to be one of some doubt and difficulty, it was referred to a Full Bench of five Judges, who after considering the matter found by a majority that Chaman Lal's maternal uncle Raghunandan was under the Mitakshara Law entitled to succeed in priority to the plaintiff. The result is that the plaintiff in this case fails to establish his claim to the property in question and this appeal must be dismissed, but having regard to the fact that the greater part of the argument before us was directed to the question of fact which has been decided in favour of the appellant, each party will bear their own costs of the hearing before this Division Bench. The costs of the reference to the Full Bench have already been dealt with in the judgment on that reference.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The appellant before us is the plaintiff in a suit for the redemption of a mortgage. The property in question originally belonged to 5 brothers—Ram Dayal, Uma Charan, Pran Krishna, Akhil Chandra and Nishi. In the year 1896, the first four of these brothers executed a mortgage by way of conditional sale in favour of defendant No. 4. Thereafter Pran Krishna purchased the share of his three brothers Ram Dayal, Akhil and Nishi. Having done so, he mortgaged certain properties, including some of the properties which were the subject of the prior mortgage, to defendants Nos. 2 and 3. That was in 1899 or 1900. On the 31st October 1900 the defendant No. 4 brought a suit on his mortgage, and on the 18th June 1901 obtained a final decree for foreclosure. The puisne mortgagees, the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, were not made parties to the suit. In 1902 the defendant No. 4 sold his decree to the defendant No. 1. In the same year the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 instituted a suit upon their mortgage against the mortgagor Pran Krishna, making the defendant No. 1 also a party defendant. In execution of the decree which they obtained the mortgagees (defendants Nos. 2 and 3) purchased the equity of redemption in the property mortgaged to them. On the 28th March 1910 the plaintiff purchased the rights of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3. He then brought this suit to redeem the defendant No. 1, the successor-in-interest of the original mortgagee (defendant No. 4). The sole question which arises is whether the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the whole of the property originally mortgaged to defendant No. 4 or whether he is only entitled to redeem the four-fifths share which came to be in the possession of Pran Krishna. The Courts below have held that the plaintiff is not entitled to redeem the whole of the property in opposition to the wishes of the mortgagee.

In this appeal it is contended for the plaintiff that that is a mistaken view of the law and that according to the cases a partial owner of the equity of redemption is entitled to redeem the whole of the mortgaged property. The learned Pleader has cited the cases of Pearce v. Morris (1) and Huthasanam Nambudri v. Parameswaran Nambudri (2). He has also referred to the statement of the rule in Sir Rash Behari Ghose's work on the Law of Mortgage in India (4th Edition, Volume I, page 249). The learned author says that the general rule is that a person who has any right at all to redeem, has a right to redeem the whole of the mortgaged properties and cannot be compelled to redeem only the part in which he may be interested; and in support of the proposition authorities, English and Indian, are cited. The learned Pleader for the defendants respondent urges on the other hand that the rule enacted in section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act is a rule intended for the benefit of the mortgagee and that a mortgagor interested, in a part only of the equity of redemption has no corresponding right. The authorities, however, as they stand, are against him and the question appears to be concluded by the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Baikantha Nath Dey v. Mohesh Chandra Dey (3).

The result is that this appeal should be allowed. The decree of the trial Court should be varied by stating that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the whole of the property originally mortgaged to defendant No. 4, on payment of the amount due on the mortgage to be ascertained in the manner indicated in the judgment of the Munsif. Something was said as to the rate of interest allowed by the learned District Judge. But this point as to interest was not pressed. The plaintiff is entitled to his costs throughout as against defendant No. 1.

Easement of necessity, requisites of.

An easement of necessity can only arise when the property cannot be used at all without the easement, and not where the easement is merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property. [p. 671, col. 2.]

An easement of necessity points to the fact that there must be absolute necessity before the law will compel a land-owner to submit to so detrimental a right as an easement in his land, a right in reality, though not in theory, imposed on his land against his will. [p. 672, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna.

Mr. P. K. Sen, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Syed Mahmud and D. N. Sircar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal relates to a question of easement claimed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff and the defendant are cousins and there was a partition between them in the year 1904, when all their properties immovable and moveable were divided between them. There were two contiguous houses owned by them jointly. On partition the eastern one fell to the share of the defendant and the western to that of the plaintiff. Prior to the partition there was a doorway between the two houses and other necessary requirements which were suitable for the enjoyment of the occupants of both the houses. In the building allotted to the plaintiff there is a 3rd storey or second floor, the access to which was through the terrace or mundera appertaining to the building allotted to the defendant. The defendant interfered with this passage and closed up the way to it. The plaintiff, therefore, instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, for a declaration that the defendant had no right to interfere with the plaintiff in the use of the terrace B C in the map attached to the plaint and for a perpetual injunction against him. This claim in the plaint was based upon the fact that the way to the 3rd story was in existence prior to the date of the partition and had since been continuously and without any interruption used and enjoyed by the plaintiff up to the time of the interference on the part of the defendant. The right of the plaintiff to use the terrace in dispute was disputed by the defendant. The principal issue raised in the case was issue No. 3—"Has the plaintiff acquired any right of easement in the property in dispute and has he any right to restrain the defendant from closing the door and passage?" The Munsif who tried the case held that the plaintiff did not prove his right to use the disputed land which is a part of the defendant's building as an easement for 20 years, and, therefore, had no right accrued to him. In dealing with this issue the Munsif observed that in the plaint the right of easement claimed is said to have been acquired by user. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the decision of the Munsif and decreed the plaintiff's suit. The finding of the Munsif that the plaintiff failed to prove that he had acquired under the law the right of easement upon the ground of user has not been disturbed by the learned Subordinate Judge. In this appeal it is not disputed by the learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent that the plaintiff's right of easement on the ground of user must fail. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has granted the plaintiff's right to the use of the defendant's land as an easement of necessity. It is objected on behalf of the defendant that the lower Court was wrong in giving decree to the plaintiff upon the aforesaid ground as it was not urged in the plaint. The objection was, however, overruled on the ground that there was nothing to show in the plaint that the plaintiff claimed a right of easement of user and not a right of easement of necessity. Reading the plaint and the issues, it is difficult to support the Subordinate Judge in this view; but it is not necessary to pursue this point further, for admitting that the plaintiff was entitled in appeal before the Court below to raise the point, it is obvious that the finding of the Court below that the plaintiff is entitled to the right of way claimed as an easement of necessity cannot be supported.

The plaintiff has not produced any partition deed. On the other hand, the deed of the agreement of partition executed by him in favour of the defendant has been produced by the latter and is marked Exhibit J. The Munsif clearly says in his judgment that there is no trace in this deed of agreement, Exhibit J, of the right set up on behalf of the plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge also has accepted this in the following words: "On referring to the partition-deed it appears that there is provision for closing a common passage and a drain and it was silent as to the way leading to the 3rd storey which has now fallen into the plaintiff's share." I have also gone through this deed, and it appears to me that the Courts below are correct in the view that in it there is absolutely no mention of the path claimed by the plaintiff. The right of the plaintiff to the use of the defendant's terrace as a way for the plaintiff to his 3rd storey has not been expressly granted or reserved in the deed. There is no reservation by implication even of any such right in the deed, not even expressions of a general right to the use of the building allotted to him, such as "appurtenances", "appertaining" or "rights and accompaniments" or "existing rights", or "rights used, occupied and enjoyed", and a place in the document. It is needless, therefore, to consider the authorities quoted at the Bar, which have construed the aforesaid expressions as being sufficient or insufficient as conveying the right to the use of certain easements. It is true that the terrace in the defendant's building was used as a passage to the 3rd storey when both the houses were jointly owned by the plaintiff and the defendant and that the plaintiff has not constructed any other way, to the 3rd storey. The finding of the Court below is that "even after partition the plaintiff has been using this way which is the only way to go up to the 3rd storey and without which the chhat is unapproachable, for a very long time without any objection." But there is no finding, and my attention has not been invited to any evidence on the record, that the plaintiff could not in any way construct a passage from his own land leading to the third storey in question. No doubt the passage in question might be the most convenient way for the plaintiff and that it was used so long by him. The plaintiff ought to have exhausted all possible ways of communication to the third storey. On the record as it stands, it is impossible to hold that it was the only way by which the plaintiff could enjoy the use of the house after the partition. Indeed looking again at the plan of the house annexed to the plaint, which might be treated as a part of the judgment, it is obvious that from his own house on different points the plaintiff could construct a staircase leading to the third storey in question. Whatever may have been the views before, the question has been set at rest by the decision in the well-known case of Wheeldon v. Burrows (1). That case was followed in the case of Union Lighterage Co. v. London Graving Dock Co. (2) and recently in the case of Ray v. Hazeldine (3). It has been conclusively settled that an easement of necessity can only arise "when the property cannot be used at all and not where it is merely necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property," and as observed by Goddard, pages 38, 39, 6th Edition, "An easement of necessity points to the fact that there must be absolute necessity before the law will compel a land-owner to submit to so detrimental a right as an easement in his land, a right—in reality though not in theory—imposed on his land against his will. It must be borne in mind how detrimental generally it is to an estate to be burdened with an easement, what a nuisance it is to an owner of land to have another person walking at his pleasure over a field.....and how such rights may prevent building on land or using it in many of the ways the owner may desire." That principle has been embodied in section 13 of the Indian Easements Act which is not applicable to this part of the country. The principle upon which that section was enacted is based upon the English cases and is consonant to reason and common sense. Clause E of that section says: "Where a partition is made of the joint property of several persons—if an easement over the share of one of them is necessary for enjoying the share of another of them, the latter shall be entitled to such easement." The easements mentioned in clauses A, E and F of section 13 are easements of necessity. A right of way or passage is not a continuous easement, and, therefore, it can only be allowed when without the easement in question it is impossible to use the dominant tenements to which the easement is claimed. It has been urged on behalf of the respondent that at the time when the partition took place between the members of the family there was only one way to the third storey, that is, by the disputed terrace, and as no other way existed the possibility of the plaintiff being able to construct another passage cannot take away his right of easement of necessity. This point appears to have been disposed of by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Sukhdei Bibi v. Kidarnath (4), the facts of which case appear similar to this case. The right of way as an easement of necessity after partition of the joint house claimed in that case was disallowed. The observation at page 472 is that "he (the plaintiff) certainly can open a door towards the north for access to his share." It is clear from this that the plaintiff cannot claim the easement of necessity unless he can show that it is not possible for him to construct a new passage for his use: in other words, the plaintiff must make out that the use of the way claimed is one of absolute necessity and not merely necessary or convenient or that it was used so long by him. This view is supported by a string of authorities of all the Courts and it is unnecessary, therefore, to mention all of them that have been quoted at the Bar. Suffice it to say that the cases of Krishnamarazu v. Marraju (5), Esubai v. Damodar Ishivardas (6), C. H. Crowdy v. L. O'Reilly (7) and Ram Narain Shaha v. Kamala Kanta Shaha (8) are dead against the plaintiff-respondent. The authority quoted by the Subordinate Judge, namely, Charu Surnokar v. Dokouri Chunder Thakoor (9), is based on Pyer v. Carter (10) which has since been overruled. The case of Kadambini Debi v. Kali Kumar Haldar (11) refers to a right of light and air, and not to a way which is neither continuous nor always an apparent easement. Perhaps the attention of the Court was not drawn to the later decisions of the same Court.

For these reasons the appeal is allowed and the judgment of the Court below is set aside. The appeal is decreed with costs; the plaintiff's suit stands dismissed.

HADIYAR KHAN v. EMPEROR.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL NO. 588 of 1918.

September 4, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Tudball.

HADIYAR KHAN—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 477, scope of—Sessions Judge, power of, to try witness for perjury, exercise of—Summary trial, legality of—Court, duty of—Procedure.

Section 477 of the Criminal Procedure Code gives the power to a Court of Session to charge a person for any offence referred to in section 195 of the Code and committed before it. It further gives the Court of Session the power to commit for trial or to admit to bail and to try the person for the charge it has framed, but the section nowhere lays it down that the trial is to be a summary one, nor does it anywhere demand a decision which should be more prompt and speedy than that of any ordinary trial. The very powers granted in that section to a Court of Session are so unusual that it is the bounden duty of any Court exercising them to be at pains to give the accused a fair and impartial trial, in view of the fact that the Court has already had before it certain evidence upon which it may have already formed an opinion. [p. 674, col. 1.]

At the conclusion of a trial in a Sessions Court, the Sessions Judge charged one of the defence witnesses with the offence of perjury and proceeded there and then to try him under the powers conferred upon the Court by section 477 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The accused repeatedly asked for time to enable him to obtain legal advice and to put in his defence but the Court refused his prayer and convicted and sentenced him:

Held, that the Sessions Judge had, in the exercise of his jurisdiction, acted hastily and irregularly and had not given the accused a fair trial and that, therefore, the case must be re-tried. [p. 674, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Kumaun.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Appellant.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji (Government Pleader), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Hadiyar Khan has been convicted of the offence of perjury and has been sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment, including three months' solitary confinement, by the learned Sessions Judge of the Naini Tal District. The circumstances under which the appellant was tried and convicted are somewhat unusual. Two men Aziz-ul-lah and Kifayat-ul-lah were upon their trial in the Court of Session at Pilibhit on a charge of attempted murder under section 307 of the Indian Penal Code. Hadiyar Khan was called as a witness for the defence to prove that Aziz-ul-lah was actually dining with him at the time the offence is said to have been committed. The trial of Aziz-ul-lah and Kifayat-ul-lah concluded on the 2nd of August 1918 at about 5 P. M. and the Judge convicted them to ten years' rigorous imprisonment under section 307. On that very same date, namely, the 2nd of August 1918, the Judge passed an order issuing notice to the defence witnesses to show cause why they should not be prosecuted for the offence of perjury. Then the learned Sessions Judge changed his mind at once in respect to the present appellant Hadiyar Khan. As a perusal of his judgment will show, his attention was called to the provisions of section 477 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and he there and then proceeded to try Hadiyar Khan, under the powers granted by that section, for the offence of perjury which he charged against him. I have examined the record of the trial. Hadiyar Khan asked the Sessions Judge for time to enable him to appoint a lawyer and to consult him so as to enable him to put in his defence. The Sessions Judge declined to adjourn the case or to give him any further time, whereupon Hadiyar Khan refused to plead or to take any steps in his defence. As the Judge's judgment shows, he began the case against Hadiyar Khan at 5 o'clock and Hadiyar Khan from the very beginning asked for a postponement. Postponement was refused. He, therefore, refused to cross-examine. He refused to make any attempt to defend himself. He asked repeatedly to be allowed to obtain legal advice. The Judge declined to give him any further time and on the evidence taken in the presence of the accused he convicted him and sentenced him as mentioned above. He remarks in his judgment:—"Section 477 demands a prompt and speedy decision, which will bring home to the public generally the dangers a man runs in giving false evidence. I am not going to spoil the effect of section 477 by weakly granting a postponement, which would only mean that the accused would then be able to produce another lot of false witnesses leading to nothing." Section 477 grants a power which is very seldom exercised. It gives the power to a

MURLIDHAR BHAGWANDAS, In re.

Court of Session to charge a person for any offence referred to in section 195 and committed before it. It further gives the Court of Session the power to commit for trial or to admit to bail and to try the person for the charge it has framed, but the section nowhere lays it down that the trial is to be a summary trial nor does the section anywhere demand a decision which should be more prompt and speedy than that of any ordinary trial. The very powers granted in that section to a Court of Session are so unusual that it seems to me it is the bounden duty of any Court exercising them to be at pains to give the accused a fair and impartial trial, in view of the fact that the Court has already had before it certain evidence upon which it may have already formed an opinion. I should have thought that a simple sense of justice would have shown to the Court below that Hadiyar Khan was entitled to appoint a Pleader, to consult with him and to defend himself just as any ordinary person in an ordinary criminal trial. The learned Sessions Judge has in his haste made it impossible for Hadiyar Khan to defend himself. He refused to grant postponement, which he certainly ought to have granted whatever the result, and in my opinion in view of the expressions which he had already used in his judgment in the case against Aziz-ullah and Kifayat-ullah, it would have been fairer perhaps to have dealt with Hadiyar Khan in the same manner as that in which he had dealt with the remaining defence witnesses, that is, of taking action against them under section 476. It is impossible to say that the learned Sessions Judge had not power to try the case. He certainly had the power to do so, but in the exercise of his jurisdiction he has, in my opinion, acted hastily and very irregularly and has not given the appellant a fair trial. In these circumstances without expressing any opinion as to the appellant's guilt, I set aside the conviction and sentence. The case must be re-tried but it is obvious that it cannot be re-tried in the same Court. It must be transferred to a calmer atmosphere so as to enable an impartial trial to be held. I, therefore, direct that the case be re-tried in the Court of Sessions Judge of Bareilly instead of in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Kumann.

Re-trial ordered.

Extradition Act (XV of 1903), ss. 7, 8, 8A, 18—Cheating, extradition for, whether permissible—Offence not mentioned in treaty—Bail, power of Magistrate to grant—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 496.

A person accused of cheating in the Hyderabad State can be made the subject of a warrant under section 7 of the Extradition Act, notwithstanding that the offence of cheating is not mentioned in Article IV of the Treaty, dated the 8th May 1867, between the British Government and the Hyderabad State. [p. 675, col. 2.]

The provisions of section 7 (2) of the Extradition Act override the provisions of section 496 of the Criminal Procedure Code, so that a Magistrate has no power, apart from sections 8 and 8A of the Extradition Act, to admit to bail a person arrested under section 7 of the Act. [p. 676, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal reference made by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—The Chief Presidency Magistrate, finding himself in difficulties in a case which he had to deal with under the Indian Extradition Act, XV of 1903, has referred certain questions to us which he is empowered to do by section 432 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The questions are four in number, but the one of chief importance arises out of the controversy, to put it briefly, whether a person accused of cheating in the Hyderabad State can be made the subject of a warrant under section 7 of the Indian Extradition Act. If we read the Act by itself, no doubt on the point arises, because cheating is an extradition offence as appears from the Schedule to the Act. But the attention of the Chief Presidency Magistrate was called to the Extradition Treaties between the Governor-General of British India and the Hyderabad State, and having read the Treaties and referred to section 12 of the Act, a doubt did arise in his mind. It was this: Cheating is an extradition offence under the Act, but it is not one of those offences for which extradition is provided by the Treaty. Section 18 says that nothing in the Act is to derogate from the provisions of the Treaty. The argument then proceeds: if we extradite under the Act for an offence not mentioned in the Treaty, we are derogating from the provisions of the Treaty. That, to my mind, quite clearly is an argument based on the assumption that because the Treaty provides that there may be or shall be extradition in certain cases, it implies that there shall not be extradition in other cases. I can say this after listening to the arguments and after much discussion: that there is no other logical basis for the contention. For the Treaty itself does not say that there shall not be extradition in other cases, and, therefore, if it means that, it means it not by what it says but by what it implies. I do not wish for a moment to be understood as meaning that there may not be great force in that way of putting the case. But we have to determine whether or not the Treaty does imply that there should be no extradition except in the matter of offences named in the Treaty. And though there may be force in the argument urged by Mr. Thakor, it seems to me there is a great deal more force in the argument urged on the other side. When analysed and reduced to the smallest possible compass, it really comes to this, whether extraditing under the Act for an offence not mentioned in the Treaty derogates from the provisions of the Treaty, and we have to consider what the word "derogate" means. Now it certainly does not derogate from the express provisions. Therefore, again we are reduced to a consideration, whether it derogates from the implied provisions, or rather whether there are implied provisions of the kind asserted. So that we are practically reduced to the first argument over again. I cannot think that it is implied in the Treaty that there cannot be extradition for offences not mentioned in the Treaty. Principally for this reason, if we imply it, we imply that the British Government by making a Treaty with a Native State deprived itself of the power to legislate regarding a matter which fell within its own legislative power, i.e., a matter of arresting persons who are supposed to have committed certain offences in Native States. The power of making such arrests is essential where there is an Extradition Treaty and it may be very desirable where extradition is or can be arranged for otherwise than by Treaty. I cannot think that the Government intended by this Treaty to deprive itself of the power to legislate for the purpose of facilitating extradition which could be arranged for otherwise than by Treaty. To imply this seems to me to imply what I cannot think the Government wished to do: what there was no necessity for doing, and what on the whole it seems to me would be unreasonable to do. In arriving at this conclusion I am influenced by the nature of the relations between the Government of India and Native States. I do not assert that the same conclusion would be reached if the parties to the Treaty were on both sides Independent Sovereign States. I have, therefore, no difficulty in my own mind in answering the first question put by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate, which is:—

Whether in view of section 18 of the Indian Extradition Act, XV of 1903, the offence of cheating is an extradition offence so far as British India and Hyderabad State are concerned, notwithstanding its omission from Article IV of the Treaty, dated the 8th May 1867, between the British Government and Hyderabad State?

My answer is that the offence of cheating is an extradition offence so far as British India is concerned notwithstanding its omission from Article V of the Treaty. Whether it is an extradition offence so far as the Hyderabad State is concerned I really do not know, and for the purposes of this case it is quite immaterial to consider.

Questions 2 and 3 do not seem to me to need an answer for the purposes of this reference.

MURLIDHAR BHAGWANDAS, In re.

Question 4, to put it briefly, is whether the Magistrate has power to admit an arrested person to bail apart from the provisions of sections 8 and 8A of the Act. I think he has no such power. The Act directs that the person, when arrested, shall, "unless released in accordance with the provisions of this Act," be forwarded to the place and delivered to the person or authority indicated in the warrant. Then by clause 2 of section 7 and by clause 1 of the same section it is provided that the Magistrate shall act in pursuance of the warrant. If he does these things, it is not open to him to act under section 496 of the Criminal Procedure Code and to admit to bail otherwise than is provided in the Indian Extradition Act, and as the provisions in the Indian Extradition Act are so specific and so clear, there is in my mind no doubt that they override the provisions of section 496 of the Criminal Procedure Code and I would answer question 4 accordingly.

MR. HAYWARD, J.—I concur. The main question to be answered is whether cheating is an extradition offence notwithstanding its omission from Articles III and IV of the Treaty with the Hyderabad State and in view of the provisions of section 18 of the Indian Extradition Act, XV of 1903.

The question must, in my opinion, be answered in the affirmative. The effect of Articles III and IV of the Treaty referred to in this reference amounts to this, that the surrender of a person charged with cheating shall not be a bounden duty of the British Government, and it seems to me important to note that the Articles do not provide that such an offender shall not in any case be surrendered by the British Government. On the other hand, the Chief Presidency Magistrate is bound to surrender such an offender in accordance with the Schedule of the Indian Extradition Act, if the case is not covered by the provisions of section 18 of the Act. The provision there is that nothing shall be held to derogate from the provisions of the Extradition Treaty, and it has been argued that it would derogate from the Treaty, to add to it the offence of cheating. That argument, however, does not commend itself to me as a reasonable interpretation of the words used. If it had been the intention to exclude the addition of any offence, then the word "derogate" or "takeaway from" could hardly have been used. In its place would have been substituted some such word as "modify". So that, in my opinion, there cannot be said, upon a plain interpretation of the words used, to be any derogation from the provisions of the Treaty by the insertion of the offence of cheating in the Schedule of the Indian Extradition Act. It could only, in my opinion, be argued in a strained sense that there would be derogation by regarding the provisions of the Treaty as conferring some kind of freedom from liability to surrender a person accused of cheating upon the British Government. But even that argument could not be supported, because entire freedom of action is reserved to the British Government by the provisions of section 15 of the Act, which could not, in any sense, be held to be a derogation from the provisions of the Treaty under section 18 of the Act.

The subsidiary question referred to us is, whether bail could be allowed under the ordinary provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code notwithstanding the special provisions of sections 8 and 8A of the Act. It seems to me that that question must clearly be answered in the negative. The Criminal Procedure Code is a general Act and it is specially provided in the Indian Extradition Act that the accused person, when arrested, shall be forwarded to the authority indicated in the warrant unless released in accordance with the provisions of this Act. That seems to me clearly a provision that the accused person must not be released in accordance with the provisions of any other Act, and the only provisions for his release on bail are those provided in sections 8 and 8A of the Act. The general provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code must, in this matter, yield, according to the well-known rule, to the special provisions of the Indian Extradition Act.

Answers accordingly.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 71, 147, 149, 325—Rioting and causing grievous hurt—Separate convictions and sentences, legality of—Practice of Patna High Court—Calcutta High Court, uniform course of decisions of, whether to be followed.

In addition to a conviction under section 147 of the Penal Code an accused who has himself caused grievous hurt to the opposite party cannot be separately convicted under section 325 of the Code. [p. 678, col. 1.]

Separate convictions and sentences, therefore, under section 325 read with section 149 of the Penal Code and section 147 of the Code are illegal. [p. 678, col. 2.]

Where there is a long course of decisions by the High Court of Calcutta upon a particular point, the Patna High Court will not depart from that settled course. [p. 678, col. 2.]

Criminal revision against an order of the Sessions Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 3rd May 1918, modifying that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Banka, dated the 22nd April 1918.

Mr. P. B. Das, (with him Mr. Abani Bhusan Mukherjee), for the Petitioners.

Mr. Manohar Lall, (Assistant Government-Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—The petitioners Paltu, Sarju, Jinpal and Jahar Singh have been sentenced for rioting with the common object of committing theft in respect of the crops of the complainant Juglal. Juglal and his brother Hitlal were injured on Juglal's side, while Paltu was injured on the side of the petitioners. The trial Court found all the petitioners guilty of rioting under section 147, and of grievous hurt under section 325 read with 149 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentenced them to six months' rigorous imprisonment for each offence; the punishments taking effect consecutively.

On appeal the learned Sessions Judge has affirmed the convictions and two of the sentences, observing that Sarju and Jinpal had been shown by the evidence to have taken part in the assault and that in their case the application of section 149, Indian Penal Code, was not necessary. In regard to the other two appellants before him the learned Sessions Judge observed that although they were not shown to have themselves struck any one, separate sentences were not illegal. The learned Judge has relied on Queen-Empress v. Bana Punja (1), but reduced the sentences on Paltu and Jahar to one month's rigorous imprisonment for the offence under sections 325 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code. Now the only question that has been argued before us is whether separate sentences are legal. The learned Sessions Judge has not altered the convictions recorded by the trying Magistrate, and we take it that Sarju and Jinpal still remain convicted, not of the substantive offence of grievous hurt under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code, but of a constructive offence under that section by reason of the application of section 149 of the Indian Penal Code. Obviously the learned Sessions Judge could not have set aside the convictions under sections 325 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code and substituted a conviction under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code, because these two petitioners were not charged with the substantive offence in the trial Court, nor would it be proper for us in revision to convict them of this offence in the absence of any opportunity to plead to a charge in respect of it. We will, therefore, only consider whether the separate convictions and sentences under section 325 read with section 149 of the Indian Penal Code against all the petitioners are legal.

Here upon the facts it is not clear whether the offence of rioting was complete before grievous hurt was caused to Juglal and Hitlal. It may be that the blows which caused these injuries were themselves the acts which turned the unlawful assembly into a riot. As has been observed in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshwar (2), it is not generally possible in a riot of this kind to say that the offence of rioting was complete before the grievous hurt was caused. It is contended, however, that assuming that the grievous hurt was itself the act which turned the unlawful assembly into a riot, the law justifies separate sentences.

I think it is clear that the weight of authority in the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay is in favour of the view that not only can separate convictions be recorded under section 146 of the Indian Penal Code and section 325 read with section 149 of the Indian Penal Code but separate punishments may also be imposed. On the point whether the punishments are controlled by section 71 of the Indian Penal Code, the opinion in the Allahabad Court is in the negative while no clear decision exists in the Bombay Court [see Queen-Empress v. Ram Sarup (3) and Queen-Empress v. Bana Punja (1)]. In the High Court of Calcutta the view now accepted is that separate convictions and, therefore, also separate sentences are illegal and that in any event section 71 of the Indian Penal Code applies [Nilmony Poddar v. Queen-Empress (4)]. This view seems to be based upon the consideration that although the acts may constitute offences falling under two separate definitions, it is unfair to convict a man for two offences for the same acts.

In regard to the point whether in addition to a conviction under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code, an accused who has caused grievous hurt himself can be convicted under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code, the recent cases in the High Court of Calcutta are against a separate conviction [see Ramdiha v. Empress (5), Hridoy Mondal v. Jagananda Das (6)]. On the other hand the Allahabad and the Bombay Courts seem to be of opinion that separate convictions are legal and that the punishment is not controlled by section 71 of the Indian Penal Code [Queen-Empress v. Dungar Singh (7), Queen-Empress v. Bana Punja (1)]. It is to be noted that the opinion of the Bombay High Court upon this point was an obiter dictum and that in the present case, upon my view of the learned Sessions Judge's order, the question of a separate sentence under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code does not arise.

Following the view accepted by the High Court of Calcutta, I think that in the present case the convictions under sections 325 and 149 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be sustained. In this Court we have adopted the principle that where there is a long course of decisions by the High Court of Calcutta upon a particular point, this Court will not depart from that settled course.

Separate convictions and sentences, therefore, under section 325 read with section 149 of the Indian Penal Code and section 147 of the Indian Penal Code cannot be sustained. We will, however, follow the course which was adopted in Hridoy Mondal v. Jagananda Das (6) by Prinsep and Stanley, JJ., and treat the sentence in regard to each prisoner as a consolidated sentence and while setting aside the conviction under section 147 of the Indian Penal Code, we sentence the petitioners before us under section 325 of the Indian Penal Code, read with section 149 of the Indian Penal Code, to rigorous imprisonment for one year each in the case of Sarju and Jinpal and 7 months in the case of Paltu and Jahar.

THORNHILL, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Theft—Crops grown by trespasser—Trespasser ejected by owner—Crops cut and taken away by landlord of trespasser—Offence.

Complainant obtained a decree of ejectment against a trespasser and got into actual possession of the land. The trespasser had grown paddy on the land and when the crop was ready, the accused, acting on behalf of the trespasser, cut and removed the paddy:

ABINASH CHANDRA SARKAR v. ATUL KRISHNA BOSE.

Held, that after the complainant had obtained actual possession of the land, the trespasser or his representatives had no right to enter upon the land and to remove the paddy, and that, therefore, the accused were guilty of theft. [p. 680, col. 2.]

Rule against the order of the District Magistrate, Khulna, dated the 3rd April 1918.

FACTS.—One Aswini was in wrongful possession of a plot of land. A decree dispossessing him from the land was passed by the Civil Court in January 1917. He had, however, grown crops upon the land. In September, after the delivery of possession, the accused No. 1, who was a Naib of the Zemindar under whom Aswini held the land, removed the paddy with the help of accused No. 2 and others. Thereupon they were prosecuted on a charge of theft.

Babu Manmathanath Mukherjee (with him Babu Probodh Kumar Das), for the Petitioners.—I object to the complainant being heard in this case. The Rule was issued on the District Magistrate only and not on the complainant. The complainant has no locus standi at the hearing of the Rule.

Babu Bimala Charan Deb, for the Complainant.—The name of the Emperor is used in these cases more as a matter of form and procedure than anything else. The real complainant and the person who really suffers is myself. The Emperor will not lose anything. Besides the Deputy Legal Remembrancer has not appeared in this case; under the circumstances my interests will go unprotected. Moreover your Lordships have jurisdiction to hear any person who has an interest in the case and I am vitally interested in it.

[SANDERSON, C. J.—We will hear you after we hear what Mr. Mukherjee has to say].

Babu Manmathanath Mukherjee.—The complainant was entitled to mesne profits, but not to the standing crops which were grown after the passing of the decree. In taking away the paddy under the circumstances the accused committed no offence under section 379. Refers to Abdool Biswas v. Khater Mondal (1).

Babu Bimala Charan Deb.—Aswini when he grew the paddy knew that he was a trespasser. The case in Abdool Biswas v. Khater Mondal (1) consequently does not apply. Being a trespasser he could not remove the paddy even if it was grown by him. He would be guilty of theft if he did so.

[BEACHCROFT, J.—Would it make any difference if he were a tenant?]

It would. Refers to Thakoor Ohunder Paramanick, In the matter of the petition of (2), Ismail Kani Rowthan v. Nazarali Sahib (3), Mofiz Sheikh v. Rasik Lal Ghosh (4).

[SANDERSON, C. J.—Would the crop pass to the decree-holder when he took possession of the land?]

Ordinarily it would, i. e., unless there was a reservation. Refers to Ramalinga v. Sami Appa (5).

JUDGMENT.—This was a Rule directed to the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction of and the sentence passed on the petitioners should not be set aside on grounds Nos. 1 and 3 mentioned in the petition. Those grounds were as follows: "1. For that the conviction under section 379, Indian Penal Code, is bad in law and not sustainable on the facts and circumstances proved in the case 3. For that the petitioners having acted bona fide in the exercise of their civil rights, the conviction is bad in law."

Both the petitioners were convicted under section 379, the allegation being that they cut and stole some ripe paddy which had been grown on 5 or 6 bighas of land which were in the possession of the complainant, one Atul Krishna Bose.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated as follows:—One Aswini Kumar Palit went into possession of the land in question in 1906; the complainant Atul Krishna Bose obtained a decree for possession against Aswini Kumar Palit: and, it is found by the learned Magistrate that he obtained actual possession of the land on the 20th of September 1917.

Of the two petitioners the first was the Naib of the Zemindar of Saidpur who was the Malik of Aswini. The second, Sham Sardar, was a cultivator, and it was alleged on behalf of the petitioners that he was cultivating the land in question upon the bhag system, that is, the system by which the tenant and the cultivator divide equally the produce of the land between them. It was alleged by the petitioners that before the execution of the decree and before the complainant had obtained possession of the land Sham Sardar, the cultivator, grew the paddy and that he was entitled to reap the crop in spite of the decree.

There is no doubt that the two petitioners and some others did in fact reap the paddy on the 14th of December 1917; and, I think, I am right in saying that it was removed in a boat to the premises of Abinash. The learned Magistrate said that the points which in his opinion arose for determination were as follows:—

"(1) Whether the land and the paddy in question were in possession of the complainant at the time of the occurrence; (2) whether accused Abinash got the paddy cut and taken away by Sham and others, (3) whether the ingenious defence set up in writing by accused Sham was of any help to the accused in this case, (4) whether in the circumstances the accused are guilty under section 379, Indian Penal Code."

The material findings at which the learned Magistrate arrived were as follows:—He first of all found that it was clear that the accused Abinash got the paddy of the land cut by the accused Sham Sardar and others and taken to Abinash's boat, which was waiting 10 or 12 cubits from the land in question at the time of the occurrence. He has also found that the complainant actually took possession of the land on the 20th of September 1917. He then went on to find that the first petitioner, being only a Naib, dared to disregard and slight the authority of the Civil Court even when reminded that the complainant got the land, and necessarily the standing crop, under orders of the Civil Court. That was the contention put forward by the prosecution, which the learned Magistrate adopted. He said: "I accept the view advanced by the prosecution and I hold that accused Sham and others cut and took away the paddy from the complainant's possession in the immediate presence and under orders of accused Abinash." Then he dealt with the question as to the growing of the paddy, and he held that the petitioner Sham Sardar did not grow the paddy but that Aswini had grown it. He said: "I do not believe that accused Sham grew the paddy in question in bhag under Aswini and I reject the inconsistent defence evidence on the point as unreliable." And, finally he found that there was no bona fide dispute but that it was insolent zabberdusti and done in disregard of the Civil Court's authority; then he found that the taking of the paddy was dishonest because it caused wrongful loss to the complainant and wrongful gain to the petitioner.

Now, my learned brother and I having taken time to consider this case have come to the conclusion that upon those findings it must be taken that the paddy was grown by Aswini and that at the time he grew it he must be taken to have been a trespasser on the land: he lost possession of the land in September 1917, and the complainant obtained actual possession of the land and was in actual possession from that time. Aswini did not remove the crops before he was put out of possession. Whether he would have had a right so to do, it is not material for us to consider, but we are of opinion that he having been a trespasser upon the land at the time the paddy was grown, he had no right to go upon the land after the complainant had obtained possession and removed the paddy. Consequently in December 1917 when this paddy was removed, Abinash had no right to remove it and there was no bona fide dispute.

It was found by the learned Magistrate that the first petitioner espoused the cause of Aswini, disregarded the Civil Court's decree and went upon the land: and under his orders the second petitioner and other people removed this paddy.

Under those circumstances we think that the conviction of both the petitioners must be upheld, and we see no reason for interfering with the sentence, so far as the first petitioner Abinash Chandra Sarkar is concerned.

With regard to the second petitioner Sham Sardar, we think, having regard to the findings of facts of the learned

AKBAR ALI v. EMPEROR.

Magistrate that this man was acting under the orders of Abinash, the Naib, and was not the only one who was acting under the orders of the Naib, the sentence which was passed upon him of three months' rigorous imprisonment may be reduced: and, inasmuch as Mr. Mukherjee informs us that Sham has already served three weeks of his sentence we think that he may be immediately released. The other petitioner Abinash Chandra Sarkar must surrender to his bail, if he is on bail.

Conviction upheld.

Criminal revision of the decision (finding and sentence) of the First Class Magistrate, Wardha, in Criminal Case No. 39 of 1918, dated the 29th June 1918.

Mr. P. S. Kotwal, for the Applicant.

ORDER—Akbar Ali and Mohammad Ali, applicants, in Criminal Revisions Nos. 258 and 259 of 1918, have been convicted in the same trial by a 1st class Magistrate of Wardha each for an offence under section 323 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced each to the payment of fine. The case commenced on a complaint on the 22nd April 1918 in the Court of the Tahsildar and 2nd Class Magistrate, Wardha. After the examination of three witnesses for the prosecution, the case was transferred by order of the District Magistrate to the Court of the 1st class Magistrate. He proceeded with the case on the 14th June 1918, without re-examining the witnesses already examined by the 2nd class Magistrate, and on the 29th June 1918 convicted the accused. An application purporting to be under section 350 (b) of the Criminal Procedure Code was presented to the District Magistrate and was rejected by him. The legality of the order of transfer is not questioned, but it is contended that section 350, Criminal Procedure Code, does not apply to the case, as that section is limited to cases in which Magistrates succeed each other in their offices, but does not apply to a case like the present where the transfer is by the District Magistrate from one Magistrate to another. In support of this contention, and it is the only one raised in argument, I am referred to Emperor v. Kasim (1), Emperor v. Gokal (2) and Ladya v. Emperor (3). These cases unquestionably support the view relied on by the applicant's learned Counsel. With all respect to the Judges who decided those cases, I find myself unable to accept their views. In recent years there are cases of other High Courts in which the opposite view has found acceptance. I may mention Mohesh Chandra Saha v. Emperor (4), Palaniandy Gounden v. Emperor (5), Kudrutullah v. Emperor (6) and the recent case of Ram Dass v. Emperor (7). I hold that section 350 is applicable to a case like the present which has been transferred from the Court of one Magis-

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 22 OF 1918.

July 5, 1918.

In re APARAO JHAVERILAL—ACCUSED—APPLICANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 200, 537 (a)—Complaint by District Judge to District Magistrate—Failure to examine complainant—Irregularity.

A District Judge, believing that a certain Will which had come before him in Probate proceedings was a forgery, wrote a letter to the District Magistrate suggesting that in the interests of justice there should be a prompt investigation. On receipt of the letter the District Magistrate, without sending for the District Judge and examining him on oath, ordered a Police investigation and thereafter sent the case for inquiry and trial before a competent Magistrate:

Held, (1) that the letter amounted to a "complaint" within the meaning of the definition contained in section 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 682, col. 2; p. 683, col. 1.]

(2) that the failure to examine the District Judge on oath was an irregularity of a kind which came within those enumerated in clause (a) of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that there having been no failure of justice the trial was not vitiated by the irregularity. [p. 682, col. 2; p. 683, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal application for revision from an order passed by the Resident First Class Magistrate at Nadiad.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

HEATON, J.—We have heard this matter argued at great length, but to put the case in its briefest form it is this. A complaint of forgery was made by the District Judge of Ahmedabad to the District Magistrate. It was made because a certain Will which had come before the District Judge in Probate proceedings was believed by him to be a forgery. In his complaint which took the form of a letter to the District Magistrate, he did not mention any offenders, but he suggested that in the interests of justice there should be a prompt investigation. Now this letter fulfils in every particular the requirements of the definition of "complaint" in the Criminal Procedure Code. On receiving it the District Magistrate, who may possibly not have realized for the moment that he was dealing with a complaint, did not send for the complainant, the District Judge, and examine him on oath, a thing that no doubt he ought to have done. But the omission to do this, as one can see, in a case of this kind, makes no substantial difference whatever. Thereafter there was a Police investigation apparently ordered by the District Magistrate, an investigation which a Magistrate has power to order as provided by clause (3) of section 156 of the Code. Thereafter again there were other proceedings which I need not enumerate, but they do show that a good deal of misapprehension existed as to the precise legal character of what I have called the complaint and the proceedings thereon. For in fact the complaint was at one stage supposed to be a sanction and another complaint was presented by a Police Officer. But eventually matters were brought on to the right track, the complaint was treated as a complaint and the District Magistrate took such measures as he is empowered by law to take to have the case brought for inquiry and trial before a competent Magistrate. On an analysis of the entire proceedings we are reduced to this question: Are we to set aside these proceedings because the complainant was not examined on oath by the Magistrate who received the complaint? We must deal with the matter partly as a question of law pure and simple and partly as a question of combined law and common sense. Dealing with it purely as a question of law, I think the failure to examine the District Judge on oath was an irregularity of a kind which comes within those enumerated in clause (a) of section 537, BEJOY KRISHNA PAL v. BALAI CHAND BHANDARI.

We are, therefore, thrown back on the question as to whether there has been a failure of justice and that, I take it, brings into play our common sense. Very briefly stated, I understand the real purpose of section 195 and section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code to be that it is essential to protect men who have been concerned in Court proceedings from being the victims of malicious complaints. If those sections or similar sections did not exist, the man who had produced a document in a case or who had given evidence would, to a certain extent, be at the mercy of any malicious person in the Bazar, whether connected with the case or not, who chose to present before a competent Magistrate a complaint of forgery or giving false evidence or the like. That was a state of things which the Legislature very properly recognized as one which must be prevented and so it is provided, to put it briefly, that no man concerned or supposed to be concerned in any of the offences enumerated in section 195, when this supposed offense arises in connection with a case or with judicial proceedings and so forth shall be proceeded against unless the Court or officer concerned indicates that he thinks the case ought to be inquired into. That is the real purpose of the provisions of these sections, and here we have the clearest possible indication that the Court concerned thought it most necessary that this suspected case of forgery should be inquired into. It cannot, therefore, be said that there is any failure of justice, because this inquiry is ordered to be made; even though the technicality—and in this case it is a mere technicality—of examining the complainant was not carried out.

I think, therefore, that the Rule granted in this case should be discharged.

HAYWARD, J.—I concur. I think there can be no reason for doubt that the letter of the 12th of November 1914 sent by the District Judge of Ahmedabad, in which he stated that the forgery was patent and that a prompt investigation was necessary in order to detect the offenders, was a complaint to the District Magistrate of Kaira within the meaning of the definition in section 4, clause (h), of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is true that thereafter an inquiry ensued and that the case was eventually transferred for trial by the District Magistrate of Kaira under section 192 of the Criminal Procedure Code without formally having examined the District Judge of Ahmedabad upon oath, as strictly required by the provisions of section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code. But it is quite clear to me that the omission formally to examine the District Judge upon oath was a mere irregularity which could have had no possible effect upon the subsequent proceedings. For it is quite clear that the District Judge had made up his mind that the patent forgery ought to be inquired into and the offenders brought to book. That is the substantial point required by the provisions of section 195 and section 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The omission, therefore, of the oath was a mere irregularity in no way prejudicing the subsequent proceedings or tending to the failure of justice, and is very similar to the omission in the case of Queen-Empress v. Monu (1), in which it was held that such irregularity was covered by the provisions of section 537, clause (a), of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is not, in my opinion, disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial referred to by the Privy Council in the case of Subrahmania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (2).

I concur for these reasons with the order that the application ought to be rejected and the Rule discharged.

BALAI CHAND BHANDARI—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 403 (2)

BEJOY KRISHNA PAL V. BALAI CHAND BRANDARI.

—Complaint of offences under ss. 352, 504, Penal Code—Process under s. 352—Trial and acquittal of offence under s. 352—Fresh trial for offence under s. 504, legality of.

A petition of complaint alleged that the accused had committed offences punishable under sections 352 and 504, Indian Penal Code. Process was issued upon the accused directing him to appear and take his trial under section 352 only. Having heard the complainant and his witnesses, the Magistrate acquitted the petitioner of the offence under section 352, but being of opinion that on the evidence adduced a prima facie case of an offence punishable under section 504 had been made out, ordered process to issue directing the accused to appear and stand his trial under section 504.

Held, that section 403 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, was applicable to the case, so that the accused could be legally tried again for the offence punishable under section 504, Penal Code. [p. 684, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Mamatha Nath Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.—Complaint was under section 504 and section 352 of the Indian Penal Code. Process was issued only under section 352 and I was acquitted. Then the Magistrate again issued summons under section 504, Indian Penal Code, for my retrial under that section. My submission is that abuse and assault are practically one act and hence the offence is one and as there was one act only, I could be convicted under one and one section only. Hence the Magistrate after acquitting me under one section, viz., section 352, Indian Penal Code, cannot again convict me under another section for one and the same offence. The charge against me as given in the charge sheet clearly constitutes one act or offence and under section 403, clause (1), Criminal Procedure Code, I cannot be tried again for an offence under section 504, Indian Penal Code.

[TRUNON, J., refers to clause (2) of section 403, Criminal Procedure Code. There was not one act, for slapping is one and use of tongue is another offence. You having been acquitted once under section 352, you cannot be tried again under section 504 without the issue of due notice to you, and that has been done by the Magistrate in this case.]

The Magistrate could have convicted me again under section 352, but instead of doing that I do not know why the Magistrate has convicted me under section 504, Indian Penal Code.

JUDGMENT.—In this case it appears that one Balai Chand Bhandari brought a petition of complaint against the present petitioner, alleging that he had committed offences punishable under sections 352 and 504, Indian Penal Code. Process was issued upon the petitioner directing him to appear and take his trial only under section 352. The case was tried summarily, and the petitioner was given to understand, and the Magistrate himself believed, that he was trying a charge merely of assault. Having heard the complainant and his witnesses he came to the conclusion that the charge of assault had not been made out. He, therefore, acquitted the petitioner of the offence punishable under that section. At the same time being of opinion that on the evidence adduced a prima facie case of an offence punishable under section 504, Indian Penal Code, had been made out and believing also that process under that section not having been issued against the accused he could not then proceed to try him under that section, he directed that process should then issue directing the accused to appear and stand his trial under section 504.

In the present Rule it is contended that under the provisions of section 403 (1) he cannot now be tried for that offence. We are unable to accede to that contention. No doubt the Magistrate would have been better advised if, after framing a charge under section 504 and giving the accused a further opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses already examined, he had proceeded there and then to try this second charge. But the fact that he did not do this in no way alters the position of affairs. To a matter such as this section 403 (2) is applicable, and having regard to the terms of the Magistrate's judgment it cannot be said that the petitioner has been tried and acquitted of the offence punishable under that section.

It is next contended that in view of what is said to be the great influence possessed by the Chairman of this Municipality whose subordinate the complainant is, the proceedings against the petitioner should be transferred from the station of Hooghly to the Court of some competent Magistrate either at Howrah or Serampore. We can see no reason to think that the influence possessed by the Chairman in question, if he does possess such influence, will be in any way exercised to the pre-indice of the petitioner, or that the Magistrates at Hooghly or anyone of them are in any degree subservient to him.

We, therefore, discharge this Rule.

Where a Judge is the sole judge of law and fact in a case tried before himself, he cannot give evidence before himself or import matters in his judgment not stated on oath before the Court in the presence of the accused. Criminal revision from an order of the Magistrate, 1st class, Hazaribagh.

Messrs P. K. Das and S. N. Bose, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

JWALA PRASAD, J.—The petitioner in this case has been convicted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Chattrā exercising 2nd Class powers under section 352 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50. The conviction and sentence have been upheld in appeal by the 1st Class Magistrate of Hazaribagh.

The trying Magistrate imported into the judgment his knowledge gained by making enquiries out of Court without giving notice to the parties, as a result of which he says that he was perfectly "satisfied with the truth of the complainant's story in the main". He also disbelieved the defence witness, Mahangu Mian, who swore in Court that "he did not see any assault". The Magistrate says: "I chanced to meet this witness outside the Court before his evidence was gone into and on making enquiries relating to the occurrence he told me that owing to market day there were too many customers at his shop and he did not care to see what was going on at the complainant's shop, etc."

The Appellate Court has condemned this procedure adopted by the Magistrate, but has upheld the conviction because it considered that the evidence of the defence witness, Mahangu Mian, was not worthy of credence irrespective of the irrelevant enquiry from the witness made by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate. The Appellate Court, however, does not refer to the general enquiry made by the Magistrate as to the truth of the complainant's story outside the Court and without notice to the parties. There is no record of this general enquiry. He was also not competent to hold any enquiry into the case out of Court and to judge of the value of the evidence given in Court, except what was placed as legal evidence on the record. He became a witness out of Court and also to the facts that came to his knowledge at the extra-judicial enquiry. Under section 556 of the Code of Criminal Procedure he became personally interested in the result of the case however small that interest may be.

In the case of Queen-Empress v. Manikam (1) on a review of all the authorities on the point, it was held that where a Judge is the sole judge of law and fact in a case tried before himself, he cannot give evidence before himself or import matters in his judgment not stated on oath before the Court in the presence of the accused and that by so doing he made himself a witness in the case and had, therefore, rendered himself incompetent to try it. In that case, as in this, the Appellate Court upheld the conviction on the ground that there was sufficient evidence on the record irrespective of the irrelevant matter introduced by the Magistrate. The conviction was set aside by the High Court in revision.

The procedure of importing into a case his own knowledge of particular facts by a Judge was condemned in Hurpershad

(1) 19 M. 263; 6 M. L. J. 143; 2 Weir 725; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 888.

THAKUR DAS v. ABDULLA.

v. Sheo Dyal (2). This was a civil case, but the principle applies with greater force to a criminal trial. The same view has since then been taken in Girish Chunder Ghose v. Queen-Empress (3) and in Hari Kishore Mitra v. Abdul Baki Miah (4). In the notable case of Serjeant v. Dale (5) it was observed that "a Magistrate by making himself a witness has a legal interest in the decision of the case which disqualifies him from trying it; no matter how small that interest may be".

The Magistrate could not give an impartial consideration to the evidence on the record on account of the prejudice that may have existed in his mind after having held an enquiry out of Court. He had seen the witnesses, and the petitioner is entitled to have an impartial opinion of the evidence given by the witnesses, by the trying Court. The trial is vitiated by the enquiry held by the Magistrate. The Appellate Court had not the advantage of seeing the witnesses and was in no better position than what we are in when hearing the case in revision. The petitioner is, therefore, prejudiced by the material irregularity in the trial of the case committed by the Magistrate.

I would, therefore, set aside the conviction and direct that the petitioner be re-tried by another Magistrate.

ROE, J.—I am not prepared to say that the Appellate Court in this case was bound to refer the matter for re-trial but there is much to be said for the view that it would have been wiser to have done so. It is to be noted that in the case of Hurpershad v. Sheo Dayal (2), in which at page 70 were contained the observations of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee on which most of the judgments in regard to Magistrates having knowledge of matters connected with the occurrence are based, their Lordships did not refer the matter for retrial by another Court but decided the case upon its merits on that part of the record actually admissible in evidence.

In my view the matter falls rather within section 167 of the Evidence Act than section 556 of the Criminal Procedure Code as now amended. However, as my learned brother is of opinion that the justice of the case requires a new trial, I concur in the order proposed.

Criminal revision from an order of the Officiating Sessions Judge, Benares.

Mr. G. Banerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Muhammad Yusuf, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances of this case are such that no private sanction, in my opinion, ought to have been granted. The trial of the original case was a summary trial. There is no record of the evidence. The matter is one involving the eternal Hindu and Musalman question. In the absence of any record of the evidence, it would be difficult indeed to secure a conviction. There are many ways of explaining the fact that the applicant made a statement which was incorrect. In such a matter as this if the Court thought that perjury had been committed, it would have been better advised if it had taken action itself instead of placing in the hands of a private person the right of vindicating the law. I allow the application and I set aside the order of the Court below. The application for sanction is refused.

persons were convicted by a Deputy Magistrate of offences under sections 353 and 147, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced Israil to eight months' and the rest to six months' rigorous imprisonment each.
The accused appealed to the Sessions Judge who acquitted them on a question of law.
He held that the ruling in the case of Bisu Haldar v. Emperor (1) was conclusive in this case. The facts, he said, were identical. Against that acquittal the Government have appealed. It appears clear that the facts of the two cases are not identical. A perusal of the judgment in the case of Bisu Haldar v. Emperor
(1) shows that not only was the warrant in that case issued under section 96, Criminal Procedure Code, but that the terms of the warrant indicated that it was issued under that section. In this case there being no prescribed form of warrant under section 100, the Magistrate who issued it adapted a form under section 96 to the provisions of section 100 by altering the figures and also by drawing up the warrant in terms required by section 100. This being so, the warrant would be perfectly legal. For this we find an authority in the case of *Gurameah

v. Emperor* (2), where the form of a warrant under section 98 was used with the necessary alterations for a warrant under section 100. It is immaterial what form is used, provided that the substance of the warrant complies with the requirements of section 100. That it certainly did in the case before us. It has been suggested that the warrant was altered after issue to meet the objections raised in this case. As to that there is no evidence whatever on the record; on the contrary, there is the evidence of P. W.
No. 12, who states that he altered it with his own hand before the issue. We accordingly set aside the order of acquittal passed by the learned Sessions Judge and remand the case to the Sessions Court for a hearing of the appeal on the merits. The accused may remain on bail pending the hearing of the appeal.

(1) 11 C. W. N. 836; 6 C. L. J. 127; 6 Cr. L. J. 38.

TUKARAM V. EMPEROR.

The fact that a Magistrate took cognizance of an offence under section 190 (1) (c), Criminal Procedure Code, is no bar to his holding an inquiry preliminary to commitment.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Moulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq (with him Mr. Muhammad Abdul Hai), for the Petitioner.—The Magistrate did not comply with the provisions of section 191, Criminal Procedure Code. The case comes under section 190 (c) and hence should be tried by another Magistrate. For this reason transfer may be granted by your Lordships.

[TEUNON, J.—But the Magistrate may have acted under section 190 (c), Criminal Procedure Code.]

That is on Police report. But here there was no Police report. The Magistrate ordered an enquiry but before the report was submitted, he proceeded to the spot and there issued summons. So he acted either under section 190 (a) or (c), Criminal Procedure Code.

[TEUNON, J.—Suppose he proceeded under section 190 (c).]

Then I am entitled to a transfer.

[TEUNON, J.—But the Magistrate can hold an enquiry preliminary to commitment, when he took cognizance under section 190 (c).]

No doubt he can hold such an enquiry but that is not trial. Unless he takes evidence and tries the case, there is a chance of his being biased. Of course by local enquiry he may know certain extraneous matters but it is impossible for him to keep himself aloof from local influence. If you think it to be a case under section 190 (c), then it ought not to be tried by the Magistrate making the local enquiry but by another Magistrate.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is based upon an application for transfer. Even if it had to be held that the Magistrate took cognizance under the provisions of section 190 (1) (c), Criminal Procedure Code, still that is no bar to the Magistrate holding an enquiry preliminary to commitment. We have read the Magistrate's explanation and we can find no reason to think that the petitioner will not be accorded a full and fair hearing before that officer. This Rule is discharged.

The accused, on being asked by a Police constable to accompany him to the Sub-Inspector without a written order from the latter under section 160 of the Criminal Procedure Code, assaulted the constable.

Held, that the constable was not acting as a public servant engaged in the discharge of his duty, and that, therefore, the accused was not guilty of an offence under section 353 of the Penal Code.

Mr. N. K. Vaidya, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—Two grounds are urged in the revision: first, that on the evidence it should have been held that the accused did not assault the constable. The learned Magistrate has considered the evidence with some care and I see no reason for departing from the practice of this Court of not interfering in revision on questions of fact. The evidence, if believed, is sufficient for a finding that the accused assaulted the constable. The 2nd point urged is that as the constable was asking the accused Tukaram to go with him to the Sub-Inspector without a written order from the latter under section 160, Criminal Procedure Code, he was not, when assaulted, acting as a public servant engaged in the discharge of his duty as a public servant and the conviction under section 353, Indian Penal Code, is wrong. I agree with this contention and alter the conviction to one under section 352 but maintain the sentence which under the circumstances is not excessive.

Criminal Revisions Nos. 103 and 104 of 1918 are argued with this application and will be governed by this order.

JUDGMENT.

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is a consolidated appeal from three decrees, dated the 9th October 1913, of the High Court at Madras, which affirmed decrees, dated the 4th March 1912, of the District Judge of Kistna, by which decrees, dated the 18th
April 1911, of the Additional District Munsif of Masulipatam were set aside and the plaintiffs' suits were dismissed.

The suits in which these appeals have arisen were brought on the 10th July 1909 in the Court of the District Munsif of Gudivada, and were suits of ejectment from agricultural lands situate within the Agraharam village of Korraguntapalem in the Northern Circars of the Presidency of Madras. The plaintiffs are Inamdars of the village, holding under an Inam grant of 1373 from a Reddi King of the district.

The defendants are agricultural tenants who, or whose predecessors in-title, at various times within very recent years and before July 1908, were respectively let into possession by the Inamdars under agreement for terms, which expired in each case before the suits of ejectment were brought. By these documents of tenancy the defendants or their predecessors in-title agreed with the Inamdars to quit possession of their holdings on the determination of the term for which the lands were let to them, and without claiming any giriyati right in the lands.

In their written statements the defendants alleged that the Agrapharam village is an estate within the meaning of section 3 of Act I of 1908 (the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908), and in the alternative, and if the Agrapharam is not an estate within the meaning of the Act, then the defendants alleged in their written statements that they or their predecessors in the holdings had been cultivating the lands long before the formation of the Agrapharam, had acquired permanent rights of occupancy in the lands, and had enjoyed the lands with such rights to the present time.

In the written statements it was denied that the defendants held the lands for temporary terms as alleged in the plaints, and it was stated that if it were proved that agreements of tenancy had been executed by which the lands were to be held for terms and were to be quitted on the expiration of the terms, it was not admitted that such documents were executed willingly by the defendants or their predecessors or with any knowledge of their provisions.
If that statement meant anything, it must have meant that the Inamdars had by fraud and the exercise of undue influence procured the execution by the defendants or their predecessors of the agreements of tenancy under which the defendants held the lands occupied by them. It may be mentioned at once that no evidence to suggest that there was any foundation of truth for that statement has been brought to the attention of their Lordships, and it may be dismissed from consideration as unfounded.

If the lands from which the Inamdars are seeking to eject the defendants are part of an estate within the meaning of section 3, sub-section (2) (d) of "the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908" (Act I of 1908), as the defendants allege they are, the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suits. The Munsif, who tried the suits, found on the evidence that the Agraharam village in question was not an estate within the meaning of the Act, and finding the other issues in favour of the plaintiffs, made a decree of ejectment and for mesne profits in each suit. The District Judge on appeal decided that the Agraharam village was an estate within the meaning of section 3, sub-section (2) (d) of the Act, and dismissed the suits. The High Court on appeal directed that the plaint in each case should be returned to the plaintiff in order that it might be presented to the Court of Revenue. It is from these decrees of the High Court that this consolidated appeal has been brought.

As the decision of this appeal mainly depends on the question as to whether the Agraharam village is or is not an estate within the meaning of section 3, sub-section (2) (d) of the Act, it is necessary to see how an estate for the purpose of the Act is thereby defined. Clauses (a), (b), (c), and (e) of section 3, sub-section (2), do not apply in this case, and need not be referred to. Section 3, so far as it is applicable here, is as follows:—

"3. In this Act, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context:—

* * * * *

(2) 'Estate' means—

* * * * *

(d) Any village of which the land revenue alone has been granted in Inam to a person not owning the kudivaram thereof, provided that the grant has been confirmed or recognized by the British Government, or any separated part of such village;

* * * * *

The term 'kudivaram' is not defined in the Act. It is a Tamil word and literally signifies a cultivator's share in the produce of land held by him as distinguished from the landlord's share in the produce of the land received by him as rent. The landlord's share is sometimes designated "melvaram." The "kudivaram interest," an expression occurring in section 8 of the Act, is apparently understood by the High Court at Madras as meaning a right to occupy land permanently.

The grant of the village by the Reddi King to the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs has not been produced. It would be unreasonable to expect that at this long distance of time it is still in existence. But that grant has been recognized and confirmed by the British Government, and the question is, was it a grant of the revenue only of the village, or was it a grant of the proprietary right in the village, that is, of the soil of the village? If it was a grant merely of the revenue obtainable from the village, the village is an estate within the meaning of the Act. On the other hand, if the grant included the soil of the village, the village is not an estate within the meaning of the Act, and the decree of the Munsif was right and should not have been set aside.

It has been contended on behalf of the respondents that in the times when the Reddi Kings ruled in this district, the ownership of the soil of land in India was not in the sovereign or ruler, and that the right of the ruler was confined to a right to receive as revenue a share in the produce of the soil from the cultivator. Upon that assumption it was contended that the Inam grant of 1373 could have been only a grant of the King's share in the produce of the soil, that is, that the grant was a grant of land revenue alone and did not include the kudivaram. That is an assumption which no Court is entitled to make, and in support of which there is, so far as their Lordships are aware, no reliable evidence. The fact that rulers in India generally collected their land revenues by taking a share of the produce of the land is not by itself evidence that the soil of lands in India was not owned by them and could not be granted by them; indeed, that fact would support the contrary assumption, that the soil was vested in the rulers who drew their land revenue from the soil, generally in the shape of a share in the produce of the soil, which was not a fixed and invariable share but depended on the will of the rulers. The assumption contended for on behalf of the respondents was not recognized in Regulation XXXI of 1802. The opening words of that Regulation are instructive; it is there recited:—

"Whereas the ruling power of the provinces now subject to the Government of Fort St. George has, in conformity to the ancient usages of the country, reserved to itself and has exercised the actual proprietary right of lands of every description; and whereas, consistently with that principle, all alienations of lands, except by the consent and authority of the ruling power, are violations of that right; but whereas considerable portions of land have been alienated by the unauthorized encroachments of the present possessors, by the clandestine collusion of the local officers, or by other fraudulent means; and whereas the permanent settlement of the land tax has been made exclusive of alienated lands of every description; it is expedient that rules should be enacted for the better ascertainment of the titles of persons holding, or claiming to hold, lands exempted from the payment of revenue to Government under grants not being badshahie or royal, and for fixing an assessment on such lands of that description as may become liable to pay revenue to Government; wherefore the following rules are enacted for that purpose:"

By that Regulation all grants for holding lands exempt from the payment of revenue made previously to the 26th February 1768 in the Northern Circars shall be deemed to be valid,

"provided that such lands may not have escheated to the State, or may not have been resumed and assessed for the public revenue since the period of those dates respectively; and provided also that the present incumbents or their ancestors did obtain and hold actual possession of the said lands previously to the dates hereinbefore specified."

The date thereinbefore specified, so far as the Northern Circars were concerned, was the 26th February 1768.

By section 15 of Regulation XXXI of 1802 it was enacted that a register should be kept in each Zilla of the lands held exempt from the payment of revenue previously, in the case of the Northern Circars, to the 26th February 1768 and that the registers should specify the denomination of each grant or Sanad, the names of the original grantors or grantees, and the names of the present possessors, with other particulars. The earliest of such registers from which an extract was put in evidence in these suits was Mr. Oakes' Inam Register. It appears from Mr. Oakes' Inam Register that the whole of the Agraharam village of Korruguntapalem was granted by Sri Madana Vema Reddi to Ivaturi Naganaradhyulu, and had been enjoyed by his successors-in-title for 429 years. That entry in Mr. Oakes' Inam Register affords, in their Lordships' opinion, conclusive evidence that the grant of the Agraharam village by the Reddi King was a grant not only of the revenue but of the soil of the village, and that conclusion is supported by the dumbalas which have been put in evidence in these suits, and it is also supported by the reliable evidence in these suits showing how the Inamdars dealt with the lands of the village. It is not proved, nor is there any evidence to suggest, that at the date of the grant there were any tenants in the village holding lands with any rights of occupancy by custom or otherwise.

By Act VIII of 1865 (Madras) it was enacted that Inamdars and other land-holders should enter into written agreements with their tenants, the engagements of the land-owners being termed Patta and those of the tenants being termed Muchilika. The Patta should contain, amongst other things, "all other special terms by which it is intended the parties shall be bound." The Muchilika should, at the option of the land-holders, be a counterpart of the Patta, or a simple engagement to hold according to the terms of the Patta. By the Muchilikas which were executed by the defendants respectively or their predecessors-in-title the term for which the lands were let to them was specified; it was admitted that they held no jirayati rights, and they agreed to quit the lands at the end of their term. All these Muchilikas were made before the coming into force of Act I of 1908, and it has not been proved that, when these tenancy agreements were entered into and the defendants or their predecessors-in-title were let into possession under them, any of the lands were, or had been, held by a ryot with a permanent right of occupancy.

The District Judge, in setting aside the decrees of the Munsif and dismissing the suits, and the learned Judges of the High Court in the decrees which they made, acted upon what they conceived to be a presumption of law, deduced by them from some decisions of the High Court at Madras and of the High Court at Bombay, to the effect that in the case of an Inamdar it should be presumed, in the absence of the Inam grant under which he held, that the grant was of the royal share of the revenue only, and they cited the decisions upon which they relied as authorities. Some of those decisions to which they referred do not, upon an examination of them, support the opinions of those Judges as to the presumption which they applied in these suits. In their Lordships' opinion there is no such presumption of law. But a grant of a village by or on behalf of the Crown under the British rule is in law to be presumed to be subject to such rights of occupancy, if any, as the cultivators at the time of the grant may have had.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this consolidated appeal should be allowed with costs; that the decrees of the District Judge and of the High Court should be set aside with costs; and that the decrees of the Munsif should be restored and affirmed.

Appeal allowed.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Burdwan, dated the 5th of September 1916, reversing the decree of the Munsif, 4th Court at that place, dated the 11th of September 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babus Shibo Prosonna Bhattacharjee and Poshupatinath Sastri), for the Appellant.—The plaintiff, who is the appellant before your Lordships, claims her share of the properties left by her father. The plaintiff's father died 37 years ago before the institution of this suit. The learned District Judge has erred in law in dismissing the plaintiff's suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The possession by the defendant, who is the brother of the plaintiff, cannot be held to be adverse possession unless it be shown that there was a demand made by the plaintiff and that demand was refused by the defendant. This is supported by the decision in Shurfunnissa Bibee Chowdhraïn v. Kylash Chunder Gungopadhya (1). In the present case, there is no ouster, no refusal. Mere exclusion won't do. Exclusion must be by adverse possession.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babus Baranasibashi Mukherjee and Biraj Mohan Mozoomdar), for the Respondents.—The learned Vakil for the appellant has misunderstood the ruling in Shurfunnissa Bibee Chowdhraïn v. Kylash Chunder Gungopadhya (1) and has misapplied it to the facts and circumstances of the present case. The plaintiff's father died 37 years ago before the institution of the present suit by the plaintiff. I cannot understand what is meant by adverse possession if the brother's possession is not considered adverse. The principles of law which ought to guide the decision of your Lordships in a case like this are amply set out in Ayennessa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (2) and Faizuddin Khan v. Reju Akab (3). The defendant for the last 37 years has been exercising exclusive right to the knowledge of the plaintiff, who obviously relinquished all rights which she possessed as regards the properties in dispute. Where is the demand and where is the refusal on which so much reliance has been placed by my learned friend?

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy replied.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit between a sister and a brother, in which the plaintiff claims her share of the properties left by her father who died 37 years before the date of the institution of the suit. The Munsif decreed the suit and the learned District Judge has dismissed it on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The principles to be applied in cases of this sort will be found set out in the decisions of this Court in the cases of Ayennessa Bibi v. Sheikh Isuf (2) and Faizuddin Khan v. Reju Akab (3). It appears to us, on reading the judgment of the learned District Judge, that he fully appreciated the legal point in this case and having done so, his findings as to the facts cannot be attacked in second appeal. It is contended that the possession of the brother cannot be adverse unless it is shown that there was a demand made by the sister which was refused. Though this contention finds some support in the decision in the case of Shurfunnissa Bibee Chowdhra v. Kylash-Chunder Ganopadhya (1), it cannot be laid down as a test applicable to all cases of this sort. It is found that the plaintiff in this case gave up her rights shortly after her father's death and that the defendant has exercised exclusive right for all those years to the knowledge of the plaintiff. If the plaintiff gave up her rights and never asserted them, obviously it could not be proved that there have been a demand and a refusal. We dismiss this appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 83, 84—Mortgage suit—Deposit after institution of suit—Interest, whether ceases—Costs, inclusion of, in mortgage amount.

A deposit under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act is invalid if made after the institution of a suit by the mortgagee. No exception to the rule is made in favour of allowing a mortgagor to deposit the money before he receives notice of the suit but after its institution. [p. 694, cols. 1 & 2.]

Obiter.—Where a suit on a mortgage has been instituted, the mortgage amount will include the costs of the suit and even if a deposit could be made after suit, it must include the plaintiff's costs. [p. 694, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 495 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 413 of 1915.

Mr. A. Ramachandra Aiyar for Mr. S. Viswanatha Aiyar (with him Mr. P. N. Nageswara Aiyar), for the Appellant.—Under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act the mortgagor is entitled to deposit the amount due under the mortgage at any time after it becomes payable. This right to deposit will not be taken away by the mere fact that the mortgagee has instituted a suit in respect of the mortgage, especially when the mortgagor has not received any notice of the suit. Interest stops from the date of deposit and issue of notice of the same (see section 84 of the Transfer of Property Act). After notice of the deposit was duly given, the party is entitled to draw the money from Court. At any rate the Court should not decree interest from that date. See Order XXIV, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. A. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondents.—Under the English Law, which is also applicable here, the deposit is invalid when made after the institution of the suit, see

ADWAT PRASAD v. RADHIKA RAMAN PRASAD SINGH.

Bayya Sao v. Narasinga Mahapatro (1). It is immaterial that the mortgagor had no notice of the suit. The deposit should in any view have included the costs of the mortgagor incurred up to that date.

Refers to Kamalamma v. Komundur Narasimha Charlu (2), Krishnasami Chettyar v. Thippa Ramasami Chettiar (3), Fisher on the Law of Mortgage, page 904.

The deposit was under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and, therefore, Order XXIV, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code, cannot apply to the present case. Under Order XXIV, rule 1, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiff may withdraw the deposit and still continue the suit for the balance, but a withdrawal of a deposit under section 83, Transfer of Property Act, can only be in full satisfaction of the claim and the suit cannot be proceeded with after the withdrawal.

Refers to Griffith v. School Board of Ystradyfodwg (4).

JUDGMENT.—In Bayya Sao v. Narasinga Mahapatro (1) it was held that a deposit under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act was invalid if made in one Court after the institution of a suit by the mortgagee in another Court, and the Judges who decided that case were of opinion that the same principle would apply in the case of such a deposit in the Court where the suit had been instituted and that the deposit should be made under Order XXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure. We respectfully agree with the reasoning in that case and can see no reason for making any exception in favour of allowing a mortgagor to deposit the money before he receives notice of the suit but after its institution.

When once a suit has been instituted, the amount due on the mortgage cannot be ascertained until the decree is passed providing for interest, costs, etc., for we think that costs must also be included in the amount remaining due on the mortgage within the meaning of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, and we are supported in this view by the decision of this Court in Kamalamma v. Komundur Narasimha Charlu (2), which interpreted similar words in the repealed section 90, to include costs. This is an additional argument in favour of holding that a deposit under section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act is invalid if made after institution of a suit by the mortgagee. Even if such a deposit could be made the amount deposited did not include costs and consequently there was no deposit of the amount due on the mortgage, which would be effectual to stop the running of interest.

The effect of the deposit on the running of interest has been the only point argued in this second appeal which must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

judgment-debtors and dismissed the case. The facts leading up to the present proceeding are as follows:—On the 11th February 1896, Raghunath Prasad, a wealthy Hindu Mahajan of Benares, died leaving a widow and daughter but no male issue. Many years before his death he had separated from the other members of his family. He left a Will made shortly before his death, by which after providing for the payment of certain legacies and numerous annuities the bulk of his property was left to his widow for life but provision was made that if she should have a son, the son should take an absolute interest to the exclusion of the mother. Otherwise subject to the widow's life-interest the estate was dedicated to the testator's family god. He appointed his widow executrix and in addition appointed guardians to see that the widow conducted herself in a manner becoming a Pardanashin lady. It appears also that his intention was that the guardians were to administer the property as executors together with the widow. They in fact ultimately proved the Will and were appointed executors. No provision was made for adoption of a son by the widow, but in January 1903 she in fact adopted the present plaintiff as son to her late husband. He was then a boy 4 or 5 years old and has not yet attained majority. The validity of the adoption and its effect upon the Will formed the subject of litigation which was finally decided by the Privy Council on the 28th February 1916* in favour of the validity of the adoption.

The present appeal relates to the execution of a decree, obtained by Raghunath's executors, after his death and before the adoption took place, against the present defendants under a mortgage executed by them in favour of Raghunath during his lifetime. The plaintiff-appellant is Adwat Prasad the adopted son, suing through his guardian. The defendants are the judgment-debtors under the decree just mentioned. The questions argued before us were in the main two:

- (1) Whether the appellant has any right to execute the decree, and
- (2) Whether the decree has in fact been fully discharged.

It appears that in March 1893 some three years before Raghunath's death, a mortgage was executed in his favour by the present respondents. After his death his executors brought a suit against the mortgagors to recover the sum due under the mortgage. The suit was compromised. By the terms of the compromise the amount of the claim including interest pendente lite was fixed at Rs. 91,880-1-9. This was to be paid by equal half-yearly instalments extending over a period of 10 years. In addition interest calculated at 10 annas per mensem per hundred rupees on each instalment as it became due was to be paid until the whole of the decretal money had been paid in full. Details of each instalment and interest as they became due each half year are set out in a schedule and a decree was to be passed for the amount so ascertained. It was further provided that if the decretal money with interest set out in the schedule should not be paid instalment after instalment and there should be default in three consecutive instalments, the decree holders should have power to realise the whole decretal amount with interest at one time without waiting for the expiry of future instalments and the mortgaged property was to remain hypothecated as security for the payment of the decretal amount with interest. On the 31st July 1902 a decree was passed in the suit embodying the terms of the compromise. At this time the adoption had not taken place and the present plaintiff was not and could not have been a party to that suit. None of the instalments were paid punctually but for the first two or three years the instalments, when paid, as they were, about a year late in each case, were sufficient to satisfy not only the instalments and interest to the due date but interest between the due date and the actual date of payment or, as it is sometimes called, post diem interest. In fact the first five instalments were more than sufficient for this purpose, in each case there being an excess of a small sum varying from Rs. 16 to Rs. 60. From the 6th instalment onwards although the payments were never made punctually, they ceased to include any interest beyond that payable on the due date as set out in the schedule, and towards the end several of the instalments were not paid until after there had been default in the next two succeeding ones. The 13th, 14th and 16th instalments are instances where this occurred and the last four were from three to four years late. No steps, however, were taken at any time by the decree-holders to exercise their power of realising the whole decretal amount before the remaining instalments became payable. The instalments were in each case paid into Court by the Court of Wards which was administering the estate of the judgment-debtors and in each case the amount, when paid, was taken out of Court by the decree-holders, as far as appears, without protest or objection. The payments were made in Court under Challans giving particulars of the person on whose behalf the money was tendered, the person to whose credit the amount was to be placed in the Court books, the title of the action, the amount tendered, and in most cases the number of the instalment. They were taken out by the decree-holders by petitions filed for that purpose. The last four instalments which were paid in between July 1912 and April 1915 were taken out together on a petition dated the 13th July 1915. It recites that the instalments of the decretal amount under the decree have been deposited in Court by the judgment-debtors on the dates noted below and prays for a payment order for amounts deposited, stating the petitioners have withdrawn from the Court the amounts deposited on account of several previous instalments and that the necessary particulars of their right to withdraw are noted in the record. Here the matter ended so far as the executors are concerned, and there can be little or no doubt that they were, and had been for some years, satisfied to accept the instalments together with the interest up to the due date without insisting upon the payment of additional interest during the periods when the instalments were overdue. It is also noticeable that although they might have claimed on more than one occasion the whole amount of the balance payable owing to three payments being in arrears, they refrained from doing so. On referring to the terms of the compromise it is at least open to question, although in the view I take of this case it is unnecessary to decide the point, whether any interest beyond that set out in the schedule was payable at all and it may be that the executors took the view that they were not entitled to claim post diem interest or at all events that their claim to do so was very doubtful and accepted the payments as made, preferring to do so rather than run the risk of entering into further doubtful litigation.

*See Adwaitya Prasad v. Baldeo Das, 33 Ind. Cas. 852—2d.

The present plaintiff, however, whose status as adopted son of the testator was finally decided by the Privy Council in February 1916, now seeks to obtain further execution of the decree, claiming a sum of Rs. 10,144-1-3, the aggregate amount of interest on the last 15 instalments for the period between their due date and the date of actual payment, together with interest thereon at the decretal rate up to the institution of the present suit. The judgment-debtors object

(1) That the present plaintiff is not entitled to execute the decree obtained by the executors and to which he was no party.

(2) That if any interest was payable under the decree for the period during which the instalments were in default, which they do not admit, the executors waived any claim they might have had to such interest and gave a full discharge.

The Subordinate Judge decided both questions in favour of the respondents.

In answer to the first objection it is contended by the appellant that as the adopted son of Raghunath Prasad he takes by survivorship, and not under the Will and that the whole of the testator's property devolves on him notwithstanding the terms of the Will and that in the circumstances which supervened the Will has become inoperative. The determination of this question would seem to depend upon whether the property in suit was the self acquired property of the testator or family property which the plaintiff would take by survivorship. In my opinion, the interest of the adopted son in the property in question does not arise by survivorship. There is a passage in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the adoption suit referred to, which indicates that this question had been discussed and decided in that suit in the Court of first instance and not challenged on appeal. The passage in question is in these words:—

ADWAT PRASAD V. RADHIKA RAMAN PRASAD SINGH.

"The question whether, assuming authority to adopt to have been given to the widow, the adoption of Jadunath's son would make him a son of the testator capable of taking under the terms of the Will was raised before the Judge of first instance. He decided the point in favour of the adopted son and it was not argued again in the Court of Appeal and cannot be raised now."

In the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Benares in that suit the first issue dealt with the validity of the Will and the testator's power to make it, and in dealing with this issue the learned Judge, after stating that neither party contended that the testator was not of sound mind, continues: "If it were meant that in the Will he was dealing with properties which were not his self-acquired but ancestral, this neither is the case of any party. Both admit that the deceased had absolute power and control over his properties" It is true there later are passages in the judgment to the effect that the adoption rendered the Will inoperative, which would seem to imply that in the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge who tried that case the adopted son took by survivorship, but these passages can be reconciled with the passage quoted if they are considered as referring to the main provisions of the Will, by which the vast bulk of the estate is left to the widow and after her death to the idol. In any case it is now well settled that even in a Mitakshara family the father has full power of disposition over his self-acquired property and if and in so far as the Will purports to dispose of self-acquired property, it is clear that the appellant can have no claim thereto by right of survivorship. The onus is upon him to shew that the property in question in the present case was ancestral property and he fails in my opinion at the outset to establish such a case. It is admitted that the testator left property worth over 3 lakhs and from his Will it appears that his share of the ancestral property at the time he separated from his brothers was Rs. 34,187 in cash besides a house and some ornaments, the balance being his self-acquired property. He had for many years been dealing as a money-lender and it is not unreasonable to suppose that the proceeds of a mortgage decree entered into by him in the ordinary course of his business formed part of his self-acquired property and, in my opinion, no presumption can arise in the circumstances of the present case that the subject-matter of this suit is ancestral rather than self-acquired property. In Bodh Singh v. Guneschander Sen (1), where a family held ancestral property in joint possession but some of them had acquired separate property of their own and dealt with it as such, it was held by the Privy Council that such a state of things may be fairly held to weaken if not altogether rebut the ordinary presumption of Hindu Law as to property in the name of one member of the joint family, and to throw, upon those who claimed as joint property that of which they have allowed their co-parcener, trading and incurring liabilities on his separate account, to appear to be the sole owner, the obligation of establishing their title by clear and cogent evidence. In the present case, where the testator was living separate from his family and had admittedly a large fortune of his own and had for many years been carrying on business on his own account, even although he had originally acquired some ancestral property, it is impossible to say that any presumption arises in favour of the proceeds of an ordinary business transaction - being ancestral rather than self-acquired property. I hold, therefore, that the appellant has failed to establish his case to deal with the property in question by right of survivorship.

He contends, however, that under the terms of the Will he takes as residuary legatee and that under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 16, the interest in the decree is transferred to him by operation of law and that he is entitled to apply for execution thereof to the Court which passed it. Primarily where a decree is obtained by the executors of a deceased person, they and they only are the proper persons to execute such decree, but the appellant contends that the executors or some or one of them assented to the bequest to him as residuary legatee and that under Chapter VIII of the Probate and Administration

ADWAT PRASAD V. RADHIKA RAMAN PRASAD SINGH.

Act this assent divests the executor's interest and transfers the subject-matter of the bequest to the legatee. Chapter VIII of the Act, which consists of some 6 sections, refers primarily to specific bequests, but assuming that it applies to the interest of a residuary legatee, I think it must be taken that there could be no transfer to the residuary legatee until the residue had been ascertained. In the present case there were a large number of annuities, and there is nothing to shew that these have been paid off or that any specific sum has been set aside for the purpose of meeting these charges on the estate. In fact the estate is still being administered by the executors and having regard to the fact that the plaintiff's status as adopted son was the subject of litigation which was not finally determined until February 1916, it is improbable that the executors or any of them would, at all events up to that time, have assented to the plaintiff taking as residuary legatee under the Will. The only evidence which the appellant puts forward in support of his contention that there was any assent is, first, a passage in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Benares, dated the 21st September 1909, in the suit brought by Baldeo Das, one of the executors, against the present plaintiff to have the adoption declared invalid, and, secondly, the fact that in the year 1916, Moti Chand, one of the executors, was appointed guardian of the person and properties of the plaintiff by the District Judge of Benares in place of the widow who had been appointed in 1903. It appears that there was some dispute amongst the executors themselves as to the administration of the estate and as to the plaintiff's status and Baldeo Das instituted the action referred to, claiming a declaration that the adoption was invalid. Musammât Saraswati Bibi was one of the defendants in that suit and the following passage relied on by the appellant occurs in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge:—

"Saraswati's defence is that she adopted Adwat Prasad observing all the ceremonies of the Hindu Law and the adopted son is now become owner of the estate of Raghunath Prasad, the Will of the deceased and the plaintiff's guardianship being no longer in operation. As motive for the suit she alleges that the trustees have got it instituted because she had demanded of them to render account and restore possession of the estate to her as guardian of the minor adopted son."

It is impossible to infer from this bald statement in the judgment that Saraswati was assenting or had at any time assented to the plaintiff's claim to the estate as residuary legatee. The inference which I draw from that passage in the judgment is that Saraswati's contention was that the Will was inoperative and that Adwat Prasad, the adopted son, was entitled to the property by survivorship and this view would appear to be confirmed by a reference to another part of the judgment, in which it is stated that Baldeo Das contended, firstly, that there was no valid adoption, and, secondly, that if there was, Adwat Prasad had no right to the properties under the Will inasmuch as the testator by his Will had made a complete dedication of them to the idol. Saraswati's answer to this was that the Will was no longer in operation. The appellant also contended that Saraswati the executrix must be taken to have assented to the legacy when she was appointed guardian of her adopted son in June 1903, and further that the same inference must be drawn in the case of Moti Chand when he was appointed guardian in 1916. There is, however, nothing whatever to shew that either Saraswati or Moti Chand took any steps to get possession of the estate of the minor in his capacity as residuary legatee, and I decline to draw any inference to this effect from the mere fact that a guardian was appointed who happened also to be a trustee. It is for the plaintiff to establish his case and he has entirely failed to adduce any evidence either positive or inferential on which an assent can be made out.

Having arrived at this conclusion, it follows that appellant is not entitled to execute this decree and his application to do so accordingly fails.

The appellant having failed to establish his right to sue, his appeal cannot succeed and it is not necessary to consider whether a waiver by the executors to claim the interest now sought to be recovered acts as a full discharge to the judgment-debtors or whether such a waiver amounts to an adjustment of the decree which the Court cannot recognise unless certified or recorded in compliance with the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Dispossession of tenant from portion of holding—Rent, suspension of—Apportionment.

Where a landlord dispossesses a tenant from a portion of the holding, the entire rent is suspended and the landlord is not entitled to any apportionment of rent on the lands still remaining in the possession of the tenant unless he has replaced the tenant in possession or has taken some effective step to that end, [p. 701, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Nadia, dated the 26th of June 1915, reversing that of the Munsif, Ranaghat, dated the 26th August 1914.

FACTS material to the report were as follows:—

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Girindra Nath Mukerjee, Additional Subordinate Judge of Nadia, dated the 26th June 1915, reversing the decree of Babu Paroda Kinkar Mukerjee, Munsif of Ranaghat, dated the 26th August 1914.

The defendants' predecessor, Paban Manna, took meadi settlement for nine years of 24½ bighas of land at a rental of Rs. 49 a year by executing a registered kabuliyat in favour of the plaintiffs' predecessor, Dino Nath Roy, on 13th Chaitra 1285 B. S. After expiration of the lease Paban continued to hold possession of the land. In 1309 B. S., Dino Nath's successors dispossessed the defendants from 5½ bighas out of the said 24½ bighas of land by granting a meurasi patta to one Samiraddi. Thereupon the defendants raised objection and stopped payment of rent.

Dino Nath's successor then brought a rent suit against the defendants for the rent of 1307 to 1310 B. S., on the allegation that the defendants' predecessor had exchanged the 5½ bighas of land with some of the lands of Samiraddi's father and after the expiry of the former's meadi lease in 1294 B. S., he took a new settlement from the landlords agreeing to pay Rs. 54 as rent annually for 24 bighas of land. The defendants contested the suit, pleading dispossession by the landlords, want of jurisdiction and denying the new settlement. The defendants' contentions were upheld up to the Appellate Court and the suit was dismissed.

Then the plaintiffs brought another suit for rent against the defendants for the rent of 1309 to 1312 on the same allegations. Defendants again pleaded dispossession and suspension of rent, denying the new settlement at Rs. 54 per annum. This suit was also dismissed on the grounds that the defendants never agreed to pay Rs. 54 for the plaint lands, that the defendants held a jama of Rs. 49 under the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs had dispossessed the defendants from plots Nos. 4 and 5 of the kabuliyat (5½ bighas), and this decision was affirmed on appeal.

Thereupon the plaintiffs brought the present suit repeating the allegations made in the previous rent suits. They further alleged that after the expiry of the term of the kabuliyat dated 20th Chaitra 1285 B. S., the defendants should be considered as year to year tenants even if the fresh settlement be not admitted for the sake of argument and the defendants cannot get any benefit of the said kabuliyat. So the plaintiffs prayed that their lakheraj title to the land in suit be declared, that fair and equitable rent may be settled for the lands now in occupation of the defendants and that at any rate the rent may be apportioned.

The first Court dismissed the suit, holding that the questions of dispossession and annual rental were res judicata, and on evidence also it found those points against the plaintiffs. On the authority of Dhunput Singh v. Mahomed Kazim Ispahain (1) the first Court held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to apportionment of rent or any other relief.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the finding as to dispossession in the rent suit was res judicata between the parties, but that finding would not preclude the plaintiffs from getting apportionment of rent in a title suit. He further held that in spite of the decision in the rent case the element of consent, which was necessary to constitute a legal holding over, was wanting in the present case and in that view also the plaintiffs were entitled to an apportionment of rent.

Babu Khetra Mohan Ghose, for the Appellants.—The plaintiffs after dispossessing the defendants from the best portion of the land are not entitled to apportion the rent. They cannot get any rent unless and until they restore the tenants to possession of that portion.

[TURNON, J.—In the judgments of the Courts below only the case reported as Dhunput Singh v. Mahomed Kazim Ispahain (1) is referred to. Have you got any other case in support of your argument?]

Yes, my Lord. The other cases are Chandra Kanta Dass v. Ramanath Barman (2), Raseswari Chowdhurani v. Sourendra Mohun (3), Sarip Jan Bibi v. Aftab-ud-din (4), Purna Chandra v. Basik Chandra (5) and Ashutosh Dhar v. Joy Lal Sardar (6).

Babu Biraj Mohan Mojumdar, for the Respondents, contended that the plaintiffs' lessee Samiraddi had dispossessed the defendants, so they ought to have sued Samiraddi for recovery of possession. As they did not do that, the plaintiffs were entitled to apportionment. He relied on Raseswari Chowdhurani v. Sourendra Mohun (3). At any rate as the defendants held over without the landlords' assent, fair and equitable rent for the lands in defendants' occupation ought to be decreed.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-landlords for apportionment of rent. It appears that under these plaintiffs the defendants took settlement of some $24\frac{1}{4}$ bighas of land as cultivating *raiya*s. The lease then executed was one for 9 years from 1286 to 1294. But though the lease expired in 1294, the tenancy of the defendants has since continued. In the year 1906 the landlords brought a suit against the defendants for arrears of rent for the period 1309 to 1312. In that suit the tenant defendants contended that inasmuch as their landlords had wrongfully dispossessed them of a substantial portion of their holding, namely, plots Nos. 4 and 5 measuring $5\frac{1}{4}$ bighas, the landlords were not entitled to any portion of the rent until such time as he replaced the tenants in possession of the two plots referred to. In that suit it was decided that the plaintiff-landlords had, in the year 1309, in collusion with a subsequent lessee of the name of Samiraddi, wrongfully dispossessed the defendants from plots Nos. 4 and 5. It was also decided that the story of exchange and of subsequent arrangement set up by the plaintiffs was false and that as a matter of fact the defendants up to the time of the suit had continued to be, and at the time of the suit were, tenants under the landlords in respect of lands measuring $24\frac{1}{4}$ bighas bearing a rental of Rs. 49. These points were directly and substantially in issue in the rent suit and the decision thereupon arrived at, therefore, operates as res judicata in the present suit which is, as we have said, one for apportionment of rent on the portion of the holding still remaining in the tenant defendants' possession.

In the Court of first instance the plaintiffs' suit was dismissed. In the Court of first appeal the Subordinate Judge held that though the defendants had after the expiration of their written lease in 1294 continued to hold over, yet the element of consent, which was necessary to constitute a legal holding over, was wanting. In that view he held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an apportionment of rent.

We are unable to understand how he arrived at the conclusion that the element of consent was wanting. That there was a legal holding over and that the tenancy subsisted was a question decided in the rent suit brought in 1906, and, moreover, that rent suit, and the present suit also proceeded on this basis that the rent had been paid and accepted up to, at least, the year 1307. No more cogent evidence of consent can be given than that implied in the acceptance of rent. It follows that on the principles laid down in a long series of cases of this Court of which the decisions reported as Dhunput Singh v. Mahomed Kazim Ispahain (1), Rasseswari Ohowdhurani v. Sourendra Mohun (3), Chandra Kanta Dass v. Ramnanath Barman (2), Sarip Jan Bibi v. Aftab ud-din (4), Purna Chandra v. Rasik Chandra (5) and Ashutosh Dhar v. Joy Lal Sardar (6) are instances, it must be held that the plaintiffs, not having replaced their tenants in possession of the plots in question and not having taken any effective step to that end, are not entitled to any apportionment of rent on the lands still remaining in the tenants' possession. In support of the Subordinate Judge's decision reference has been made to certain observations to be found in the decision reported as Rasseswari Ohowdhurani v. Sourendra Mohun (3), wherein it is suggested that it is open to argument that where the dis-possession is not by the landlord but by the lessee of the landlord, the landlord may still be entitled to apportionment. But this is not applicable in the present case, for here the finding is that the landlords themselves dispossessed the tenant defendants.

For these reasons this appeal is decreed the decree of the Subordinate Judge is set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 25—Pro-note, suit on—Consideration, release from supposed obligation, whether amounts to.

Where the Manager of an indigo factory on the one hand and the tenants of the factory on the other believed in good faith in the existence of an obligation on the part of the tenants to grow indigo on a certain proportion of their holdings and the latter, in order to obtain a release from the obligation, executed pro-notes in favour of the Manager:

JUDGMENT.—In this case the opposite party were plaintiffs on hand-notes given by tenants of an indigo concern in Champaran for what is known as Tawan, a sum paid by a ryot to avoid a real or imaginary obligation to grow indigo on a certain proportion of his holding. Mr. Rajendra Prasad for the petitioners contends that such hand-notes are without consideration, and he urges us to go into the legal question in each case, whether the obligation to grow indigo actually subsisted or not at the time of the taking of the hand-note. We are not prepared to accept this view of the case. It is sufficient to quote the leading text-books; Pollock on Contract under section 25 says:—"If an intending litigant bona fide forbears a right to litigate a question of law or fact which it is not vexatious or frivolous to litigate, he does give up something of value. It is a mistake to suppose it is not an advantage, which a suitor is capable of appreciating, to be able to litigate his claim, even if he turns out to be wrong." And on section 2, Cunningham and Shephard state the law to be that "When doubtful questions of law or of fact have arisen between two persons, and each of them has agreed to waive what he honestly believes to be his lawful claim in whole or in part, the transaction amounts to a compromise; the waiver or abandonment on either side furnishes the consideration. Provided that they both had equal knowledge of the facts and equally opportunities of ascertaining their rights, the compromise is valid, notwithstanding that they may both have been under a mistake as to a question of law." The only question, therefore, which we have to examine is whether Mr. Cox, the Manager of the factory, on the one hand and the tenants on the other hand believed in good faith in the existence of an obligation to grow indigo and whether Mr. Cox in the matter of this knowledge had any unfair advantage over them. The learned Munsif has found as a fact that Mr. Cox's bare statement that the tenants were liable to grow indigo is sufficient proof of their liability. He has also found that the tenants also believed in this right; for if they had not so believed they would not have insisted on getting written releases from the factory from the obligation. On reading Mr. Cox' evidence we see that it was the tenants themselves who came to him with the suggestion that they should pay cash for the abandonment of this real or supposed right, and that half of his tenants actually paid in cash, hand-notes being taken only from those who could not pay up in one lump sum the whole consideration for the abandonment of the obligation. Whatever may have been the real rights of the parties at the time when these contracts were made, there is nothing to suggest that there was any undue advantage or fraud on the side of the plaintiffs. There is nothing in the decision of the learned Small Cause Court Judge with which we can interfere as a question of law. The applications are rejected with costs, hearing fee one gold mohur in each case.

Applications rejected.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 12, 18—Acquisition proceedings—Award by Collector—Owner dissatisfied with award—Suit for compensation, maintainability of—Remedy.

The only remedy of a person whose property is being acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and who is dissatisfied with the award made by the Collector, is to call upon the Collector to refer the matter to the Civil Court under the provisions of section 18 of the Act. A separate suit for the recovery of the value of the land acquired is not maintainable. [p. 703, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Chittagong, dated the 19th of July 1915, affirming that of the Officiating Additional Munsif, Fatikchery, dated the 18th of February 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Dhirendra Lal Kastagir (with him Babu Tarakeswar Nath Mitter), for the Appellant.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff. It arises out of a suit for declaration of plaintiff's tenancy right and for compensation for compulsory acquisition of the land. When the Collector refused to make an award in favour of the plaintiff with reference to the land, holding that the land belonged to the Government and the plaintiff had got no interest in the land, the plaintiff sought relief by this suit. In a case like this where there is refusal to make an award, the remedy of the plaintiff is to bring a suit for declaration of plaintiff's right of ownership and possession at the time of acquisition as well as for damages. The plaintiff has got a certain interest in land which has got some market value and for which the plaintiff is entitled to some compensation. The Collector refused to make an award in plaintiff's name as tenant of the land and so the plaintiff has brought this suit for a declaration of his tenancy right in the land as well as for recovery of compensation,

JOGESH CHANDRA ROY V. SECRETARY OF STATE.

[FLETCHER, J.—Is the plaintiff competent to bring a suit of this nature without applying to the Collector to make a reference under the Land Acquisition Act?]

In this case an award was made by the Collector of the value of the trees and structures standing on the land but not of the land or of the plaintiff's interest in the land, because the Collector proceeded upon the assumption that the Government was the owner of the land. Where after the plaintiff's application to the Collector to make an award in respect of the land the Collector refuses to do so, the plaintiff's remedy lies in a suit of this nature. Refers to Mantharavadi Venkayya v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1), Rameswar Singh v. Secretary of State for India (2), Imdad Ali Khan v. Collector of Farakhabad (3). Section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act does not bar this suit, because that section applies only in a case where an award has been made and not where the Collector refuses to make an award.

Babu Ram Charan Mitter (with him Babu Srish Chunder Choudhary), for the Respondent, not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This appeal is preferred by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Chittagong, dated the 19th June 1916, affirming the decision of the Munsif at Fatikheri. The facts are these: In the year 1908, the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam made a declaration under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act with reference to the compulsory acquisition of a particular piece of land and the structures standing thereon and the trees growing upon the same for the purpose of providing the site for the residence of a judicial officer. The ordinary notice was issued calling upon the parties claiming interest to come in before the Collector and prefer their claim. That notice was served upon the present plaintiff. He came in and appeared before the Collector. The Collector adjudicated on his claim and found that the only right that the present plaintiff had was a right to the structure on the land and the tree or trees growing thereon: and for those the plaintiff was awarded the sum of Rs. 60 only. Being dissatisfied with that award, instead of applying to the Collector to make a reference under the provisions of section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, the plaintiff instituted the present suit for damages against the Secretary of State for India in Council claiming Rs. 175 as the value of the land which had been acquired by the Government. I am quite clear that a suit of this sort does not lie. The plaintiff had an ample remedy by applying to the Collector to make a reference under section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act and to have his rights adjudicated on by the Civil Court. It is argued in this case that the award is not an award. I do not know what else it is, and when I asked the learned Vakil appearing for the appellant what he called that piece of paper upon which the Collector had written what purports to be his award, the nearest approach to what the learned gentleman's view was of this paper was that he called it a proceeding under section 11 of the Land Acquisition Act. It is no use calling an award a proceeding under section 11 of the Land Acquisition Act. If it is an award, it is quite clear that the plaintiff's remedy lies under the Act. Then it is said that the authorities establish that the plaintiff has a right of suit in a case like this. They do nothing of the sort. The authorities, when properly read, are clearly against the plaintiff's contention. The two cases which are chiefly relied on, namely, the case of Mantharavadi Venkayya v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1) and Rameswar Singh v. Secretary of State for India (2), are clearly against the plaintiff's contention. All that those cases establish is this, that where the Collector won't take up the matter and won't make an award, then in order that the plaintiff may not be deprived of his remedy, he may maintain a suit in the ordinary Court for compensation which the Collector declines to assess. Those do not apply to the case where the Collector has made an award and where the plaintiff has got a right of calling upon the Collector to refer the matter to the Civil Court under the provisions of section 18 of the Execution of decree—Trespasser, rights of, to execute decree.

The question of the right of a trespasser to execute a decree obtained on behalf of an estate depends largely upon the nature of the decree and of the objection taken by the judgment-debtor to the proceeding instituted by the trespasser. Where a decree is due to an estate the person who for the time being is recognized as the proprietor of the estate is the proper person to execute the decree. [p. 704, col. 2; p. 705, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad.

Messrs. Sivasaran Lall and Rai Tribhuanath Sahai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Krishna Sahay, Nirsu Narain Sinha and D. N. Sircar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the judgment-debtor, by litigation terminated by a decree of the High Court of Calcutta in 1904, became indebted to the Dumraon Raj in two sums representing the cost of the litigation, namely, Rs. 502 the cost of the High Court, and Rs. 451 the cost of the Subordinate Judge's Court, and in addition to these to an unascertained sum to cover mesne profits pending the period of the trespass to remedy which the litigation was directed. The question of mesne profits was taken up in the Subordinate Judge's Court, in accordance with the directions of the High Court. A compromise petition was filed, in which it was stated that the mesne profits should be taken to be Rs. 1,320 and that the decrees made by the High Court and by the Subordinate Judge for costs should not bear interest. The then decree-holder, the Maharani of Dumraon, took various steps, in execution of this compromise decree. She died in December 1907. She was succeeded temporarily by a son, whom it was alleged she had adopted. Litigation followed and on the 18th September 1911 the present Maharajah of Dumraon obtained possession of the estate. The present application for execution of the decree was made on the 14th April 1917 and was preceded by an application made on the 3rd August 1914 and disposed of on the 28th April 1915. That again was preceded by an application made on the 3rd July 1911 and disposed of on the 15th September 1911. It is conceded that if the application of the 3rd July 1911 was a genuine step taken in aid of execution, the present proceedings are not barred by the three years' rule. It is, however, contended that they are barred by the twelve years' rule.

The ground upon which it is urged that the application of the 3rd July 1911 was not a genuine step taken in aid of execution is that this step was taken by the alleged adopted son, who was in possession of the estate under the Court of Wards from 1907 to 1911. We are of opinion that the question of the right of a trespasser to execute a decree obtained on behalf of the estate will depend largely upon the nature of the decree and of the objections taken by the judgment-debtor to the proceedings instituted by the trespasser. The Court of Wards took possession of the estate immediately after the Maharani's death and was in possession of it for four years. If the contention of the judgment-debtor be sound that any steps taken by the Court of Wards to execute the decree due to the estate during this period were not genuine steps taken in aid of execution but were steps invalid by reason of the fact that they were taken by a trespasser, then the whole of the decrees due to the estate prior to the year 1907 would have been wiped off by the trespass. We are of opinion that where a decree is due to an estate, the person who for the time-being is recognised as the proprietor of the estate is the proper person to execute the decree due to the estate and that in this case the Court of Wards was, as representative of the estate, the proper person to take out execution. This was acknowledged by the judgment-debtor himself in proceedings beginning on the 10th July 1908 and terminating on the 10th February 1911. He allowed payment orders for Rs. 51 and Rs. 600 to be given to the Court of Wards on behalf of the trespasser. It is not open to him to say now that these proceedings were not genuinely taken in aid of the execution. Nor is it open to him to say that the debt due upon this decree was not a debt due to the estate but a personal debt of the Maharani, for we find him allowing in 1911 these payments to be made to the ward who was the adopted son, not of the Rani but of her husband, the late Maharajah. The objection, therefore, that the whole decree is barred by limitation by reason of the three years' rule cannot be sustained.

The objection as regards the decrees for costs under the twelve years' rule must be upheld. It is strenuously urged by Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha that the compromise decree was substituted for the original decrees for costs. In the first place the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to accept any compromise decree in substitution for the decree either of the High Court or of its own Court previously passed. All that the compromise decree could do with regard to the decrees for costs was to limit the manner of their execution. The compromise decree is not a new decree for costs but merely an embodiment in a document of an agreement to execute these decrees in a particular way. The debts under the decrees remained untouched. These debts were both prior to 1904 and the decrees for costs were, therefore, barred by the twelve years' rule of limitation in 1917. The decree for mesne profits stands on a different footing. We have seen the judgment of the High Court of Calcutta and note that specific directions were given to the Subordinate Judge to ascertain the mesne profits in the course of the execution proceedings. The compromise decree, therefore, was the first valid ascertainment of the mesne profits and as this, the only decree for mesne profits, bears date 1907 it is not barred. The sums paid, amounting in all to Rs. 651, may equitably be debited to the decrees for costs. The decree for costs was prior to the decree for mesne profits and it is an equitable rule that in allocating payment to a number of debts, the debts should be satisfied in order of priority. The result, therefore, is that the decree-holder is entitled to bring the property in suit to sale in execution of that part of the compromise decree which has reference to the mesne profits. In the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs in this Court or of the Court below.

Execution of decree—Attachment—Mulgani tenant in South Canara—Right to improvements, whether can be attached.

The rights of a Mulgani tenant in South Canara are the same as the rights of a tenant in Malabar, and his claim to compensation for improvements, which is an inchoate right and becomes perfected only at the time of eviction, cannot be attached and sold in execution of a decree.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Canara, in Appeal Suit No. 88 of 1916 (Appeal Suit No. 12 of 1916 on the file of the District Court), preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Karkal, in Original Suit No. 134 of 1915.

Messrs. H. Balakrishna Row and Ramanath Suijir, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Sitarama Row, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question is whether the right to improvements of a Mulgani tenant can be attached and sold in execution.

VEERABASAVARAJU PANTULU v. BALASURYA PRASADA RAO.

It is conceded that his rights are the same as the rights of a tenant in Malabar, and it has been held by this Court in Achuta v. Kali (1) and Bressa Menon v. Shamu Patter (2) that a right to compensation for improvements is merely an inchoate right which only becomes perfected at eviction. It is a right to be enforced only at the time of eviction and the extent of the right is dependent on what may be the relations between the landlord and tenant at that time and also on the number and nature of the improvements in existence then. In the present case the lease, being permanent, the right may never mature. This being so, we must hold that such a right cannot be attached.

Whether individual improvements can be attached and sold is a question which does not arise in this case and need not be discussed.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Dravidian branch—Adoption—Widow, whether can adopt with consent of remote reversioner.

Under the Dravidian branch of the Mitakshara Law, in the absence of authority from her deceased husband, a widow may adopt a son with the assent of his male agnates. [p. 107, col. 2.]

In the case of an undivided family, the consent must be obtained by the widow within that family; if the father-in-law is alive, from him, if not alive, from the deceased husband's brothers. The assent of separate and remote kinsmen is insufficient. [p. 710, col. 1.]

The principle is the same if the husband dies separate from his kindred. The widow must still obtain the assent of her father-in-law, and if he be dead, of the divided brothers or the other nearest Sapindas. In considering what assent is sufficient, rights of property cannot be disregarded; and the widow cannot be allowed to adopt on the assent of remoter relations when there are nearer ones in existence. [p. 710, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Madras High Court, dated April 17, 1914, affirming a decree of the District Judge of Ganjam.

FACTS of the case are sufficiently stated in their Lordships' judgment. The only question for determination in the appeal was as to the validity of the adoption of the plaintiff-appellant No. 1. The trial Judge found that the consent of the Sapindas, on which such adoption was based, was insufficient; also, that the widow who adopted the plaintiff had no power surviving in her to make such adoption, whatever assent she received. The High Court (Sir C. Arnold White, C. J., and Oldfield, J.) affirmed the dismissal of the suit on the first ground only.

Hence this appeal.

Messrs. De Gruyther, K. O., and Parikh, for the Appellants.—The necessary consent of Sapindas was in fact given. Both Courts are against us on this point, but their findings are not conclusive, as the question is really one of law. The authorities show that the widow's motives in making an adoption are immaterial, but that the corrupt giving of assent is bad. All that has to be shown is that the Sapindas exercised their discretion bona fide: that they consented upon what they believed to be the wish of the deceased that an adoption should take place.

[Mr. Dunne, K. O., for the Respondents.—The case is covered by Madana Mohana Deo v. Purushothama Deo (1) decided on April 26th last.]

That is quite different from the present case.

[LORD SUMNER.—If it be clear that the widow never thought of any spiritual benefit to her husband, but merely wanted to spite someone, cannot the adoption be invalidated?]

That is no worse than her failing to adopt from private motives although authorised.

Her motives are immaterial. It is true that the nearest Sapindas here have not given their consent, but we have the consent of others, and it is not necessary that all should assent: you only need sufficient assent to show that the adoption was in the interest of the deceased, or should be presumed to be in his interest.

JUDGMENT.

MR. AMEEB ALI.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff, Basavaraju, on the 22nd December 1909, in the Court of the District Judge of Ganjam, in the Madras Presidency, for possession of considerable landed property by virtue of his right as the nearest reversioner by adoption to one Viswanadha Rao, the last male owner. And the question for determination by this Board is whether the adoption under which he claims title is valid under the Hindu Law. Viswanadha died in 1880, and since his death the properties were held by his widow, Mahalakshamma, for a Hindu widow's estate until her decease in 1908, when the defendants, who are admittedly the grandsons of Viswanadha's paternal granduncle and who, on failure of the adoption alleged by the plaintiff, would be entitled as the nearest reversioners, took possession of the same and their possession was confirmed by the Revenue Authorities, before whom the question now in dispute was first litigated.

The plaintiff's claim is based on the allegation that Basavaraju, the father of Viswanadha, and one Pedda Sanyasiraju were two brothers, and that Pedda predeceased Basavaraju, leaving a widow named Narasayamma, who in 1896 adopted him as a son to her husband. He is thus, he asserts, nearer in degree as the paternal uncle's son to Viswanadha and has, therefore, a title superior to that of the defendants to the succession to his estate.

The Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy] (2) established the proposition that under the Dravidian branch of the Mitakshara Law, in the absence of authority from her deceased husband, a widow may adopt a son with the assent of his male agnates in the Dravida country, where such law is in force. The plaintiff, accordingly, placed his adoption on two grounds—first, that Narasayamma had direct authority from her husband to adopt a son to him; and secondly, that his own adoption was made with the authority of the husband's kindred.

After the institution of the suit, other parties, who had acquired interests in the properties in dispute from the plaintiff or from his guardian, were joined as co-plaintiffs; it is, however, unnecessary to refer to them in this judgment. The following pedigree will explain the exact relationship of the contesting parties:—

MABIAH.

The defendants challenged both the power of the widow to make any adoption and the validity of the assent or authority with which it was alleged to have been made. They contended that under the circumstances, which will be detailed later, Narasayamma had no power to make an adoption to her deceased husband, and that in any event the assent of the Sapindas, on which its validity was conditioned, was not legally sufficient. The District Judge, before whom the case came for trial in the first instance, in an able judgment in which he examined the facts as well as the law applicable to those facts with considerable care, came to a conclusion wholly adverse to the plaintiff. He held in substance that the plaintiff had failed to establish the alleged authority from the husband to the adopting widow, and that the consent of the Sapindas on which the claim was rested was not sufficient. The learned Judge further held that Peeraya and his two sons Pedda and Basavaraju formed a joint undivided Hindu family; that Pedda died in the lifetime of his father somewhere before 1842; that on his death his interest in the joint family property vested by right of survivorship in Peeraya and Basavaraju; and that he left no separate property to which his widow could succeed and hold separately. He held that, in this condition of the joint family, the power and capacity of his widow to make any adoption to him came to an end when the joint family property vested in Viswanadha's widow. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The High Court of Madras on the plaintiffs' appeal did not consider it necessary to enter upon a consideration of this latter branch of the learned Judge's decision relating to Narasayamma's power to make the adoption. They, however, concurred with the first Court in its other findings, and in agreement with the trial Judge, held that the Sapindas' assent was not sufficient in law to validate the adoption in question, and dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiffs have now appealed to His Majesty in Council, and it has been strenuously urged on his behalf that the lower Courts have wrongly applied the law to the present case. As the trial Judge has in his judgment fully set out the facts, their Lordships are relieved of the necessity of stating them in any detail. They propose, therefore, to refer only to some salient points in the history of this family. It appears that Peerayalingam, the grandfather of Viswanadha, died in 1846, leaving him surviving his widow Veyamma, who was the owner in her own right of the greater part of the property which forms the subject-matter of this litigation. The plaintiffs allege that Pedda died in 1853, whilst the defendants place his death so far back as 1840. As already stated, the trial Judge has found on the evidence that the latter date represents approximately the real date of his death. The finding is that he died some years before his father's death in 1846. Veyamma died in 1855, when the entire family estate vested in Basavaraju, the surviving son of Peeraya. He died in 1878, leaving a son Viswanadha, who survived him only two years. On his death his widow succeeded to the estate, and held it as a Hindu widow until 1908. Narasayamma, the widow of the predeceased co-parcener, had become, on the death of her husband, entitled to maintenance, which she received from the estate until her death in 1907. Peerayalingam, the grandfather of Viswanadha, had a brother named Ayyaraju; his son was also called Sanyasiraju and the present defendants are the sons of Sanyasi. At the time of the alleged adoption, this Sanyasi, who might be conveniently called Sanyasi II, was alive. Upon this state of facts, the two questions of law which the High Court had to determine were exactly the two which the District Judge has discussed and decided. First (and this went to the very root of the plaintiffs' title), whether Narasayamma had, under the circumstances of Peerayalingam's family any power in 1896 surviving in her to make the adoption; secondly, if she had, whether the assent that is put forward is sufficient. As already observed, the High Court have abstained from expressing an opinion on the first point.

Assuming that Narasayamma had, when she purported to adopt the plaintiff Basavaraju, the power to make the adoption, the question arises whether that power was validly exercised. In the absence of authority from the husband, the valid exercise of the power by a Hindu widow in the Dravida country is conditioned on the assent of her husband's Sapindas. In the present case the claim is rested on the assent of seven kinsmen. The District Judge has, for convenience of reference and examination, divided the agnatic relations of Viswanadha living at the time of the alleged adoption into five groups in the order of propinquity. In the first group are included Sanyasiraju (the defendants' father) and the defendants. Sanyasiraju died in 1899; it has been found that his assent was not asked for nor given. In the second group are included three persons whose consent is said to be contained in a paper, Exhibit B. Both Courts have held their signatures to be forgeries. To group No. 3 belong plaintiff Basavaraju's father, his paternal uncle, and a witness of the name of Ayyappa Raju. These three have certainly given their assent to the adoption.

To group No. 4 belonged a man named Borayya Bhusana, since deceased, who is alleged to have conveyed his assent in a letter addressed to the widow. This letter contains a general approval of her intention to make an adoption, but does not evince a consent to any specific adoption. There are several men in the remotest group who do not seem to have been approached and do not enter into the consideration of the case. The question then is whether, in the absence of authority from the husband and of the consent of the nearest Sapinda, the assent of remote Sapindas is sufficient to validate the exercise of the widow's power. None of the decided cases deal with the concrete question under consideration. The decision in the Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy] (2), which forms the principal authority on the validity of an adoption with the consent or authority of the husband's Sapindas, declares in general terms the class of kinsmen among whom the consent should be sought; and the generality of the expressions has in some instances given rise to doubts. But a close examination of the judgment shows clearly to their Lordships' mind what the Board intended to indicate. Dealing first with the case of a joint and undivided family, joint in food, worship and estate, the Board observed as follows:—

"The question who are the kinsmen whose assent will supply the want of positive authority from the deceased husband is the first to suggest itself. Where the husband's family is in the normal condition of a Hindu family—i. e., undivided—that question is of comparatively easy solution. In such a case the widow, under the law of all the schools which admit this disputed power of adoption, takes no interest in her husband's share of the joint estate, except a right to maintenance. And though the father of the husband, if alive, might, as the head of the family and the natural guardian of the widow, be competent by his sole assent to authorize an adoption by her, yet, if there be no father, the consent of all the brothers who, in default of adoption, would take the husband's share would probably be required, since it would be unjust to allow the widow to defeat their interest by introducing a new co parcener against their will."

There the widow had acquired some property which was held by her husband separately from the other members of the family, which is not the case in the present instance, as Pedda left no separate property. Dealing with the case of a widow so situated, Sir James Colville went on to say:—

"Where, however, as in the present case, the widow has taken by inheritance the separate estate of her husband, there is greater difficulty in laying down a rule. The power to adopt, when not actually given by the husband, can only be exercised when a foundation for it is laid in the otherwise neglected observance of religious duty, as understood by Hindus. Their Lordships do not think there is any ground for saying that the consent of every kinsman, however remote, is essential. The assent of kinsmen seems to be required by reason of the presumed incapacity of women for independence rather than the necessity of procuring the consent of all those whose possible and reversionary interest in the estate would be defeated by the adoption. In such a case, therefore, their Lordships think that the consent of the father-in-law, to whom the law points as the natural guardian and 'venerable protector' of the widow, would be sufficient. It is not easy to lay down an inflexible rule for the case in which no father-in-law is in existence. Every such case must depend upon the circumstances of the family. All that can be said is that there should be such evidence of the assent of kinsmen as suffices to show that the act is done by the widow in the proper and bona fide performance of a religious duty, and neither capriciously nor from a corrupt motive."

The decision in the Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy] (2) was followed and explained in Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (3), which established the following propositions: That the requisite authority in the case of an undivided family is to be sought by the widow within that family; that it is in the members of that family that she must presumably find such counsellors and protectors as the law makes requisite for her; and that she cannot at her will travel out of that undivided family and obtain the authorization required from separated and remote kinsmen of her husband. This being the position of a widow in an undivided family, what are the conditions imposed on her if her husband happens to die in a state of separation from his kindred? Division does not affect her personal dependence or give her an independent status to alter by her own authority the succession to the estate which she takes as the widow of her husband. She is still dependent for counsel and protection upon the nearest Sapindas of her husband, who are the most closely united to him by ties of blood, or, to use the language of Hindu lawyers, by "community of corporal particles." The father of the deceased, if still alive, continues to be her "natural guardian and venerable protector." He has furthermore a direct interest in the protection of the estate, for in case of her death without leaving her surviving a daughter or the mother of her deceased husband, he has a right to the reversion. His authorization is, therefore, essentially requisite to the validity of an adoption by her to her husband. If there is no father the divided brothers take his place by virtue of the tie of blood as her husband's nearest Sapindas; they become her natural guardians and the protectors of her interests. They also have an interest in the protection of the inheritance. In the absence, then, of the father the assent of the divided brothers is equally requisite for the validity of the widow's adoption. If a majority assent and one refuses, his objection may be discounted. But the absence of their consent, or in case there is only one, of his consent, cannot be made good by the authorization of distant relatives remotely connected whose interest in the well-being of the widow or the spiritual welfare of the deceased, or in the protection of the estate, is of minute character, and whose assent is more likely to be influenced by improper motives. In this connexion it seems desirable to bear in mind the following observations of the Board in Sri Virada Pratapa Raghunada Deo v. Sri Brozo Kishoro Patta Deo (6):—

"But it is impossible not to see that there are grave social objections to making the succession of property, and, it may be, in the case of collateral succession, as in the present instance, the rights of parties in actual possession, dependent on the caprice of a woman, subject to all the pernicious influences which interested advisers are too apt in India to exert over women possessed of, or capable of exercising dominion over, property. It seems, therefore, to be the duty of the Courts to keep the power strictly within the limits which the law has assigned to it."

It is true that in the judgment of this Board in the Ramnad case [Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga Sathupathy] (2) some expressions are used which might imply that the question of reversionary interest forms only a secondary consideration in determining what Sapindas' assent is primarily requisite, but the remarks that follow as to the right of co-parceners in an undivided family to consider the expediency of introducing a new co-parcener, coupled with the observations of the Board in the subsequent case [Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (3)], show clearly that rights to property cannot be left out of consideration in the determination of the question.

In the latter case [Vellanki Venkata Krishna Rao v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi (3)] the Board observe as follows:—

"There should be such proof of assent on the part of the Sapindas as should be sufficient to support the inference that the adoption was made by the widow, not from capricious or corrupt motives in order to defeat the interest of this or that Sapinda, but upon a fair consideration, by what may be called a family council, of the expediency of substituting an heir by adoption to the deceased husband."

And an eminent Hindu lawyer, dealing with the question whose consent is requisite to the validation of an adoption when the husband is separate, remarks that an adoption is more a temporal than a spiritual institution, there being no spiritual reason for adoption if the deceased left a fraternal nephew; and that the requisites of a valid adoption are all temporal; therefore, the spiritual consideration should not be allowed to influence the judgment regarding the secular essential. And he then goes on to add—

"Some light is thrown on the point by the decisions relating to alienations by widows with the assent of the next heir." —Golap Chandra Shastri, on the Hindu Law of Adoption.

The reasons which make the assent of divided brothers a requisite condition apply mutatis mutandis to the case of the nearest Sapindas other than brothers. In the present case, Sanyasiraju II was unquestionably the nearest Sapinda to Pedda at the time of Narasayamma's adoption. He was also unquestionably nearest to Viswanadha. The case for the plaintiff is that in 1882 he had given his consent to Narasayamma making an adoption, which was repeated in 1894. The trial Judge who heard the evidence found as a fact that both allegations were false; and the High Court agree in that view. The concurrent finding of the two Courts on this point is not open to question on this appeal. Their Lordships consider, even if it were open to discussion, the reasons given by the District Judge for disbelieving the story to be conclusive.

It was argued at the Bar that no application was made for the assent of Sanyasiraju II, because it was known that he would refuse. This, in their Lordships' opinion, is a futile reason for not applying for his assent.

In their Lordships' opinion this suit must fail on the second ground on which the trial Judge decided the case, viz., that Narasayamma did not obtain the requisite assent necessary for the valid exercise of that power. Their Lordships express no disapproval of the decision of the District Judge on the first point, but, like the High Court, do not find it necessary to decide it.

Their Lordships will, accordingly, humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court dismissing the suit should be affirmed and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur refusing the appellant's application to file an arbitration award under Schedule II, clause 20, of the Civil Procedure Code. The plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are members of a Hindu joint family. The defendant No. 3 is the widow of a deceased co-parcener of the family. In 1908 the members of the family had separated in mess. On the 1st April 1911 by a registered deed the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 submitted the partition of the family property and settlement of certain matters in dispute between them in connection therewith to the arbitrament of Babu Jnanendra Mohan Dutta and Babu Apurba Krishna Mitter as arbitrators. The submission provided that the award order and partition and arbitration of the arbitrators or umpire in all or any of the matters so referred should be final and conclusive between the parties and their representatives. No limit of time was prescribed for making the award. By a previous agreement of the 27th January 1908 the same parties had submitted a partition of their joint property to three arbitrators, who had entered on the arbitration and made a partial partition of the property but owing to delay in completion of the award the parties agreed by mutual consent to cancel the submission, and by the present submission it was provided that the arbitrators might adopt partially or wholly the matters already settled or decided by the former arbitrators. The arbitrators duly entered on the arbitration in the year 1911 and adjourned from time to time. A great number of meetings were held and it was not until the 8th October 1915 that the final award was made. The value of the property was about Rs. 2,10,000 and no doubt there was a considerable amount of work to be done. It further appears that the defendant No. 2 lived during a considerable portion of that time at Patna and Hilsa, a long distance from Muzaffarpur where the meetings were held, and probably it was not always easy to convene meetings to suit the convenience of all parties. Further the defendant No. 2 was absent for about a year of the time on pilgrimage. The defendant No. 3 Musammât Deoki Bibi joined in the arbitration by agreement in writing dated the 1st May 1915, submitting her interest in the property to be determined by the same arbitrators in the same arbitration. The procedure adopted by the arbitrators with the consent of all parties appears to have been to deal with separate portions of the property at different times as the arbitration proceeded, and provisional decisions were arrived at from time to time distributing the different properties between the co-sharers in proportion to their shares. Minutes of the proceedings were kept and the decisions were entered in the minute book. By July 1915 practically the whole estate had been in this way partitioned. On the 14th July in that year a draft award was drawn up and submitted to the parties, who were invited to formulate objections thereto for final discussion. Up to this time there was nothing to show that any party was dissatisfied with the manner in which the arbitration was conducted or the length of time occupied, but on the 12th July 1915 on the eve of the publication of the draft award the defendant No. 2 wrote a letter to each of the arbitrators in similar terms, purporting to revoke and cancel the submission on the ground of delay in completing the award. The arbitrators apparently did not feel justified at this stage in desisting from their labours at the request of one party alone and they proceeded to hear objections by the parties to the draft award. The defendant No. 2 himself appeared and took part in the objection proceedings, and on the 8th October 1915 the arbitrators having disposed of the objections published their award. On the 14th March 1916 the plaintiff applied to the Subordinate Judge to file the award. The defendants filed objections. The Subordinate Judge rejected the plaintiff's application upon a number of grounds, which may be summarised as follows :—

(1) That there was no valid reference to arbitration as undue influence was exercised by one of the arbitrators Babu Jnanendra Mohan Dutta on the defendant No. 1 to induce him to agree to the submission.

(2) That the defendant No. 2 was justified in revoking the submission owing to long and unreasonable delay in making the award.

(3) That the arbitrators left undetermined certain matters submitted to them.

(4). That the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct in the following particulars:

(a) In failing to insist upon the production of certain accounts in the possession of the plaintiff dealing with matters in controversy in the arbitration.

(b) In that one arbitrator sat alone from the 7th November 1914 to the 11th August 1915.

(c) In that on three days there were ex parte hearings.

(d) In that certain matters outside the scope of the reference were dealt with by the arbitrators.

(5). That the arbitrators exhibited a bias in favour of the plaintiff.

(6). That the application was barred by limitation.

With regard to the first point it appears that Babu Jnanendra Mohan Dutta had acted as Pleader to the family and was more or less in their confidence. Both the defendants were educated men and presumably capable of looking after their own affairs. It would appear that there had been some discussion and possibly dissatisfaction about the dilatoriness of the arbitrators appointed by the earlier submission referred to and on the 18th March 1911 Babu Jnanendra Mohan Dutta wrote a letter to the defendant No. 1 in these terms:—

"I am sorry the arbitration matter is still pending without final decision. I don't think the arbitrators will finish the work soon. As we look to the interest of you all, we advise you to refer to a separate arbitration and I and Apurba Babu are willing to act as arbitrators on moderate fees. Babu Harish Chandra and Babu Kunja Lal are agreeable to this. If you also consent to the matter please come and settle the affairs. May this find you all right."

In the result the parties agreed to revoke the earlier submission and to appoint Babu Jnanendra Mohan Dutta and Babu Apurba Krishna Mitter in their place. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that this was an improper letter to write, that Jnanendra Babu should have advised the parties to seek independent advice which was not done, and sums up the matter by saying that defendant No. 1 was persuaded by Jnanendra Babu to submit to the new arbitration and adds: "In my opinion defendant No. 1 was not free to act to the best dictates of his conscience. There was no valid reference in this case." I confess I have some difficulty in following the reasoning by which the learned Judge arrives at the conclusion that there was no valid reference. I can see nothing improper in a letter such as that written by Babu Jnanendra Mohan Dutta to the defendant No. 1, offering himself as arbitrator after apparently discussing the matter with the plaintiff and the other defendant who were agreeable to the course suggested. I have also read the evidence of the defendant No. 1 and I am unable to discover the slightest indication of anything in the nature of fraud or even of undue pressure or persuasion upon the defendant to agree to the terms of the submission. Even had there been some persuasion exercised to induce the defendant No. 1 to consent to a course agreed to by the other parties, I cannot see, unless some fraud or impropriety is shown, that this would be any reason for holding that the submission was not valid. In my opinion this part of the learned Judge's decision cannot stand.

The second point on which the Subordinate Judge's decision is based cannot, in my opinion, be supported. His decision on this point appears to me to be based upon a misunderstanding of the effect of the judgment in O. R. Coley v. V. A. DaCosta (1). Where parties submit their differences to arbitration, they cannot be allowed to revoke or withdraw from the submission except for very good cause. In the present case before any objection was taken to the delay by the defendant No. 2, the arbitration was practically completed and although no final award had been made, this defendant had a very fair idea as to how he would stand at the end of it. One cannot shut one's eyes to the fact that he was not altogether satisfied with the properties allotted to his share. Some of them had not turned out as well as he expected. But up to the eleventh hour he had shown no inclination to be dissatisfied with the length of time occupied in the proceedings. Indeed it was mainly due to the fact that he himself had been on pilgrimage for a year and for part of the rest of the time lived at a distance from the other parties that the proceedings were protracted and, in my opinion, it would be contrary to the whole spirit of the law affecting submission to arbitration to permit one party to revoke his authority at his own pleasure without shewing some better reason than that which appears in the present case. In O. R. Coley v. V. A. DaCosta (1) shortly after the submission the arbitrator appointed by the respondent (one of the parties to the submission), before any material progress had been made in the arbitration, went to a hill station for the benefit of his health and all proceedings were suspended for about 7 months from the date of the submission and there was no prospect of anything further being done in the near future. The appellant (the other party) thereupon revoked the submission. In spite of this the Subordinate Judge shortly afterwards ordered the submission to be filed, and on the refusal of the appellant's arbitrator and the umpire to act, appointed another arbitrator and umpire in their places without any notice to the appellant. The new arbitrators then met and subsequently delivered an award. The proceedings of the new arbitrators were heard ex parte in the absence of the appellant, although he was served with notice. The Court found that where there is unreasonable delay in proceeding with the arbitration, one of the parties may revoke the submission if the delay is not explained or justified by any act on his part. They also found that the proceedings of the new arbitrators were tainted with illegality for other reasons not material to the present discussion. I agree with the principles laid down in that case, but the circumstances of the present case are entirely dissimilar. The only reason which appears for any delay in completing the proceedings in the present case is that mentioned by the arbitrators themselves in their award, namely, the voluntary absence of the party who now seeks to impugn the award on the ground of delay. In my opinion, no case has been made out which would justify the Court in refusing to file the award on the ground of delay.

The third point is the one which presents most difficulty in this appeal. By the terms of the submission the arbitrators had the option of adopting partially or wholly the matters already settled and decided by the former arbitration. It was also provided that the arbitrators should divide and partition in any manner as to them might seem fit and proper all such property, moveable and immoveable, as was still jointly owned by the parties. They were also to settle and decide all accounts between the parties and to adjust or otherwise settle and decide all credits and debts due and owed by the joint banking business of the parties, and for the purposes of such division "make any allotment of such credits and debts between the parties as to them might seem just and proper. There were a large number of villages jointly owned by this family. Most of these villages had been partitioned in the former proceedings, including certain Zemindaries at Ulao. The allotment of those villages previously arrived at was adopted by the new arbitrators. There were, however, three or four villages of Ulao Elaka which had not been previously partitioned, and these were advisedly kept joint by the arbitrators as they were adjacent to the family residence of the parties and the award provided that each of the parties should take a third share in each of these villages. There were also some diara lands consisting of two villages, which were advisedly kept joint as they could not be valued with precision. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the award was bad by reason of this defect and could not, therefore, be filed. The rules contained in the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code relating to arbitration without the intervention of the Court provide (paragraph 21) that where the Court is satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration and that an award has been made thereon and where no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in paragraph 14 or paragraph 15 is proved, the Court shall order the award to be filed and shall proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award. Paragraphs 14 and 15 form part of the procedure applicable to references ordered by the Court. Paragraph 14 authorises the Court to remit the award to reconsideration of the arbitrators where (inter alia) the award has left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration or where it determines any matter not referred to arbitration, unless such matter can be separated without affecting the determination of the matters referred. Paragraph 15 relates to the grounds upon which alone an award can be set aside. These include corruption or misconduct of the arbitrator or umpire, fraudulent concealment of material matters by the parties or their wilfully misleading or deceiving the arbitrator or umpire.

(1) 17 C. 200; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 672.

Whilst it is clear that in cases where the reference is made by the order of the Court the Court may remit the award for the determination of matters left undecided under paragraph 14 of the Schedule, it has been held by the Courts of this country that paragraph 21 of the Schedule confers no such power in the case of arbitration without the intervention of the Court and that if any of the matters referred to in paragraph 14 are proved, the Court has no option but to refuse to file the award. It is in my opinion regrettable that such power does not exist and the absence of any such power under the rules must, in many cases, work great hardship and inconvenience upon the parties. It may well be that after great labour and expense have been incurred by the parties in settling their differences by arbitration, one of them in whose favour the matters referred have been decided may find himself unable to file the award and obtain the judgment of the Court thereon if some small portion of the matters referred to arbitration has been left undetermined. It is, however, in my opinion, too late now to question the construction which has been placed upon paragraph 21 by the High Courts of Bombay, Allahabad and Calcutta and if it should appear that the arbitrators without the consent of the parties have failed to partition the Mauzas in question when they were required to do so by the submission, there will be no option but to refuse to file the award. It becomes necessary, therefore, to consider how far, if at all, the parties have either by the submission or by subsequent consent agreed to the course followed by the arbitrators. It is true that the submission by clause 2 gives the arbitrators the option to adopt partially or wholly the matters already settled or decided by the former arbitrators. The former arbitrators partitioned practically the whole of the villages leaving those in question joint, and it is contended that paragraph 2 of the submission entitled the arbitrators to adopt in its entirety the decision arrived at by the former arbitrators and to retain these villages and the diara lands as joint property. I am afraid I cannot accept this argument. In so far as the previous arbitrators left undivided any of the joint property, I think it was the intention of the submission that the present arbitrators should deal with it.

It is next contended that clause 17 of the submission, which provides that the award order, partition and arbitration of the arbitrators or umpire in all or any of the matters referred to them shall be final and conclusive, contemplates that any of the matters referred to the arbitrators and dealt with by them shall be binding upon the parties notwithstanding that other matters are left undecided. Had this clause stood alone there would have been much force in this argument, but after consideration of the document as a whole and especially clauses 3, 4 and 5 I have come to the conclusion that it was the intention that all the joint property of the parties should be partitioned in one way or another, in so far as it was capable of partition. And even if the arbitrators with the best intentions in the world failed to carry out the terms of the submission in any material particular, it seems to me that we have no power to file the award which would on this hypothesis be incomplete. So far as the Ulao villages are concerned, they were in fact partitioned between the parties in equal shares. Their interest, therefore, ceases to be that of joint tenants such as the interest enjoyed by co-parceners and becomes that of tenants-in-common, giving each of the parties a separate interest and separate rights in the subject-matter. The submission nowhere provides that the whole of the immoveable properties shall be partitioned by metes and bounds, although speaking generally I think it must be assumed that it was the intention of the parties that this method should be adopted. And had the whole of the immoveable property been divided by shares instead of by metes and bounds, I think it would have been correct to say that the arbitrators had failed to carry out the duties imposed upon them. Where, however, there are special incidents attaching to a small portion of the property, such as the four villages of Ulao Elaka by reason of their propinquity to the family residence of the parties, which make it more convenient for all of them that this property should be divided into shares only, I think it may safely be assumed that such a mode of division in this particular instance was not outside the contemplation of the parties. In the well-known judgment delivered by Lord Westbury in the case of Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (2) it is pointed out that "if there be a conversion of the joint tenancy of an undivided family into a tenancy-in-common of the members of that undivided family, the undivided family becomes a divided family with reference to the property that is the subject of that agreement and that is a separation in interest and in right although not immediately followed by a de facto actual division of the subject-matter." In my opinion there was within the terms contemplated by the submission a partition of this property having regard to its peculiar character. The same reasoning applies, in my opinion, with equal force to the diara villages which, as I read the award, were also partitioned in the same manner, namely, into thirds, and which could not be valued with that precision necessary to enable the arbitrators to divide them by metes and bounds.

It appears moreover from a perusal of the minutes of the meetings of the arbitrators that there was some discussion between the parties as to the manner in which this property not hitherto partitioned should be dealt with. At the 14th meeting held on the 7th January 1912 the matter was referred to and it was agreed to consider at a subsequent meeting whether any partition would take place or not. At a later meeting held in 1912 the following minute is recorded: "The parties agree that excluding certain properties which they agree to keep joint, we shall divide the properties in three lots and then put the lots up to bids and then make the allotments." The property therein referred to was clearly immoveable property as no personal property was kept joint, and at a later date at a meeting held on the 30th April 1913, after the arbitrators had been to Ulao to inspect the residential house of the parties, it is recorded that the immoveable properties were arranged in three lots of nearly equal value and drawn by lot between the parties. It is clear I think that the word "bids" in the previous entry refers to something in the nature of drawing lots. Now it is not suggested that there was any other property except that of the diara villages and Ulao which the parties agreed to keep joint, and I think it must be taken until the contrary be shown that the agreement to keep joint in the sense of not dividing by metes and bounds can only refer to the diara mahals and the Ulao villages which the arbitrators in their award say were advisedly kept joint. It is true that at a subsequent date when objections to the draft award were put forward at the invitation of the arbitrators in October 1915, the defendant No. 1 claimed that the four Ulao villages should be divided and that he should get one of them which he named, I do not think, however, that at that stage of the proceedings when he had agreed to the previous partition two years earlier and the parties had been put in possession, he was entitled to insist upon a different basis of partition, and in my opinion the arbitrators were justified in refusing to accede to this demand. The reasons given by him for claiming the division of the Ulao villages by metes and bounds are that the villages which had been already allotted to him were some distance away in the Bhagalpur and Dumka districts and that labourers and other necessaries could not be obtained in those Mauzas whilst in the village which he claimed they could. I hold that the award cannot be impeached on this ground.

(2) 11 M. I. A. 75; 8 W. R. P. C. 1; 1 Suth. P. O. J. 657; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 218; 20 E. R. 30.

Under the same heading it was also contended that the arbitrators failed to partition Mauza Rahimpur. The defendants claimed this as joint property. The evidence about it is very scanty but so far as it goes, it appears that this village was purchased by the plaintiff in the farzi name of Gobind Sahai in the year 1909 after the parties had separated in mess and were carrying on a separate business. There was no evidence to show that it was joint property. The award does not specifically mention it but in Schedule X which deals with claims and objections of the respective parties, the arbitrators after dealing with a number of claims and objections state in paragraph 17 "claims made by the one party or the other similar to those mentioned in the foregoing paragraphs of this award are all disallowed". The paragraphs in question deal with many things the partition of which was claimed as being joint property. In some cases it was found that they did not exist and in others that the claim failed for want of proof. I think, therefore, it must be taken that the arbitrators intended to disallow this claim. In any case it is for those contesting the validity of the award to show that the property in question was joint property which the arbitrators omitted to partition in compliance with clause 3 of the submission. They have failed to do so.

It was next contended that certain moveables were not divided. These consisted of a sewing machine, some iron safes and a diamond ring. It is sufficient to say that the arbitrators dealt with this claim in Schedule X, paragraph 12, and dismissed it for want of proof.

In the same way it was contended that debts due by the banking business had not been apportioned. There is no evidence that any such debts existed but if they did, they would be covered by clause 11 of the award and each party would be liable for one-third share. Moreover debts due from the joint family could be realised by creditors from any member of the family and a division of particular debts between the members could not for any practical purpose be made otherwise than by shares. The assets might be and were allotted, but the debts could not be assigned so as to bind the creditors. Clause 5 of the submission gave the arbitrators a wide power as to the method of adjusting the debts of the banking business, if any, and the method adopted seems to me to have been the most practical and in accordance with the terms of the submission. The next point was that a balance of Rs. 1,293 out of a sum of Rs. 5,015 said to have been paid to Gobind Sahai, one of the former arbitrators, was left unaccounted for. The arbitrators dealt with this in Schedule X, clause 5, and disallowed the claim for want of proof. I do not see how we can question this finding. Such evidence as there was in support of the contention that any such balance existed was certainly inconclusive.

The fourth objection, heading (a), refers to certain documents relating to some of the lahnas awarded to the plaintiff and which the arbitrators ordered the plaintiff to produce. The lahnas in question appear as items Nos. 2 and 7 of Schedule 1A of the award. No. 2 was a mortgage decree obtained by the family against one Mukham Singh. No. 7 was some shares in the Tirhut Stores. The decree appears to have been for a sum of Rs. 400 and was assessed by the arbitrators after bidding by the parties at that amount. There is nothing to show that it was worth more. The Tirhut Stores shares were assessed in the same way and valued at Rs. 200. On the 11th August 1915 the defendant No. 1 applied by letter to the arbitrators to order the plaintiff to produce the decree and account of Mukhram Singh's decree and an account of dividends received from the Tirhut Stores. The letter was sent on to the plaintiff, who endorsed it: "It is not stated which bahi is required." On the 14th August a discussion took place before the arbitrators, who ordered the plaintiff to produce the accounts asked for. The order was not complied with. The defendant No. 1 called attention to this again in his written objections to the draft award on the 2nd October. The defendant No. 2 does not appear to have mentioned it. In Schedule A of the award giving the list of lahnas allotted to the plaintiff, a note appears to the effect that no evidence was adduced by the parties about the amount of Mukhram Singh's debt and the dividend of Tirhut Stores. Where a party fails to comply with an order for discovery, the proper remedy is for the party seeking discovery to apply to have the proceedings stayed or the suit dismissed. The decree against Mukhram or a certified copy could also have been produced by the defendants themselves without any difficulty, if it would assist them and if any dividend was paid by the Tirhut Stores which carried on business in Muzaffarpur, the defendants could easily have obtained evidence of the fact. None of these courses were adopted and I am not prepared to hold that the arbitrators were bound of their own initiative to refuse to proceed until the order had been complied with, still less to hold that the course adopted amounted to misconduct. The defendants, both before the arbitrators and again in the present proceedings, have had every opportunity of proving that the accounts not produced would have shown that the assessment of the two items named was under-estimated, if such were the fact, and that the arbitrators were misled, but they have not availed themselves of the opportunity and there is nothing to show that any injustice has been done. This objection in my opinion fails.

As to objections 4 (b) and (c), it is true that one arbitrator sat alone for the period named to hear and record objections by the parties and on three days there were ex parte hearings in which each party in turn explained his objections. This procedure, which would have been objectionable in ordinary circumstances, was adopted with the full concurrence of all the parties and they cannot now be allowed to take exception to a course in which for the sake of convenience they previously concurred. The minute of the 24th meeting on the 16th September 1914 records: "It is agreed by all the parties that J. M. Dutta would receive the objections of the parties and their evidence, if any, the decision to be come to by both arbitrators jointly." The procedure thus agreed to was carried out. One of the arbitrators sat to hear and record the objections on a number of days and subsequently on the 19th September and the 1st and 2nd October 1915 each of the parties appeared before the arbitrator in turn and explained his objections. It appears from the evidence that no decisions were come to by the arbitrator on these occasions. He merely recorded the objections. The objections as recorded were considered and decided subsequently by the two arbitrators sitting together. In the circumstances no exception can be taken to this course.

The objection 4 (d) refers to two suits referred to as Nos. 126 and 132 of 1911. In the first the claim was by the mother of defendant No. 2 claiming money deposited in the defendants' banking business. In the second the plaintiff was the present plaintiff's son claiming a like deposit. The learned Judge says these matters were beyond the reference and the action of the arbitrators was ultra vires, but gives no reasons for arriving at this conclusion. It seems to me that under clause 5 of the submission it was within the powers of the arbitrators to settle all debts due by the joint banking business, which these claims were. It is said that the real claimants were the defendant No. 2 in the one case and the plaintiff in the other. If this is so, the arbitrators would have power to deal with it under paragraph 4 of the submission which enables them to settle all accounts between the parties. Moreover from a perusal of the minutes of the 8th, 9th and 10th meetings it is impossible to arrive at any other conclusion than that all parties consented to these claims being dealt with in the arbitration. This objection cannot be supported.

KUNJ LAL v. BANWARI LALL.

As regards the fifth objection, the learned Judge draws attention to some instances in which the arbitrators refused by their final award to alter the provisional allotment by which certain properties were apportioned to the plaintiff's share, although in the meantime these properties turned out better than anticipated. In one case a mortgage decree allotted to the plaintiff at the decretal amount was realised by him by sale of the property which he purchased. The property proved worth more than the decretal amount. The arbitrators refused to revise the assessment of the decree and, in my opinion, quite rightly. The increment was due to the fact that the plaintiff purchased the mortgaged property, which it was open to anyone to purchase. His speculation turned out profitable. In another case a garden house was allotted to the plaintiff and he was put in possession. Before the final award it was purchased by Government under the Land Acquisition Act for a larger sum. The properties of this nature had been allotted by the former arbitrators and the parties had been in separate possession for a long time. The arbitrators had adopted the previous allotment and retained the parties in possession long before the final award and refused to interfere with the assessment (see clause 3 of the award). The learned Judge said, this showed undue bias in favour of the plaintiff. Many similar instances were discussed by the parties before the arbitrators in objection to the draft award and before the final award. The arbitrators in some instances, for reasons given, modified the provisional assessment in favour of one party or the other. In other cases they refused to do so. The learned Judge appears to have reviewed the evidence and pointed out some instances in which the award turned out profitable to the plaintiff and criticises the decision come to by the arbitrators. His criticisms would have been appropriate in argument before the arbitrators before the award was made, but with due respect to the learned Judge I think he was travelling outside his province in reviewing the evidence and accusing the arbitrators of bias because he himself would have arrived at a different decision on the evidence. We were invited to adopt the same course but must respectfully decline to do so.

The next point dealt with by the learned Judge appears to me to be based on a misapprehension of Schedule VIII of the award. This schedule adjusts the monetary liability between the parties and makes the amounts payable in two kists of three months each with interest at 6 per cent. and adds that if the conversion of the award to a decree of Court is delayed by any party entitled to get the same, interest will not run on the amounts awarded. The learned Judge treats this as a penal clause designed to stifle fair and legal objections to the award on pain of forfeiting interest. In my opinion this was not meant to penalise proper legal objections to the award. If a valid objection to the award were taken by any party and upheld, then the award could not be filed and the stipulation as to interest would avail nobody. If a baseless objection be taken and delay be caused in filing the award, I can see nothing objectionable in depriving the unsuccessful party of interest for the period of delay in filing the award caused by his own unsuccessful objection.

The last point dealt with the question of limitation. The learned Judge treated the date of the draft award as the date of the award within the meaning of Article 178 of Schedule I of the Limitation Act. With great respect to the learned Judge his decision is based upon a misapprehension of the judgment in Dutto Singh, In the matter of the petition of (3). That case decides that the date of the award referred to in the Limitation Act was the date when it was delivered to the parties so that they had notice of its contents, and not the date when it was actually written and signed which in many cases might be much earlier. In other words, the date was the date of publication, which is not complete until delivery to the parties. The draft award was not the award at all and its publication was not the publication of the award. The final award differed in many respects from the draft, which from its very nature and the purpose for which it was made could not be regarded as the award. The present application was clearly within six months of the date of the award, and this objection also fails.

RAJANI KANTA BHADRA v. PUNCHANANDA.

In the result the appeal will be allowed and the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge will be set aside; the award will be filed and judgment entered in accordance therewith. The appellant will be allowed costs here and in the Court below against the parties who appeared.

The Court of first instance decreed the suit, but on appeal the lower Appellate Court reversing the decision of the primary Court dismissed the suit. Both the original mortgagor and the mortgagor are dead and the suit was brought by the son of the mortgagor against the son of the mortgagor. The main defence was that the amount (principal and interest) due under the mortgage bond had been satisfied. The ground on which the Court of Appeal below dismissed the suit is that the bond has not been duly proved as required by law, although the point was taken neither in the Court of first instance nor in the memorandum of appeal presented in the Court of Appeal. It was only at the time of the hearing of the appeal that this point on which the decision of the lower Appellate Court is based was raised for the first time. My first point is that the lower Appellate Court should not have allowed the defendant to urge this point in appeal, especially when the plaintiff was not served with any notice that this point would be urged in appeal.

[FLETCHER, J.—The Appellate Court has got discretion to allow a point of law to be urged although the point was not raised in the first Court and not taken in the memorandum of appeal, provided it can decide the point from the evidence on the record before it.]

No doubt it can do so. But in exercising the discretion the Appellate Court must also consider other circumstances connected with the point raised for the first time. In this case it should have considered that in the written statement there is not only no denial of the execution of the document and of its having been duly attested by witnesses, but also there is the plea of the fact of payment of all amount due under the bond, which has been disbelieved by the first Court. In fact the execution of the bond has been admitted, and so the defendant cannot turn round and say that the deed was not duly executed or that the execution has not been duly proved, because a party to a suit cannot be allowed to take up inconsistent pleas to the detriment of the other party.

My next point is that the Court of Appeal below has erred in law in holding that the scribe who signed the name of the mortgagor (who was an illiterate man) cannot be taken to be an attesting witness, and, therefore, the execution of the bond has not been proved as required by law. Refers to section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. In this case the mortgage bond was not signed by the mortgagor's Attorney. The mortgagor himself was present but as he was an illiterate man and so could not sign his name, his name was signed by the pen of the scribe who must have been present at the time of the execution. Refers to Dinamoyee Debi v. Bon Behari Kapur (1).

[Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Respondent.—The decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee reported as Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (2) is authority on this point.]

The facts of that case are somewhat different from those of this case, and so that case cannot support the defendant's contention. My submission is that where the name of the mortgagor was written by the pen of the scribe who was all along present, the scribe who signs his name as an attesting witness may be taken as an attesting witness competent to prove the execution of the bond.

[FLETCHER, J.—A person cannot attest his own signature.]

The scribe is not attesting his own signature but he is attesting the signature of the person whom he represented at the time of the execution of the deed.

Babu Hemendro Kumar Das, for the Respondent, referred to Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (2); Sarurjigar Begam v. Barodakant Mitter (3) and Ram Bahadur Singh v. Ajodhya Singh (4), in which this point was decided.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Commilla, dated the 23rd August 1916, reversing the decision of the Munsif at Brahmanbaria. The plaintiff brought the suit to enforce a simple mortgage. The plaintiff is the heir of the original mortgagee and the defendant is the heir of the original mortgagor. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit for the reason, amongst others, that it has not been proved that the document sued upon was executed in the manner required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The facts found are these: The original mortgagor was an illiterate man and the document was drawn up by the scribe—one Uma Nath Dutt. The mortgagor not being able to sign his name, the document was executed on his behalf by Uma Nath, and it is found and is supported by an inspection of the mortgage-deed that no mark or seal or thumb impression of the mortgagor appears on the mortgage-deed. The learned Judge considered that the document had not been attested by two witnesses as required by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, the only persons purporting to sign the document being Uma Nath as the scribe and one witness Prokash. It is quite clear in the circumstances that Uma Nath, having executed the document for and on behalf of the mortgagor, was not competent to attest his own signature as an attesting witness, even in the view that the subscription of his name as the scribe amounted to attestation within the meaning of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. In that view, only Prokash was the attesting witness. The document having been attested by only one attesting witness was not, therefore, executed in the manner prescribed by section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act. In my opinion, this case is clearly covered by the observations of the Privy Council in the case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir Rowthan (2). I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Oudh Civil Digest, para. 172—Execution of decree—Decree transferred from one Court to another—Competence of Court to persevere with execution where first attempt to execute has failed.

A decree does not become incapable of execution within the meaning of paragraph 172 of the Oudh Civil Digest merely because one attempt to execute it has proved unsuccessful. The Court to which a decree is sent for execution is competent to persevere with the execution until it is made to appear either that satisfaction has been obtained or that execution is no longer possible.

A decree having been transferred to a Court for execution, the decree-holder made an application for arrest of the judgment-debtor. The Court directed the issue of a warrant of arrest, which was returned with the endorsement that the judgment-debtor could not be found. Immediately afterwards the decree-holder again made an application for the arrest of the judgment-debtor and the Court directed the issue of a second warrant:

Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to direct the issue of a second warrant.

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated the 23rd August 1918.

Babu Hari Kishen Dhaon, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is up before us under Order XLI, rule 11, and after hearing the arguments of Counsel we have come to the conclusion that it must be dismissed.

The facts are as follows. The appellant Gur Dayal is a person against whom a decree for close on Rs. 14,000 was obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Cawnpore. This decree was transferred for execution to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow and after the transfer an application was made on behalf of the decree-holders for the arrest of the appellant-judgment-debtor. It is said that a warrant was issued and that it was returned with an endorsement to the effect that the judgment-debtor could not be found. The learned Counsel informs us that after this return had been made, the Court ordered the proceedings to be filed (dakhil daftar). Immediately after this another application was made for the judgment-debtor's arrest. This time the warrant was executed and Gur Dayal was taken into custody.

The argument before us is that after the first warrant for arrest had been returned unexecuted, the executing Court had no further jurisdiction to deal with the matter and that it was the duty of the Court there and then to return the execution proceedings to the Court at Cawnpore. In support of this argument a reference is made to paragraph 172 of the Oudh Civil Digest, which deals with the procedure to be observed by Courts in Oudh which receive applications from other Courts for execution. It is provided by the rule contained in this paragraph that the execution record is to be returned to the Court which made the decree in three cases, namely, (1) when the decree has been executed wholly or in part, (2) when the decree is found for any reason to be incapable of execution, and (3) if no application is made for execution after the expiry of one year from the date on which the decree is received. The rule further provides that in no case is the execution file to be consigned to the record room of the executing Court. The appellant's Counsel takes his stand upon that portion of the rule which provides for the return of the execution record when the decree is found for any reason to be incapable of execution. In other words, the contention seems to be that because the first warrant which was issued for the arrest of the judgment-debtor was returned unexecuted, the decree could no longer be executed by the issue of a second warrant. We are unable to entertain this argument. In no way is it possible to say that a decree becomes incapable of execution because one attempt to execute it has turned out to be infructuous. In short, it cannot be said that the jurisdiction of the executing Court is to be confined to one attempt to execute the decree and no more. In our opinion it is competent to the Court which is executing the decree to persevere with the execution, until it is made to appear either that satisfaction has been obtained or that execution is no longer possible. We have no doubt that the Subordinate Judge of Lucknow had jurisdiction to issue this second warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor.

The appeal is dismissed accordingly.

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 60 (b)—License, whether can be revoked.

Under section 60 (b) of the Easements Act a license may be revoked by the grantor, unless the licensee acting upon the license has executed a work of permanent character and incurred expenses in the execution.

Plaintiff, out of gratitude, allowed the defendant who was his medical adviser to occupy a certain house. The defendant erected a compound wall, fixed up a water pump, flagged the floor with stones and erected two huts:

Held, that the improvements executed by the defendant were of a permanent character and that, therefore, the license was not revocable during the lifetime of the defendant.

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Raipur, dated the 27th July 1917, in Appeal No. 27 of 1917.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. J. C. Ghose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Courts below have found that the defendant-appellant was given a license to live in a house belonging to the plaintiff. It would appear that the plaintiff was under the medical treatment of the defendant and the house was given to live in out of gratitude. There was no written agreement as to the terms on which the defendant was to occupy it. It has been held by the Courts below that the defendant was a mere licensee. The point raised in this second appeal is that the case is covered by section 60, clause (b) of the Indian Easements Act. Under that section a license may be revoked by the grantor unless the licensee acting upon the license has executed a work of permanent character and incurred expenses in execution. The first Court found that the defendant had spent Rs. 600 (six hundred) in what may be described as improvements. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that only Rs. 200 (two hundred) was spent by the defendant. The lower Appellate Court finds that the improvements consist of a compound wall, the fixing up of a water pump, the flagging of the floor with stones and the erection of two huts. Having recorded these findings, the learned District Judge thinks these are nothing more than what an ordinary licensee paying no rent would make for adding to his comforts. I am unable to agree with him in his view that a licensee would spend so much as Rs. 200 (two hundred) for his own comforts when the license can be determined at any moment. These findings substantially comply with the terms of the Statute and I think that the license should have been held not revocable. The first Court properly dismissed the suit, holding that the license was not revocable during the lifetime of the licensee. The appeal is decreed. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the first Court restored. Each party will bear his own costs of the two Appellate Courts.

Custom—Abadi, house in, occupied by kamin—Collateral, whether entitled to succeed.

Under the ordinary village custom a near collateral of a deceased kamin is entitled to retain possession of a house in the village abadi which was occupied by the deceased.

Second appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 27th November 1916.

Mr. Kharak Singh, for the Appellants.

Mr. Taj-ud-Din, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—I have not thought it necessary to call upon the Counsel for the respondents in this case, as after hearing the appellants' Pleader I think that the decree passed by the Senior Subordinate MOHAN LAL v. GANESH RAM.

Judge, Gujranwala, which is under appeal, is correct and must be maintained. The Senior Subordinate Judge has held, on the authority of a recent decision of this Court, reported as Kala v. Hasham (1), that the respondent Umar Bakhsh, being a near collateral of Ahmad Din, deceased, who had been in possession of the house in dispute as a kamin under the appellants, is entitled to retain possession of the same under the ordinary village custom applicable to such cases. Ahmad Din left a widow Musammât Budhi, who resided in the house for about a year and then abandoned it. It is argued that there is no definite finding by the Senior Subordinate Judge that Musammât Budhi had abandoned the house as held by the Munsif. But on the appellants' own showing Musammât Budhi has left the house, for otherwise they had no right to bring the present suit for possession, and it is clear that the fact of the abandonment of the house by Musammât Budhi was not disputed before the Subordinate Judge. It is next argued that since Umar Bakhsh is not a near collateral of Ahmad Din, he has no right to succeed to the house in suit. But admittedly Umar Bakhsh is uncle of Ahmad Din, and as such he is his near collateral. The argument is untenable on the face of it and hardly deserves refutation. It is further contended that the appellants are not ordinary agricultural proprietors in the village who gave a site in the abadi to a kamin to build upon under circumstances which would entitle the kamin and his collaterals to have a right of residence in the house. But this point was not taken in the lower Courts and no issue was framed regarding it. I cannot, therefore, allow it to be raised at this stage of the proceedings. Lastly, it is urged that since the respondents pleaded that they were full owners of the house and not village kamins having only a right of residence therein in succession to Ahmad Din, the Senior Subordinate Judge, having found that the respondents' alleged ownership was not established, should have decreed the appellants' claim. But as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, the plea of permanent right of residence could be raised in the alternative by the respondents and was so raised by them; and upon that point, the finding being in their favour, the suit of the appellants was rightly dismissed.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Seoni, in Civil Appeal No. 60 of 1917, decided on the 18th December 1917, arising out of Civil Suit No. 153 of 1917, decided by the Munsif, Seoni, on the 18th August 1917.

Mr. Brakshah, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought on the 9th May on foot of a bond (Exhibit P-1), dated the 18th February 1903. By this document the defendants who are respondents in this Court, promised to pay Rs. 1,000 due to the plaintiff-appellant by 5 instalments of Rs. 200 each. The payments were to be made in the month of Baisakh of each of five consecutive Sambat years beginning with 1967, so that they were due as follows:—

1. Between the 25th April and the 24th May 1910.

2. Between the 14th April and the 13th May 1911.

3. Between the 2nd April and the 1st May 1912.

4. Between the 21st April and the 20th May 1913.

5. Between the 11th April and the 9th May 1914.

The first instalment was paid in full on the 16th May 1910. Two other payments were made, namely, Rs. 126-4-0 on the 10th November 1912 and Rs. 57-5-0 on the 30th October 1913. All these payments were evidenced by an endorsement written on the back of the bond by the defendant Ganesh Ram and signed both by him and by his co defendant Ramchand. The endorsement has been translated thus :

"Repayments made.

200 0 0 Baisakh Sudi 8, 1967.

First instalment paid.

243 9 0 Second instalment, Baisakh Sudi 15, 1968.

Paid on account of the third instalment, Rs. 43-9-0.

Garden expenses caused to be credited.

Rs. 57-5-0 Katik Sudi 1, 1970
(30th October 1913). Garden expenses caused to be credited.

The bond contains a stipulation that if any instalment remained unpaid wholly or in part on due date, the balance should be paid along with the next instalment, failing which the entire balance should become exigible in lump. Interest at 8 annas per cent. per mensem was made payable on each defaulted instalment from the date of default. It is common ground that the cause of action arose on the 1st May 1912, and in the plaint reliance is placed upon the defendants' endorsement on the bond, which bears date the 10th May 1914. The defendants pleaded limitation, and the trial Judge dismissed the suit after finding on a single preliminary issue that the endorsement did not give the plaintiff a fresh period of limitation from the time of its being signed. His view was that the writing did not of itself import any acknowledgment of existing liability and that section 19 (1), Indian Limitation Act, had, therefore, no application to the case.

—In appeal section 19 was not relied upon for the plaintiff, but the lower Appellate Court took the same view as the trial Judge of the term of the endorsement.

In this Court section 19 (1), Indian Limitation Act, is again relied upon for the plaintiff appellant and the following authorities are cited: Bheemangowda v. Beranah (1), Janki Prasad v. Ghulam Ali (2) and Pamulapati Venkatakrishnaiah v. Kondamudi Subbrayudu (3).

None of these cases was referred to by either of the lower Courts. In the first the terms of the endorsement are not given in the report. In the second the debt was a judgment-debt and the judgment-debtor, after making payments out of Court, endorsed the decree in his own handwriting in words which were translated as follows:—

"I, Ghulam Ali, judgment-debtor of this decree, have myself paid Rs.—and have endorsed this payment on the decree in my own handwriting."

It was held that the description of himself as judgment-debtor necessarily implied the admission of liability under the decree. In the third case the endorsement ran thus:—

"Rs. 378 13th July 1905. Rs. 378 only have been paid towards this document by Subbarayudu.

Rs. 22. Again on the same day, Rs. 22 only has been paid."

Both the learned Judges who decided the case had no doubt that these endorsements embodied an acknowledgment of liability.

Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., remarked as follows:—

"The debtor states in terms that he pays Rs. 378 towards the amount due on the bond and on the same day, made another payment of Rs. 22 and made another endorsement. I construe the endorsement as meaning that the debtor made a part payment of the amount due on the bond (on that day over Rs. 1,500 was due as shown on the face of the bond), which is certainly an acknowledgment that more money was due."

The circumstances of the present case are very similar to those in the recent Madras case and I am clearly of opinion that the endorsement amounts to an acknowledgment of liability. In Vithal v. Gopal Rao (4) I pointed out that section 19, Indian Limitation Act, does not require the exact amount of liability to be stated in the acknowledgment. The defendants expressly admitted by writing that they paid Rs. 43.9.0 on account of the third instalment, thus indicating that the balance of that instalment was still unpaid. Moreover, when the third payment (Rs. 57.5.0) was made, the fourth instalment had already fallen due and the reference to the 1st, 2nd and 3rd instalments only raises the implication that nothing had been paid against the fourth instalment. Similarly by the time the endorsement was written the fifth instalment also had fallen due and the necessary implication from the omission to show any payment as made against it is that it remained wholly unpaid. This view seems to be supported by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maniram v. Seth Rupchand (5), where a mere admission that the defendant had open and current accounts with the plaintiff was held to amount to an acknowledgment of liability to pay any sum which on taking of an account might be found due.

On behalf of the defendants-respondents I am referred to Khawaja Muhammad Janula v. Venkatarayar (6). In that case the defendant who pleaded limitation had entered the payment in the plaintiff's account-book; the body of the entry included the defendant's signature but no signature was appended. It was held that writing the name in any part of the document would suffice for a signature, provided the writer intended by entering his name to indicate that the acknowledgment was his own. The judgment of Scotland, C. J., shows that to obtain the benefit of a new period of limitation the plaintiff must prove that the party sued has in writing, authenticated by his signature, either in express terms or by reasonable construction acknowledged and admitted that the debt or part thereof is due from him. The payment made in that case satisfied the debt in part only and it was held that the entry aforesaid might serve as a sufficient acknowledgment in writing.

Being of opinion that the endorsement on the bond amounts to an acknowledgment of liability for the purposes of section 19, Indian Limitation Act, I set aside the decrees of the lower Courts and remand the case for disposal on the merits to the Court of first instance. The Court-fee paid on the memorandum of second appeal will be refunded and other costs in this Court will be costs in the cause.

Case remanded.

Appeals against the decrees of the Additional District Judge, Midnapore, dated the 30th of June 1916, reversing the decrees of the Munsif, 2nd Court at that place, dated the 25th of June 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mozumdar (with him Babu Jyotish Chander Hazra), for the Appellants.—These appeals are on behalf of the pro forma defendants who are co-sharer landlords, and arise out of suits for the recovery of arrears of rent said to be due to the plaintiffs in respect of their eight-annas share in the Mehal. In 1907 the plaintiffs purchased a four annas share in the Mehal at revenue sale. In 1909 they purchased by a deed of conveyance two-annas share. Subsequently in 1911 they purchased at Court sale another two annas share. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to establish the relationship of landlord and tenant. On appeal, the Court of Appeal below found that the lands in suit were nij jote lands and that the 16-annas rent was being realized by the pro forma defendants for the last twenty years, but passed a rent-decree for the eight annas share of the rent against the pro forma defendants who are the eight-annas landlords, without upsetting the finding of the first Court that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the plaintiffs and the tenant defendants and that neither the plaintiffs nor their predecessors-in-interest had realized any rent in respect of these lands. I submit that in a suit so framed the plaintiffs cannot get a rent-decree against the pro forma defendants (eight-annas landlords) and that no decree in favour of the plaintiffs can be passed so long as the finding of the primary Court stands good. Where, as in this case, by arrangement between the co-sharer landlords some of the landlords have been recovering 16 annas share of the rent from some of the tenants, at all events, for not less twenty years, the arrangement cannot be upset except by proper and judicial proceedings taken for that purpose, and a suit for rent in which the co-sharer landlords have been joined as pro forma defendants cannot effect that purpose. When the finding of the primary Court as regards the failure of the plaintiffs to establish the relationship of landlord and tenant stands good, it is certain that they cannot get a decree against the tenants. The plaintiffs cannot also get a decree for the recovery of their share of the rent against the co-sharer landlords (pro forma defendants) in a suit framed under section 14SA of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If the plaintiffs can at all recover their share from the pro forma defendants, they can do so only by a suit for contribution. The co-sharer landlords have been joined simply with a view to comply with the provisions of section 148A, Bengal Tenancy Act, so that the plaintiffs might get a rent-decree. The pro forma defendants (appellants), who are the owners of the eight-annas share, cannot be made liable in a suit for rent against the tenants for the rents which have been realized by them in excess of their shares. No rent decree can be passed in a suit of this nature. There is no doubt that the form of the decree is not in accordance with law. The present case is on all fours with the case of Baikantha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (1). See also the case of Lala Ram Saran Lal v. Nem Narain Singh (2). On the authority of these cases, my submission is, the decision of the Court of Appeal below cannot stand. Two distinct and separate causes of action, viz., one against the tenants and the other against the co-sharer landlords, have been wrongly joined in this suit for rent. There is a misjoinder of causes of action in this suit. Refers to Order II, rule 3, Civil Procedure Code.

MANINDRA NATH ROY v. KANHAI RAM MARWARI.

[Babu Mohindra Nath Roy for the Respondents.—Even if there is any defect, that is cured by the provisions of section 99, Civil Procedure Code.]

Section 99 cannot cure the defect, inasmuch as the misjoinder of causes of action in this case has affected the merits of the case.

Babu Mohindra Nath Roy (with him Babu Satcouripati Roy), for the Respondents.—In the prayer portion of the plaint your Lordships will find that the prayer of the plaintiffs is that a decree may be passed against the tenant-defendants for their share of the rent, together with a prayer in the alternative that if it be found that the amount due to the plaintiffs had been realized by the pro forma defendants, a decree for the sum so realized be passed against the latter. The Court of Appeal below was satisfied that the sum due to the plaintiffs had been realized by the pro forma defendants and so it passed and rightly passed a decree against the latter. There is no defect in the frame of the suit or in the joinder of parties to the suit or in the form of the decree. Refers to Order I, rule 3 of Act V of 1908. The cases referred to in support of the appellants' case do not apply to the facts of this case.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mojumdar replied.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in these suits is a purchaser of an 8-anna share of a certain estate. He brought the 16 suits out of which these appeals arise and others to recover his share of rent from the principal defendants making their co-sharers pro forma defendants. The first Court dismissed the suits, on the ground that no relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the plaintiff and the principal defendants. The lower Appellate Court has granted the plaintiff a decree for his share of the arrears of rent claimed against the pro forma defendants, on the finding that the full rent had been paid to the pro forma defendants by the principal defendants. In our opinion, on the facts found this decision is justified. It appears from the plaint that the plaintiff clearly asked in the alternative for a decree against the pro forma defendants, if it was found that they had realized the rent due to the plaintiff's share. It is contended that the prayer for this relief could not be joined to the prayer for the recovery of rent against the principal defendants, but in our opinion Order I, rule 3, of the Civil Procedure Code provides for the joinder of such claims and it is a well-established practice to join such claims. For the defendants-appellants it is alleged that the plaintiff's only remedy is a suit for partition and that without that he is not entitled to recover any rent. It is said that there has been an arrangement between the different co-sharers by which the pro forma defendants are in sole possession of certain plots of land and that such an arrangement cannot be disturbed by a rent suit of this nature. In the first place, we may remark that in the written statement of the pro forma defendants no allegation of an amicable arrangement in respect of the different portions of the estate was alleged. In the next place, we observe that in a road-cess return submitted by the pro forma defendants they only asserted an 8-anna interest in the property in suit. When these defendants recover the whole rent asserting only an 8-anna interest in the superior right, they are obviously bound to make over half of the rent collected to the owners of the other half of the proprietary right. The real difference between the two lower Courts is that the Munsif has accepted the pro forma defendants' plea that this road-cess return, was filed by mistake, while the learned District Judge has disbelieved the story of mistake and held that it contained a binding admission. On these findings the decrees of the learned District Judge were right. We accordingly dismiss these appeals with costs.

MANINDRA NATH ROY v. KANHAI RAM MARWARI.

(7)—Part payment of principal, whether must be signed by debtor—Execution of decree—Instalment decree—Default in payment—Limitation, commencement of.

Under section 20 of the Limitation Act a fresh period of limitation can only begin to run if the fact of the person making the payment or part payment of the principal debt appears in the handwriting of such person. [p. 729, col. 2; p. 730, col. 1.]

Unless an instalment decree clearly leaves the decree-holder no option on the happening of a default but to execute the decree once and for all for the whole amount due under it, the decree-holder may execute it on the happening of the first, second or any subsequent default, and limitation will run against him only in respect of each instalment separately from the date on which each such instalment may become due and payable. JUDGMENT.

ATKINSON, J.—The plaintiff in this suit sued the defendants for a money-debt alleged to be due by the defendants to the plaintiff. The suit was compromised on the basis that the defendants would pay to the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 975 in full discharge of principal and interest by annual kists. A decree was drawn up in the form of a consent decree; and it provided that the sum of Rs. 975 should be paid by instalments. The decree itself is dated the 29th April 1912, and the instalments were to become payable on the 1st April of each succeeding year after the date of the decree until the entire debt of Rs. 975 was satisfied and discharged. The decree also provided that in the event of default being made in the payment of any one of the instalments, the balance remaining unpaid should immediately fall due and be forthwith recoverable.

The instalment payable on the 1st April 1913 amounted to Rs. 200 and that sum was in fact paid. The instalment due on the 1st April 1914 was Rs. 150 and this sum was also paid. Both the aforesaid instalments were paid on the 1st April 1914. Since the 1st April 1914 no payments have been made in respect of the kists for the years 1915, 1916 and 1917.

The plaintiff accordingly instituted an application seeking leave to execute the decree to recover the unrealized instalments for the respective kists due for the years 1915, 1916 and 1917.

Admittedly the first two instalments amounting to Rs. 350 have been paid by the judgment-debtor.

The learned Vakil appearing on behalf of the petitioners and defendants contends before us that inasmuch as no payment or valid acknowledgment was made or given for the payments made for the kists falling due on the 1st April 1913 and on the 1st April 1914, the amount due for the succeeding kists could not be recovered, and the right to issue execution of the decree is now barred by lapse of time. The foundation of this argument is based on the construction of section 20 of the Limitation Act (Act IX of 1908). On the analysis of this section it is quite clear that the argument addressed to us is not well-founded in point of law.

It is contended that the learned Judge was wrong in the conclusion at which he arrived, inasmuch as he held that the signature of the person endorsing the fact of payment at the time the instalments for 1913 and 1914 were paid, was the genuine signature of the person called Kangal Rai, and that, therefore, the debt for which execution was sought could be recovered. It is clear from the tenor of the judgment of the learned Judge that he never had present to his mind the application of the proviso to section 20 of the Limitation Act. If he had, he would have been obliged to hold on the evidence that the signature of Kangal Rai in respect of the payments made was invalid, inasmuch as it was not established by proof that Kangal Rai was the duly authorised agent of the judgment-debtor, and that Kangal Rai in fact made the payments alleged in discharge of the instalments for the years 1913 and 1914.

The decree-holder himself admits in his evidence that the kists for the years 1913 and 1914 were paid by the judgment-debtor and by no one else; and that the same were paid in discharge of principal and interest due, and consequently by virtue of the proviso to section 20 of the Limitation Act, it is clear that a fresh period of limitation can only begin to run if the fact of the person making the payment or part payment of the principal debt appears in the handwriting of such person.

The part payment made was made by the judgment-debtor and not by Kangal Rai, and, therefore, in order that such payment should operate as a fresh period from which limitation should begin to run, it was essentially necessary that the judgment-debtor should sign and endorse the fact of the payment so made by him. The signature as to the fact of payment, even if genuinely made by Kangal Rai, would not satisfy the requirements of the Limitation Act inasmuch as he did not make the payment relied on even, though he may have been authorized to endorse the fact of payment by the judgment-debtor.

This point was considered in this Court in a case reported as Bishun Perkash Narain Singh v. Muhammad-Sadique (1). In that case we adopted the interpretation of section 20 of the Limitation Act laid down in the Full Bench ruling reported as Mukhi Haji Rahmuttulla v. Coverji Bhuja (2). The case reported in the Patna Law Journal (1) and the Full Bench ruling in Calcutta (2), in their facts, resemble very much the facts of the present case. Therefore, we are of opinion that the point taken by the learned Vakil on behalf of the petitioner is not well-founded and cannot be supported in point of law.

It does not appear that the learned Judge properly applied the law applicable to the facts of this case. If the case rested merely on the true interpretation of section 20 of the Limitation Act, the learned Judge's decision would have been erroneous.

The short answer given by Mr. Roy, learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the decree-holder, to the point taken by the judgment debtor seems completely to dispense with the necessity of deciding the question of the construction of section 20 of the Limitation Act in this case. However, we feel it right to express our opinion thereon owing to the erroneous decision of the learned Judge. Mr. Roy bases his argument on Article 182, clause 7 of the Limitation Act of 1908; and he argued that the learned Judge was in error as to the nature and effect of the alleged payments made in 1913 and 1914 which he conceived, had the legal effect of keeping the principal debt alive. Mr. Roy argues that he is not concerned with any such proposition.

The application before the Court was for leave to execute the decree for recovery of specified sums of money due on the respective dates upon which the same were payable; and Mr. Roy contends that because the decree is in that form, it gives the decree-holder a right to enforce payment of each instalment as it falls due within 3 years from the date on which the instalment became automatically payable under the decree.

The wording of clause 7, Article 182, runs as follows: "(Where the application is to enforce any payment which the decree or order directs to be made at a certain date) such date."

Accordingly Mr. Roy argues that by reason of clause 7 of Article 182, he is entitled to execute the decree for 1915, 1916 and 1917 and to recover all the kists respectively payable on the 1st April 1915, 1st April 1916 and 1st April 1917, these being instalments which accrued due and were payable within 3 years from the date of the application for leave to issue execution.

We think that Mr. Roy's argument is well-founded; and that he correctly interprets the powers exercisable under Article 182, clause 7.

The cases reported as Ajudhia v. Kunjal (3), Shankar Prasad v. Jalpa Prasad (4) and Lachmi Narain v. Sarju Farshad (5) all consistently support the argument addressed to us by Mr. Roy and, as we believe, accurately declare the law. The right to execute accrues and continues for three years from the date when the default is made in the payment of any one instalment.

The learned Vakil on behalf of the petitioner relies on the case reported as Hurri Pershad Chowdhry v. Nasib Singh (6), where a different view of the law appears to have been taken from that laid down in the long line of decisions in the Allahabad High Court. With great respect to the learned Judges' decision reported as Hurri Pershad Chowdhry v. Nasib Singh (6), we are unable to follow their reasoning. The decisions reported in the Allahabad Series (3), (4), (5) appear to us to be consistent with the exact wording of Article 182, clause 7, and it would be, in our opinion, contrary to the ends of justice if any artificial construction was to be put on Article 182, clause 7, which is clear and express in its terms and void of ambiguity.

It must be remembered that in the cases cited in the Allahabad Series (3), (4), (5) it was pointed out that a decree-holder having a decree in the form of the decree in the present case, has a right to execute the decree for the whole amount due if default be made; and to have the decree, as far as possible, construed in his favour. Therefore, unless the decree clearly leaves the decree-holder no option on the happening of a default but to execute the decree once and for all for the whole amount due under it, the decree-holder may execute it on the happening of the first, second or any subsequent default; and limitation will run only against him in respect of each instalment separately from the time when each such instalment may become due and payable.

For these reasons we think that the arguments of Mr. Roy is well-founded and that the application for leave to issue execution is not barred; and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover by this execution proceeding the kists due for the years 1915, 1916 and 1917.

We accordingly dismiss the appeal and we direct that the judgment-debtor do pay to the plaintiff the sum of 2 gold mokurs as costs of this appeal.

A grove-holder, who obtains by inheritance the superior proprietary rights in the village in which the grove stands, does not lose his right to the grove when the superior proprietary rights so inherited by him pass by virtue of an auction sale to a third person.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 25th March 1918, confirming that of the Munsif, Rae Bareilly, dated the 15th September 1917.

Mr. Ali Mohammad, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this appeal is whether a grove-holder, who obtains by inheritance the superior proprietary rights in the village in which the grove stands, loses his right to the grove when the superior proprietary rights so inherited by him pass by virtue of an auction sale to a third person. The Courts below found that the auction sale only affected the superior proprietary rights in the land as distinct from the grove.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants relies on the decision in Surja Narain Mandal v. Nanda Lal Sinha (1), which follows an earlier decision in Raja Kishendatt Ram v. Raja Mumtaz Ali Khan (2). But the case of a lessee acquiring the rights of a lessor stands on a quite different footing. When the lessee becomes the owner of the rights of the lessor, the lease determines. Similarly when a mortgagee becomes the owner of the rights of the mortgagor, the mortgage ceases to exist as such. But a right to land is quite distinct from a right to a grove or the property in the trees comprised therein. The sale certificate contains no indication that the grove was included in the sale. When a sale is effected of a fractional share in a village, all legal incidents thereof pass with it. But a grove held by the proprietor from before the time he became a proprietor is not necessarily a legal incident of his proprietorship of the land. The right to the grove stands, in the above circumstances, on a quite different footing from a right to the land.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed.

A preliminary decree for sale was passed in a mortgage suit under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. The new Civil Procedure Code, Act V of 1908, having come into force before the expiry of the time fixed in the preliminary decree for payment of the mortgage amount, the mortgagee applied for a final decree under Order XXXIV, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that a final and executable decree was passed in the case under the Transfer of Property Act, notwithstanding that the direction in the decree for the sale of the property was made conditional on default of payment of the amount found due to the plaintiff by a certain date; [p. 733, col. 1.]

(2) that the decree-holder's remedy was to apply for an order absolute; [p. 733, col. 2.]

(3) that the matter was governed by Article 182 and not by Article 181 of the Limitation Act. [p. 733, col. 1.]

Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao, 41 Ind. Cas. 268; 32 M. L. J. 455, dissented from.

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—The repeal of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act regarding mortgage decrees could not, having regard to section 6, clause (c) of the General Clauses Act, deprive the holder of a mortgage decree passed under it of his remedy by way of getting an order absolute in respect of his right under the decree so as to make it executable in the strict sense. [p. 733, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Court of the District Court, Madura, in Appeal Suit No. 230 of 1915; preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirumangalam, in Execution Petition No. 32 of 1915, in Original Suit No. 38 of 1906.

FACTS.—On 16th July 1908 the Court passed a mortgage decree in favour of plaintiff, which directed that the decree amount should be paid within six months. Before the time expired, the new Code of Civil Procedure, Act V of 1908, came into force. In May 1911 the decree-holder applied for an order for sale under Order XXXIV, rule 5, Civil Procedure Code. A second application was made in 1914 praying for a final decree. The Court having returned it for presentation on the execution side, it was so presented. It was contended that the application was barred under Article 181. This was overruled and the application was allowed. On appeal this decision was upheld. A second appeal to the High Court was dismissed by Justices Spencer and Srinivasa Aiyangar. The appellant applied for a review of the order having regard to a decision of another Divisional Bench in the case reported as Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (1).

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—On further consideration I am not satisfied that the decision, dated the 20th March 1917, of Srinivasa Aiyangar, J., and myself in Appeal against Appellate Order No. 95 of 1916 was wrong. It is argued on the strength of the subsequent decision by another Bench in Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (1) that the fact that in this case the date for payment was the date after the Code of 1908 came into force is enough to distinguish this case from the cases in Balaji Rao v. Harirama Chetty (2), Singaravelu Pillai v. Santhana Krishna Mudaliar (3), Mahammad Husain v. Abdul Kareem (4) and Natesa Udayan v. Annasami Udayan (5), which we followed. I think that a final and executable decree was passed in this case under the Transfer of Property Act, notwithstanding that the direction in the decree for sale of property was made conditional on default of payment of the amount found due to the plaintiff by a certain date. With due respect to the learned Judges who decided Nimmala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (1), I am of opinion that the introduction of the new Code did not give rise to any new right under Article 181 of the Limitation Act to have a fresh final decree passed in consequence of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, under which these proceedings—commenced, being superseded (see section 6, General Clauses Act). In other words, if Article 182 governed the proceedings on 16th July 1908 when the decree was passed, the introduction of the new Civil Procedure Code on 1st January 1909 did not have the effect of making it incumbent on the decree-holder to apply under Article 181 for a final decree under Order XXXIV, rule 5. The second appeal must be again dismissed with costs.

(1) 41 Ind. Cas. 268; 32 M. L. J. 455,

SADASIYA Aiyar, J.—I fully concur in the opinion just now pronounced by my learned brother. The question whether Article 181 (old Article 170) or Article 182 (old Article 179) of the Limitation Act is applicable to an application for an order absolute under the Transfer of Property Act procedure is of little importance as, whether the former or the latter article applied to the initial application, a subsequent application, whether for an order absolute or for execution in the strict sense, will be governed by the provisions of clause 5 of Article 182, which gives 3 years' period, from the fresh starting point created by the initial application, which is an application for execution or, at least, an application to take a step-in-aid of execution. [See, however, Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal (6) which shows that Article 182 (old Article 179) is the Article really applicable even to the initial application.] I am further of opinion that, having regard to the General Clauses Act, section 6, clause (c), the repeal of the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act could not deprive the holder of a mortgage decree passed under it of his "remedy" by way of getting an order absolute "in respect of" his right under the decree so as to make it executable in the strict sense. I, therefore, dissent respectfully from the obiter dicta in Nimala Mahankali v. Kallakuri Subba Rao (1) on which the petitioner relies and agree that the second appeal should be dismissed with costs.

BHUSAN CHANDRA GHOSE v. JAHAR MAL BHUTRA.

the 29th of November 1916, affirming that of the Munsif, 2nd Court at Howrah, dated the 15th of June 1915.

FACTS material to the report will appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"The plaintiffs sued the defendants in the Court below for a declaration that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who had obtained a rent decree against the plaintiffs alleging themselves to be the owners of a moiety share of the superior right, had no title to the land and that the defendants Nos. 3 to 5, who are the 15-pice Zemindars of Mouza Khurut Kamudia, are the landlords under whom the plaintiffs hold the disputed plot at a yearly rental of Sissa Rs. 4. They further prayed for a refund of Rs. 44 and odd realised by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in execution of that rent decree, impeached it as fraudulent and collusive and asked for an injunction restraining the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from realising rent from them.

The principal defendants who alone contested the suit, urged that this suit being in the nature of an interpleader suit is not maintainable and that it is barred as res judicata.

The learned Munsif gave effect to the defendants' contentions and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The plaintiffs have appealed and their contention before this Court is that the learned Munsif took an erroneous view of the law and dismissed their suit. On the merits of the case they urged that the learned Munsif having believed their version should have allowed their claim.

I think the learned Munsif took a correct view of the law and the plaintiffs' suit is not maintainable. In deciding the question of res judicata the essence of the allegations of the parties must be considered and what the real bone of contention was in the previous litigation must be seen. The relation of landlord and tenant having been found to exist between the plaintiffs and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the previous suit fought up to the Appellate Court the plaintiffs cannot now turn round and re-open the matter, dressing their allegations in a different garb and casting the self-same contentions, which had been found to be untrue, in an apparently different mould. Moreover a tenant has no right to bring a suit to have it determined which of two defendants, both of whom claim rent from him, is his landlord and the ruling followed by the learned Munsif has full application to the facts of the present case. I, therefore, agree with the learned Munsif in holding that the plaintiffs' suit being in the nature of an interpleader suit is not maintainable and that they cannot re-open the question of tenancy under the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and so this appeal is dismissed with costs. It is not necessary to discuss the grounds urged in the cross-appeal after what has been found above and so I dismiss it."

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Manmotho Nath Roy), for the Appellant.—The present suit differs substantially from the suit in Nanji Koer v. Umatul Batul (1). The only relief sought in this case is that one set of landlords was the real landlord and the other not. The other side says that such a suit would be barred by res judicata, because in the earlier rent suit the question was also whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties as in this suit. Clearly the earlier suit was not between the same parties but between the plaintiff and one set of defendants. Here another party has been added. In the Full Bench case of Dwarkanath Roy v. Ram Chand Aich (2), under similar circumstances, the suit was not considered to be barred by res judicata. A brings a suit against B. C claims under A and D under B. If C brings a suit against D on a point which was decided in a suit between A and B, certainly such a suit shall be barred, but not if a new party is added. In Dwarkanath Roy v. Ram Chand Aich (2) a new party was added by the plaintiff and the suit there was a suit for rent, as in my case. Hence the facts there correspond to the facts in this case. It may be argued that the parties here are not arranged as in Dwarkanath Roy v. Ram Chand Aich (2), but that is no argument at all. In a rent suit the only question that arises is whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the parties for the period for which the suit is brought, and no question of title at all arises. This and this only is the point in issue, therefore, the suit ought not to have been dismissed on any of the grounds stated by the lower Court. My points are:—

(1) It is not an interpleader suit within the meaning of section 88 of the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore, Order XXXV, rule 5, is not a bar.

(2) The suit is not barred by res judicata. The scope of an interpleader suit is defined by section 88 of the Civil Procedure Code. The suit as framed is not an interpleader suit but is a suit for a declaration that the real landlords are defendants Nos. 3 to 5. K. S. Bannerjee v. Rajchandra Dutt (3) cited.

The frame of the suit in Nanji Koer v. Umatul Batul (1) is entirely different from that in the present suit.

In the case in Nanji Koer v. Umatul Batul (1) the suit was for a declaration that a certain person was the landlord, whereas in this suit the declaration sought for is that certain persons are not the landlords. Even if that decision covered a case like this, I submit the decision was not right.

Babus Bepin Behari Ghose, II, and Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury, for the Respondents, was not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

WALMSLEY, J.—The facts of this case are practically identical with the facts of the case of Nanji Koer v. Umatul Batul (1), and on the principles enunciated in that case the present appeal must be dismissed. It is suggested that we should regard that case as wrongly decided; but I can see no reason for taking that view. The present appeal is dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1899), ss. 4(1), 16, 18—Assignee of certificate holder, suit by, maintainability of—Assignment before grant of certificate, effect of.

An assignee of a person to whom a succession certificate has been granted is entitled to sue for a debt due to the assignor and to obtain a decree thereon without obtaining a certificate in his own name. [p. 736, col. 1.]

Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Hari Das, 34 Ind. Cas. 364; 14 A. L. J. 677; 38 A. 474, approved.

Allahdad Khan v. Sant Ram, 17 Ind. Cas. 486; 35 A. 74; 10 A. L. J. 506, dissented from.

The certificate, until revoked, affords protection to the assignee, though it was obtained by the assignor after the assignment. [p. 736, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tanjore, in Appeal Suit No. 360 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvalur, in Original Suit No. 443 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Messrs. T. V. Muthu Krishna Aiyar and N. Muthuswami Aiyar, for the Appellant.—Plaintiff is the assignee of the pro-note from the widow of the payee of the note. She assigned the note and then applied for the grant of a succession certificate. Then the certificate which was obtained in her name was made over to the assignee. The grant of a succession certificate is only personal to the grantee. Under section 4 of the Succession Certificate Act a person in whose name the certificate is granted is alone entitled to sue and it cannot enure to the benefit of the assignee. Allahdad Khan v. Sant Ram (1). Again, at the date of the assignment of the note the widow had no valid title to the suit note and the certificate cannot have retrospective effect.

Mr. S. Muthia Mudaliar, for the Respondents.—The grant of certificate enures for the benefit of the assignee. Section 4 (1) of the Succession Certificate Act does not require that the person suing should have the certificate in his own name. The protection is afforded by the certificate and when once it is granted, it is valid and effective in the hands of any one who purchases the debt from the certificate holder. Allahdad Khan v. Sant Ram (1) has been dissented from in Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Hari Das (2).

(1) 17 Ind. Cas. 486; 35 A. 74; 10 A. L. J. 506.

MANI LAL NAHAR v. MOWDAD RAHAMAN.

As to the second contention, a certificate obtained by a person who had no right to it may be revoked by proceedings under section 18 of the Act, but it continues to be effectual until such revocation.

JUDGMENT.—Appellant's first contention is that plaintiff, being only the assignee of the person to whom succession certificate had been granted, is not entitled to a decree without obtaining a succession certificate in his own name. This contention is supported by the ruling in Allahdad Khan v. Sant Ram (1), but that decision has been doubted in Rang Lal v. Annu Lal (3) and has been dissented from by both the Judges in Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Hari Das (2). One of the main grounds for the decision in Allahdad Khan v. Sant Ram (1) is that section 16 of the Succession Certificate Act affords protection only when payment is made to the certificate holder, and not to his assignee. We respectfully regret that we are unable to accept this argument, for payment to the assignee is as valid as payment to the assignor in the absence of any restriction imposed by law. Further, section 4 (1) of the Act only requires the production of a certificate and not a certificate in the name of the person suing. Agreeing with Raman Lalji Maharaj v. Hari Das (2) we overrule this contention.

The next contention is that plaintiff's assignor obtained the succession certificate after she had effected the transfer to plaintiff. This may or may not form a ground for revoking the certificate under section 13, but until revoked, the certificate is valid and affords protection and this objection must also fail.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

MOWDAD RAHAMAN—RESPONDENT.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 45—High Court powers of, exercise of—Delay in presenting petition, effect of—Public officer refusing to entertain petition—High Court, order of, form of—Calcutta Municipal Act (III B. C. of 1899), Sch. V, r. 2 (a)—Rai Bahadur, whether sufficient description of candidate.

Section 45 of the Specific Relief Act gives certain powers to the High Court, which the High Court can exercise subject to the conditions which are specified in the provisos to the section. [p. 738, col. 1.]

The conditions contained in provisos (a) to (c) of the section are cumulative. [p. 738, col. 1.]

In exercising the powers conferred upon it under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, the High Court should, in all cases, regard its exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction as discretionary, and subject to considerations of the importance of the particular case or of the principle involved in it, or of delay on the part of an applicant, and of his merits with respect to the case in which the interference of the Court is sought. Should other special causes appear for or against the Court's intervention, due weight ought to be given to them, regard being always had to the principles already enunciated. [p. 738, col. 2.]

The respondent, who was a candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner of the Corporation of Calcutta, applied to the Chairman of the Corporation to reject the nomination paper of the appellant, a rival candidate, on the ground that the nomination paper did not contain any description of the appellant and that he had been seconded by one who was not a voter. The application was made two weeks after the appellant had sent in his nomination paper and two days before the day fixed for the election. The Chairman declined to entertain the application, on the ground that it was made too late. On the following day, i.e., on the day previous to the election the respondent applied to the High Court under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, and obtained an order that the name of the applicant be expunged from the list of nominated candidates. On the next day, i.e., on the day for the election, the election took place, and the name of the appellant having been expunged from the list, the respondent as the only candidate was deemed elected. The appellant appealed against the order directing the expunging of his name from the list of candidates and the appeal came on for hearing on the day after the election:

Held, (1) that having regard to the facts of the case and especially to the delay in presenting the petition by the respondent and the fact that no one could possibly be misled by the description in the nomination paper, it was a matter of considerable doubt whether the case was one in which the High Court should have interfered; [p. 738, col. 2; p. 739, col. 1.]

(2) that the order of the Court should have been limited to a direction to the Chairman to entertain the application which he had wrongly refused to entertain on the ground that it was too late; [p. 739, col. 1; p. 740, col. 1.]

(3) that the appeal must fail, inasmuch as the election had taken place, and a decision in favour of the appellant would be infructuous. [p. 739, col. 1.]

Quære.—Whether the addition of the words 'Rai Bahadur' to the appellant's name was a sufficient description of the appellant within the meaning of Schedule V, rule 2 (a) of the Calcutta Municipal Act—

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Chaudhuri, dated the 19th March 1918.

JUDGMENT.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by Rai Bahadur Mani Lal Nahar against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Chaudhuri.

The matter came before the learned Judge by way of a petition under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act by one Mowdad Rahaman, who was a candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner for Ward No. 14 at the Sixth Municipal Election, and upon that petition it was ordered that the Chairman of the Corporation of Calcutta and Rai Bahadur Mani Lal Nahar, another candidate for election as a Municipal Commissioner for the said ward at the said election, should show cause why he should not declare the nomination paper of the said Rai Bahadur Mani Lal Nahar invalid. The Rule was made absolute by the learned Judge, who delivered the following judgment:—"This application has been made at a very late stage and I am strongly inclined to hold that it is the result of the decision of this Court in a similar matter which has been before me and the Appellate Court, but it must be said at the same time that no other remedy is open to the applicant. It has been held in a similar case that want of description of a candidate in a nomination paper is a fatal objection. The title such as Rai Bahadur which a man may hold is not his description." The learned Judge then said that he, therefore, held that the nomination paper in question ought not to have been accepted. He then referred to a decision of Mr. Justice Norris reported as Rajendra Lal Mittra. In the matter of (1), and, following the precedent of that case he directed that the nomination of Rai Bahadur Mani Lal Nahar should be expunged from the list.

The facts are as follows:—

The appellant sent in his nomination paper on the 4th of March in this year. The last day for sending in the nomination papers was the 5th of March 1918, and, according to the affidavit of the appellant, it appears that he was informed by Mr. Sen, Solicitor to the Corporation, that the applicant, that is to say, Mowdad Rahaman, or any candidate for election could have seen the nomination paper at any time thereafter. On the 16th of March a list of the candidates who had been nominated was published. On the 18th of March my learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe and I delivered a judgment in the election case appeal between Narendra Nath Mitter v. Radha Charan Pal Bahadur (2), a case, which I shall have reason to say later on, was of a very different nature from the present one. On the afternoon of the same day the applicant in this case applied to the Chairman of the Corporation to reject the nomination paper of Rai Bahadur Mani Lal Nahar, the appellant in this case. The grounds for that application were that the nomination paper did not contain any description of the said Rai Bahadur Mani Lal Nahar, and that he had been seconded by one Rai Sahib Haradhan Basu who was not a voter in the said Ward No. 14, as appeared from the printed copy of the Election Roll prepared and published by the Chairman. The Chairman of the Corporation declined to entertain this application on the ground that it was too late. On the 19th, the following day, a petition was presented before my learned brother Mr. Justice Chaudhuri and the order nisi which I have already read was made at 11 o'clock in the morning. The hearing of the Rule was fixed for 4 p. m. on the same day, and at or about that time the learned Judge made the order absolute, upon the grounds which are stated in the judgment which I have already read. The next day, the 20th, was the day for the election. On that day Mr. Avetoom, the learned Counsel for the appellant, applied to this Court for leave to serve short notice of appeal upon the respondent, and this Court granted him that leave and directed that notice should be served upon the respondent for the hearing of the appeal on the following day, namely, the 21st. On the 21st, the day after the election had taken place, this appeal was heard by my learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe and myself; it was adjourned for further argument until yesterday, and on that occasion we reserved judgment until this morning. These are the facts of the case.

(1) 19 C. 195n; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 575.

Now, the section under which this application was made was section 45 of the Specific Relief Act, I of 1877. Before I read that section it is necessary to refer to section 50 which provides:—"Neither the High Court nor any Judge thereof shall hereafter issue any writ of mandamus." But by section 45 certain powers are given to the High Court which the High Court can exercise, subject to the conditions which are specified in the proviso. Section 45 runs as follows:—"Any of the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras, and Bombay may make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forborne, within the local limits of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, by any person holding a public office, whether of a permanent or a temporary nature, or by any Corporation or inferior Court of Judicature".

Then there are five provisos added to the section. Proviso (b) is as follows:—"That such doing or forbearing is, under any law for the time being in force, clearly incumbent on such person or Court in his or its public character, or on such Corporation in its corporate character." Proviso (c) is as follows:—"That in the opinion of the High Court such doing or forbearing is consonant to right and justice."

It is not disputed that the conditions contained in the provisos (a) to (e) in this section are cumulative; and, the effect of the section is dealt with in the decision of the Bombay High Court in Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (3), the judgment being delivered by Mr. Justice West. The passage which I desire to read is at page 370, and is as follows:—"The Specific Relief Act, I of 1877, Chapter VIII, in abolishing the writ of mandamus, enacts that the High Court may require any specific act to be done or forborne within the limits of its Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction by any.....in inferior Court of Judicature' (here it is not an inferior Court of Judicature, but a public officer), but the conditions are imposed (a) of a wrong to the applicant; (b) of a duty clearly incumbent on the inferior Court; (c) consistency of the order sought with justice; (d) 'that the applicant has no other specific and adequate legal remedy; and (e) 'that the remedy given by the order will be complete.' These provisions, which express the results of an experience of centuries gained by superior Courts in England, working without statutory limits to their jurisdiction, show very clearly the proper conditions of peremptory interference even when there has been an excess of jurisdiction, or a failure to exercise it, by the lower Court." Then the learned Judge proceeded to state certain conclusions which the Court thought might be deduced with reference to the whole subject. I need refer to one only, which is No. 6. It runs as follows: "The Court will, in all cases, regard its exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction as discretionary, and subject to considerations of the importance of the particular case, or of the principle involved in it, of delay on the part of an applicant and of his merits with respect to the case in which the interference of the Court is sought. Should other special causes appear for, or against, the Court's intervention, due weight is to be given to them, regard being always had to the principles already enunciated." The learned Counsel for the respondent did not dispute the accuracy of the conclusions which the learned Judges deduced in this case. Consequently we may take it that the principles there stated are the principles upon which we ought to act in this case.

Now, having regard to the facts of this case, which I have already stated, and having regard especially to the delay which occurred in presenting the petition by the respondent, and the fact that no one could possibly be misled by the description or want of description in the nomination paper, if I had been sitting as the Court of first instance, I should have had considerable doubt whether the Rule should have been made absolute. But in any event if the Rule were to be made absolute, I am of opinion that it should have been limited to a direction to the Chairman of the Corporation to exercise his jurisdiction and to hear and determine the application which had been made to him and which he had refused to entertain on the ground that it was too late. The application to the Court was based on the ground that the Chairman failed to perform his duty as a person holding a public office in refusing to entertain the petition, and I think that the order, if made at all, should have been confined to a direction to him to perform that duty. We, however, are not sitting as a Court of first instance but as a Court of Appeal. The order of the learned Judge was in fact made that the name of the appellant should be expunged from the list of nominated candidates. The Chairman of the Corporation was bound to give effect to that order. The result was that the appellant's name was expunged from the list, and the name of Mowdad Rahaman was the only name appearing on the list of nominated candidates; and, by reason of one of the rules (rule 5) for the "conduct of election," which provides that "in the event of there being not more than one candidate for election in any ward, such candidate shall be deemed to be elected," Mowdad Rahaman, being the only nominated candidate, has been deemed to be elected as Commissioner of that Ward. Therefore, it appears to me that if we were to allow this appeal and to give a judgment on the above-mentioned ground overruling the decision of the learned Judge such a judgment would be infructuous: for the appellant's name has been expunged from the list of nominated candidates, the election has taken place without the inclusion of the appellant's name in the list of candidates, and we have now, on this appeal, no power to set that right. For this reason, I think, that we should not allow this appeal.

I express no opinion on the question whether the addition of the words "Rai Bahadur" to the appellant's name taken by itself, or in conjunction with the statement that the appellant is recorded as a Voter No. 679 of Ward No. 14, is a sufficient "description" within the meaning of the rule: It is not necessary for my judgment, and as far as I am concerned, this question is left open. In the case of Narendra Nath Mitter v. Radha Charan Pal (2) we did express the opinion that the words "who is recorded as Voter No. 1553 of Ward No. 6" by themselves were not a "description" within the meaning of rule 2 (a). This opinion was expressed at the instance of the learned Advocate-General who appeared for the appellant, but it was not necessary for our decision in that case: for, in that case, amongst other objections it appeared that the person who had signed the nomination paper as a seconder had signed as an approver also, which we held was not in order. Further, one of the names appearing as that of an approver was the name of a firm and not that of a voter and consequently there were only 16 approvers instead of 18 as required by the rule. There were other reasons to which I need not refer: It is sufficient for me to say that in the previous case there were substantial objections to the nomination paper, whereas in this case to my mind the objections are trivial and unsubstantial.

For these reasons the appeal, in my judgment, must be dismissed but in view of the facts of the case I think that it should be dismissed without costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—Had this case come before me as Judge sitting on the Original Side, it would have been a matter of considerable doubt whether the case was one in which this Court should interfere under section 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

But the learned Judge has in fact made the order and directed that the appellant's name should be expunged from the published lists of candidates. As a result, the Chairman, being obliged to obey the order of the Court, has expunged the name of the appellant, with the result that the respondent has been deemed to be elected.

The question, therefore, now is, will any fruitful result ensue should we reverse the learned Judge's order. It seems that any order passed without going into the merits would be of little, if any, use: And, apart from difficulties attending under the circumstances of this case a reversal even on the merits, to go into such merits would assume that the other points in the case, such as the alleged delay and form of the learned Judge's order, had been decided against the appellant, which I am not prepared to say would have been the case. For this is involved in the doubt I entertain whether the application should have been maintained in the Court of first instance. If, for instance (as I am disposed to think), the learned Judge instead of directing the appellant's name to be expunged should have directed the Chairman to entertain the application which he wrongly refused to entertain on the ground that it was too late, such a decision would preclude an examination into the merits, which ex hypothesi would have to be left for the Chairman to determine. But such a decision not touching the merits would probably not avail the appellant, apart from practical difficulties in asking the Chairman to consider this matter after what has followed in the previous order.

Under the circumstances, therefore, and without expressing an opinion on the question under appeal whether there was a sufficient description, I would not interfere with the decision under appeal and would, therefore, dismiss the appeal but without costs.

I should like to add with regard to our former decision cited to us that it proceeded on a different state of facts, and though we were invited to express and did express an opinion on the question whether the reference to the Electoral Roll was a sufficient description, all that we held was that in itself it was not a sufficient description, and, this was not necessary having regard to the fact that whether there was or was not in such case a description of the candidate, his case failed both for want of a legal seconder and a sufficient number of approvers.

This judgment of mine does not, of course, affect any other remedies which the appellant may have otherwise than by the proceedings before us.

Appeal dismissed.

Under Hindu Law the son of a trustee of a public charity is liable for the funds of the trust misappropriated by his father. The fact that the father was guilty of a criminal offence does not affect the liability of the son. [p. 741, col. 2.]

An Avyavaharika debt only means a debt not opposed to good morals. [p. 741, col. 2.]

Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad, 12 Ind. Cas. 609; 39 C. 862 at p. 869; 16 C. W. N. 519; 15 C. L. J. 228, approved.

In a suit for settling the scheme of a public choultry, the residents of the locality where the choultry is situate and who are also members of the community for whose benefit the charity was founded, are persons having an 'interest' in the charity within the meaning of section 92, Civil Procedure Code [p. 741, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, Vizagapatam, in Original Suit No. 2 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment;

Mr. P. Narayanamurthy, for the Appellant.—The plaintiffs, in the first place, have no locus standi to maintain this suit. They must allege and prove a specific interest in the charity. Mere residence in the vicinity of the choultry will not be a sufficient 'interest' within the meaning of section 92, Civil Procedure Code.

The father and grandfather of the 1st defendant, who were his predecessors-in-office, misappropriated the trust funds and rendered themselves amenable to a criminal charge. The 1st defendant cannot be liable for a criminal act of his father and grandfather. The 'debt' of a Hindu father for which the son is liable is an obligation incurred which is not tainted with criminality.

GARUDA SANYASAYYA v. NARELLA MUTHEMMA.

The debt of 1st defendant's predecessors is an Ayyavaharika debt, which is excluded by the Hindu commentators from the category of debts of the father which bind the son. Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1).

Again the obligation of the trustees to account for collections by them is not a 'debt' for which a son is liable under Hindu Law.

Mr. V. Ramesam, for the Respondents. — The plaintiffs have sufficient interest to maintain the suit. They are members of the community whom the charity is intended to benefit and are also residents of the locality where the choultry is situated. The 'interest' contemplated in section 92, Civil Procedure Code, should not be restricted to some specific right to or claim in the charity.

The amounts misappropriated out of the collections and not accounted for by the trustees are a debt repayable to the trust. It is more than an obligation to account. The son of the trustee is liable for the misappropriated amount and cannot evade liability on the ground that the defaulter offended against the Criminal Law.

The 1st defendant cannot bring himself under the exception, from the category of debts descendible to the sons, of Ayyavaharika debts. The expression denotes only debts not opposed to good morals. Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad (2).

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit for the removal of the 1st defendant from the trusteeship of a certain charity and for settling a scheme of management. The District Judge directed his removal and framed a scheme. In appeal to this Court a large number of questions were argued. We agree in the main with the conclusions on facts come to by the learned District Judge. We hold that there was a dedication of the choultry to charity under Exhibit E. We see no vagueness in the trust deed and we further agree with the District Judge that the whole of the choultry, not simply a portion of it, was dedicated to the charity.

Mr. Narayanamurthy argued two questions of law, on which it is necessary to say a few words. We do not agree with him that the plaintiffs are not entitled to institute the suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code. They are residents of the locality in which the choultry is situated and are members of the community for whose benefit the charity was founded. In our opinion, these facts give them sufficient interest to institute the suit. The second question relates to the liability of the 1st defendant for the application of the funds of the charity by his grandfather and father. It was strenuously argued before us that the 1st defendant is not liable because his father and grandfather must be deemed to have criminally misappropriated the funds. The facts are, the grandfather for some time conducted the charity. Later in his life, he neglected it and appropriated the income to his own use. The father, who was under the deed of trust entitled to the office of the trustee, never applied the income for purposes of charity. In our opinion the exceptions contained in the text of Usanas quoted by Vijnaneswara do not cover the present case.

After enumerating in the same language as the other Rishis the categories of father's debts for which the sons are not liable, Usanas and Vyasa add a supplementary category of debts which are Ayyavaharika and Vijnaneswara follows them in this. There has been much difference of opinion as to the meaning to be given to this word. Literally it means not usual or business like, but having regard to the context and to the fact that this category was introduced by these two Rishis alone as supplementary to the categories given by the majority of the Rishis, most of which relate to debts of an objectionable character, we agree with Mookerjee, J., in Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad (2) in preferring Colebrooke's translation "not opposed to good morals." The decision in Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (1), strongly relied upon by the learned Vakil for the appellant, seems to have been doubted in Ramkrishna Trimbak v. Narayan Shivrao Aras (3) and has not been accepted as good law in Chakouri Mahton v. Ganga Proshad (2) and in Sumer Singh v. Liladhar (4).

RAMCHANDRA v. DATTATRAYA.

and Venuḡopal Naidu v. Ramanadhan Ochetty (5). We prefer to follow these latter decisions. At the same time we are not prepared to say with Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in the latter case that every obligation "which is supportable as valid by legal arguments and on which a right could be established in the creditor's favour in a Court of Justice" will be binding on the son. It was the duty of the trustees to collect the income and their subsequent misappropriation of it does not affect the liability to account which they incurred by reason of the collection. The fact that the misappropriation amounted to a criminal offence appears to us to be irrelevant.

In our opinion the son is accountable for the misappropriation of the trust funds by his father and grandfather. The subtle distinction drawn between accountability and debt by Mr. Narayanamurthy does not commend itself to us.

The further question is whether the 1st defendant should be held liable for all the collections not accounted for by his predecessors. He succeeded to the office of trustee 2 years before the suit. His father succeeded to the trusteeship in 1884 and was the manager of the family and of the charity until 1914. In our opinion the 1st defendant should be made liable only for collections during the last 12 years. It is not denied that Courts have a discretion in fixing the period for which accounts should be rendered. In Attorney-General v. Exeter, Mayor of (6) Sir Thomas Plumer, Master of the Rolls, said:—"It has, I think, been properly stated on both sides that there is no fixed limit of time in directing an account against a trustee of a charity. Notwithstanding the case which has been cited from a very inaccurate book, the Statute of Limitations is not the rule.....It does not, however, follow that relief will be given after a great length of time, it being the constant course of Courts of Equity to discourage stale demands; even in cases of fraud, in which, if recent, there would have been no doubt, lapse of time has induced the Courts to refuse their interference. In cases of charities this principle has often been acted on. When there has been a long period, during which a party has, under an innocent mistake, misapplied a fund, from the laches and neglect of others, that is, from no one of the public setting him right, and when the accounts have in consequence become entangled, the Court, under its general discretion, considering the enormous expense of the enquiries, the great hardship of calling upon representatives to refund what families have spent, acting on the notion of its being their property, has been in the habit, while giving the relief, of fixing a period to the account." In the present case the 1st defendant's grandfather and father had been left in the sole enjoyment of the charity properties without being called upon to account for their administration. The 1st defendant himself has not been shown to have been benefited by their conduct.

In these circumstances we have decided to fix 12 years as the limit of time for which accounts should be rendered by the 1st defendant. Subject to this modification the appeal will be dismissed with costs of the plaintiffs to come out of the charity. We may mention that in the framing of the scheme, 1st defendant may be nominated, if otherwise not disqualified, to be one of the trustees of the charity.

RANCHANDRA V. DATTATRAYA.

A finding of fact, in order to be binding in second appeal, should be one that can be reasonably deduced from the evidence. If it is not such a finding, the High Court has authority to interfere with it. [p. 743, col. 2.]

A draft Will unsigned and undated may be legally a Will if it contains the last wishes of the testator. [p. 743, col. 1.]

(Case-law discussed.)

Appeal from the decree of the Court of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 8th of August 1917, in Appeal No. 115 of 1917.

The Hon'ble Sir E. K. Bose and Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and C. B. Parakh, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Appeal by the plaintiffs. The appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for the possession of a house which forms only one item of the property in dispute between the parties, but the suit relates only to the house. The plaintiffs' father Govindrao was one of four brothers, Venkat Rao, Makund Rao, Govind Rao and Gopal Rao. The defendant is the son of Gopal Rao. The plaintiffs' case is that the property was the self-acquired property of Venkat Rao, who was separate from his brothers. The plaintiffs' claim to the house is based on a Will said to have been executed by Venkat Rao shortly before his death, which occurred on the 12th August 1914. The Will is in the handwriting of Venkat Rao, but is not signed or dated. If the document contains the final expression of Venkat Rao's final wishes as to the disposition of his property, the fact that it is not signed or dated would not prevent its being regarded as a valid Will. The question before me is whether or not the District Judge was right in holding that the document did not contain Venkat Rao's final wishes. The learned Advocate for the respondent contends that this Court as a Court of second appeal is bound to accept the finding of fact that Venkat Rao did not intend the document to be his final Will, but left it unsigned because he wished to postpone the final disposal of his property and intended before signing it to vary it to some extent. The learned Advocate for the appellants contends that though he is bound by the District Judge's finding that the evidence of the first and eighth witnesses for the plaintiffs is true, yet the deduction to be drawn from their evidence is a mixed question of law and fact and this Court is competent to reconsider the question in second appeal. He relies on the rulings in Iachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hussein (1) and Bishun Singh v. A. W. N. Wyatt (2). In my opinion both of those cases are to be distinguished from the present case. In the first cited ruling their Lordships of the Privy Council found that the first Court had decided the question of adverse possession not merely as a question of simple fact but as involving questions of law also. The facts as found did not legally constitute adverse possession. In the second case cited it was held that the High Court in second appeal, though bound to accept the facts found, is entitled to examine whether the inference drawn from those facts is legitimate. In the present case the questions of law and fact are clearly distinct. The lower Appellate Court has made no mistake about the law. It recognises that even a draft Will unsigned and undated may be legally a Will if it contains the last wishes of the testator, but it has found on the evidence and as a fact that it did not contain the last wishes of the testator. This is a fact and not an inference to be drawn from a fact. The finding of fact is one that is binding on this Court, provided that the finding is one that can be reasonably deduced from the evidence. If it is not a fact that can reasonably be deduced from the evidence, this Court has authority to interfere. I have read the evidence of the first and eighth witnesses for the plaintiffs, which is the only evidence on the point. The District Judge has held that the witnesses are honest witnesses and as to this I see no reason whatever to disagree. From their evidence it appears that some days before Venkat Rao's death the Will was produced before Venkat Rao, and of these two witnesses one pointed out that the Will was unsigned and that the provision for the testator's wife was insufficient and on this Venkat Rao expressed his intention of considering the matter afresh and of signing the Will after he had so re-considered it. The eighth witness, however, took away the draft Will but has offered no intelligible explanation why he did so after Venkat Rao expressed his wish to re-consider the draft and to sign it after re-considering it. The District Judge has held as a fact that in these circumstances it was evident that Venkat Rao had plainly signified that the draft as it stood, was not his final Will. I consider I am bound by this finding. It is certainly a reasonable one. If I am not so bound, I entirely agree with the conclusion of the facts arrived at by the District Judge. The learned Advocate for the appellants refers to the following cases: Janki v. Kallu Mal (3), Aulia Bibi v. Ala-uddin (4), Pandurang Hari Vaidya v. Vinayak Vishnu Kane (5), Sahib Mirza v. Umda Khanam (6) and Gopaldas v. Musammat Bandan (7). I accept the position that if it were clear that the draft contained the final wishes of Venkat Rao, the fact that he did not sign it, although he had expressed his intention of signing it, would not be a bar to its validity as a Will, that each case has to be judged according to its own circumstances, and in this case the District Judge has held, and I agree with him, that the testator plainly signified that the draft did not contain his final wishes but that he wished to consider it before he signed it. For these reasons I am of opinion that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the document written by Venkat Rao is not a valid Will.

It is next urged that the defendant is estopped, because he applied for mutation of one of the villages in his name on the ground that it had been willed to him by Venkat Rao. The question has been fully considered by the District Judge and I agree with his conclusions that there was no estoppel. When the defendant made the claim for mutation he had not seen the Will and was unaware of the full circumstances relating to it. Moreover, mutation was granted in his favour on the ground that he was in possession of the village. The learned Advocate for the appellants relies on the cases reported as Durga Das Khan v. Ishan Chandra Dey (8) and Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Rao Bahadur v. Rajah Surnani Venkata Purushottama Jugganadha Gopala Row Bahadur (9). The circumstances of this case are entirely different. The person who holds property under a Will may be estopped from disputing other person's claims under the same Will, but here the defendant has elected to repudiate the Will altogether and makes no claim whatever under it. In these circumstances there is no estoppel. For the above reasons the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Pre-emption suit—Set-off, right to—Joinder of claims—Money left with vendee out of sale consideration to pay off incumbrances—Vendee, failure of, to discharge incumbrances, effect of.

A pre-emptor, who is also a prior mortgagee of the property sold, cannot in his suit for pre-emption claim in reduction of the purchase-money such interest to which he may have become entitled by reason of the failure of the vendee to pay to him and to the other creditors of the vendor moneys which had been left with him out of the sale consideration for discharging incumbrances on the property sold [p. 745, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Hardoi, dated the 17th July 1917, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Hardoi, dated the 27th April 1917.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Babu Basudeo Lal and Mr. M. A. Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption and the only question for determination is whether a pre-emptor is entitled to claim a set-off for the additional interest, which became payable to him and to the other creditors of the vendor on account of the failure of the vendee to pay the money left with him for payment to the above persons out of the consideration of the sale.

As pointed out in Ram Ratan v. Jugrai (1) and Jagan Nath v. Sheoratan Singh (2), the right of pre-emption is a right to the benefit of a contract or a right of substitution entitling the pre-emptor, by reason of a legal incident to which the sale itself was subject, to stand in the shoes of the vendees in respect of all the rights and obligations arising from the sale, under which he has derived his title. The question for consideration in this case, however, is whether the rights and obligations, arising between the date of the sale and the date of the suit or decree for pre-emption, are to be determined in the suit for pre-emption or in a separate proceeding, intended to enforce those rights or obligations. It is unquestionable that there are certain rights and obligations which must be determined in the suit for pre-emption itself, such as those which form a part of the contract of sale, or are necessary legal incidents of the price thereof. In Tajmimul Husain v. Uda (3), where a certain sum was fixed as the price of the property sold, and such sum was paid by the vendee, but it was subsequently agreed between him and the vendor as a part of the sale contract that the vendee should recover for his own benefit certain moneys due to the vendor at the time of the sale and the vendee recovered such moneys, it was held that the pre-emptor was entitled to the deduction of the amount of such moneys from the sum originally fixed as the price of the property, the reason being that the sum subsequently received by the vendee operated as a reduction of the price nominally fixed in the sale-deed. In Hazari Lal v. Ram Narain (4) the pre-emptor was declared liable to pay the arrears of under-proprietary rent paid by the mortgagees for the period antecedent to his decree for foreclosure, which was the subject of pre-emption, because in the absence of any agreement, in writing, with the original proprietor to the contrary, section 154 of the Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886) imposed a statutory liability on the transferee to pay any arrears of rent due at the time of the transfer and the payment was made by him for the protection and preservation of the disputed property from sale in lieu of the said arrears. No question of protection arises in this case.

The interest here claimed by the pre-emptor is in the nature of damages, said to have been caused by the failure of the vendee to carry out his part of the contract with the vendor. The right to claim that interest flows out of the contract of sale, but it is not an integral part of it. It follows the contract of sale, not because the contract necessarily carries a right to it, but because something, which was then uncertain, has happened since the date of the sale, namely, the money left has not been paid or the contract has been broken, which gives a right to it. Section 13 of the Oudh Laws Act (XVIII of 1876) and Order XX, rule 14, of the Code of Civil Procedure only permit the determination of the price, and in certain cases of the market value.

The amount of interest cannot moreover be satisfactorily or finally determined, unless the mortgagees or the creditor for whom the money was left to be paid are before the Court in a suit properly framed for the purpose, for they may contest the adequacy of the money left for them, or it may appear that a tender was made to them and they had refused to accept it, or some of the creditors may have died and the right to receive on their behalf may be a subject of dispute. The pre-emptor happens to be one of the creditors in this case, but he is mixing up his position as a pre-emptor with his position as a prior mortgagee. The Courts below have rightly refused to allow him in this suit to set off the additional interest, due to him and to the other creditors, against the purchase money.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

The term 'Bandhu' has been defined in the Mitakshara as a Bhinna Gotra Sapinda, that is to say, sprung from a different family but connected by common corporeal particles, or by consanguinity. [p. 747, col. 2.]

A sister's son is a Bhinna Gotra Sapinda and is, therefore, a Bandhu. [p. 747, col. 2.]

The performance of the Gaya Shraddh ceremony of a deceased Hindu is a legal necessity. In order, however, to make it binding upon the estate, so as to enable the widow of the deceased to raise money on the security of the estate, it must be proved that there was no sufficient income from the estate to meet the expenses of the ceremony. JUDGMENT.

COUTTS, J.—This was a suit for recovery of possession with mesne profits of Mouzâh Jamalpur Burhya, Perganna Gyaspur, Touzi No. 132. The plaintiff No. 1, Ishri Prasad, Rai brought the suit as reversionary heir of one Surjun Singh, and the plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were made parties as plaintiff No. 1 has mortgaged a part of the property sued for in order to defray the expenses of the suit.

It is necessary shortly to state the facts which have led up to the institution of the suit. The following genealogy will show the relationship of the plaintiff to Surjun Singh:—

BABU BAIJNATH SINGH=Musammat Man Koer, widow.

Babu Surjun Singh (dead)=Musammat Lakhpatti Koer, widow. }

Musammat Bibo Koer daughter of
B. Baijnath Singh (deceased).B. Harakh Narain Rai
(died issueless).B. Sheo Narain Rai
(died issueless).B. Sham Narain Rai
(died issueless).

B. Pertab Narain Rai.

B. Iswari Pershad Rai, plaintiff No. 1.

This genealogy was disputed at the trial of the suit, but it is now admitted to be correct.

Baijnath Singh died leaving as his survivors Surjun Singh, a minor, Musammat

Man Koer, his widow, and Musammat Bibo, his daughter. Surjun Singh died leaving Musammat Man Koer and Musammat Lakhpatti, his wife, who succeeded to his property. In 1881 Musammat Bibo died leaving Pertab Narain and other sons who died childless. On the 3rd March 1912 Pertab Narain died leaving the plaintiff No. 1 only, Ishri Prasad, the other sons of Musammatt Bibo having by this time died. This history of the family may also be taken as now undisputed. The plaintiff alleges that the property in suit was acquired by Musammatt Man Koer during the minority of Surjun Singh and from the income of his estate.

The first point taken in this appeal is, that the Subordinate Judge has wrongly refused to accept written statements which were filed by the defendants on the 23rd of February 1915. The importance of these written statements, which it is desired to bring in, is that in them for the first time an allegation was made by the defendants that the property in dispute was not the property, either ancestral or acquired, of Surjun Singh, and that therefore the plaintiffs have no right to sue. The learned Subordinate Judge refused to accept them, on the ground that the defendants could not be allowed to set up a new and inconsistent defence at such a late stage of the case, and, in my opinion, he has done so rightly. The suit was filed on the 5th January 1914, and in paragraph 4 of his plaint, the plaintiff stated that "the property was one of the properties appertaining to the estate of Babu Surjun Singh and it had been acquired during his minority through Musammatt Man Koer out of the income of his estate. Babu Surjun Singh held and enjoyed possession of the said property as owner." This is a very distinct statement as to how the property was acquired, and in the original written statements filed by the defendants in April 1914 there is no suggestion or allegation that this statement made in the plaint was untrue. Issues were framed on the 5th May 1914 but it was not until nearly a year later that the defendants asked to be allowed to put in these new written statements. By this time the case was completely ready for hearing and the hearing was actually to begin on the following day. It would obviously have been unfair to allow the defendants to raise a completely new point at this stage, and more particularly so when the wording of the written statement shows clearly that the defendants had no real information on the matter. Reference has been made to the ruling in Sri Rang Behary Lal v. Ranchheyu Lal (1), but this is clearly against the appellants.

The second point which has been urged is that the plaintiff has not proved his heirship, and in regard to this two arguments have been advanced. The genealogy put forward by the plaintiff has now been accepted by the appellants and this genealogy shows that the plaintiff is the sister's son of Surjun Singh, but it is contended that a sister's son is not a Bandhu and that, therefore, the plaintiff is not an heir. This contention is, in my opinion, untenable. The term Bandhu has been defined in the Mitakshara as a Bhinna Gotra Sapinda, that is to say, sprung from a different family but connected by common corporeal particles, or by consanguinity. This has been held in a long series of rulings, namely:—Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (2), Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Cassibai (3), Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (4), Babu Lal v. Nanku Ram (5) and Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (6), and the enumeration of Bandhus has been given in the Mitakshara but it has been authoritatively settled that this enumeration is not exhaustive. The law was very fully considered in Babu Lal v. Nanku Ram (5) and in Ramchandra Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (6), and I need only refer to the conclusion of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the latter case: "The conclusion to which a close examination of the authorities leads their Lordships may be briefly stated as follows:—(a) that the Sapinda relationship on which the heritable right of collaterals is founded, ceases in the case of the Bhinna Gotra Sapinda with the fifth degree from the common ancestor, and (b) that in order to entitle a man to succeed to the inheritance of another, he must be so related to the latter that they are Sapindas of each other, which is only a paraphrase of Manu's rule." Applying this principle to the present case, the plaintiff is a Bhinna Gotra Sapinda well within the degree laid down in this ruling and the further test that the plaintiff and Surjun Singh are Sapindas of each other is also satisfied.

It is next argued that even if this is so, the plaintiff cannot succeed if there is any Gotia between him and Surjun Singh, and that he is bound to establish by reasonable evidence that he is the nearest heir. I am not satisfied that in the present case there is any such onus on the plaintiff. In his plaint he clearly stated that he claimed the property as a Bandhu and made a distinct statement as to how this claim arose. The defendants in their original written statement simply contended that the genealogy was false, but that even if it were true a sister's son was not a Bandhu and could not succeed; they made no suggestion that there was any intervening Gotia between the plaintiff and Surjun Singh. If they had wished to raise this point, it was, in my view, necessary for the defendants to have stated it distinctly. The matter, however, is not of great consequence, because I am satisfied that even assuming that the plaintiff was bound to establish by reasonable evidence that he was the nearest heir, he has succeeded in doing so. It appears that Surjun Singh was of the Keshab Gotra and the contention of the learned Rai Bahadur is that the plaintiff should have established that there was no Keshab Gotra in existence who can be preferred to him. To require the plaintiff to search throughout India for a Keshab Gotra would be unreasonable, and what he did do was, I consider, sufficient. He says that he knew of no Keshab Gotra except in Patna and he was satisfied that they could not be preferred to him. There is no contradiction of this and we must accept his statement on this point. Up till a very late stage there was no suggestion of there being any Keshab Gotras elsewhere. The first suggestion of this was made in the cross-examination of the plaintiff on the first day, and then the suggestion was that there were Keshab Gotras in Benares. This was dropped, however, on the following day and it was then suggested that there were Keshab Gotras in Allahabad. No names, however, were suggested and the plaintiff denied all knowledge of there being such Keshab Gotras. Subsequently the defendants developed this portion of their case and brought forward an alleged Keshab Gotra, Beni Madhub. This man was produced by one of the defendants' witnesses, Bishendayal. The evidence given by both these witnesses, as has been clearly shown by the learned Subordinate Judge, is false. There is nothing, therefore, to show that there is any intervening Gotra in existence and the plaintiff has, in my opinion, done all that was necessary to show that there is no such Gotra in existence.

The next point on which arguments have been addressed to us is the purchase by Nand Kishore. It is now admitted that Nand Kishore was the servant of the family of the defendants Nos. 1 to 17, but it is argued that, although this is so, the purchase from Musammatt Lakhpati was a bona fide purchase by him and not made benami on behalf of these respondents. This question of benami has been very fully and carefully dealt with by the learned Subordinate Judge. The only witnesses to the deed who have been examined are Basant Lal and Paryag Singh. The former was a servant of the defendants from before the time of the execution of the deed and Paryag Singh has been reckless in his statements in support of the defendants' case. The learned Subordinate Judge has, therefore, rightly not relied on the oral evidence. Certain documents, however, have been shown to us to show that Nand Kishore dealt with the property after the sale. Transactions, however, were bound to be made in the name of Nand Kishore shortly after the sale and these documents do not carry us much further. In the absence of reliable evidence we must be guided by the circumstances of the case, and having regard to these circumstances there is no doubt, in my mind, that the sale was a benami one. The property was sold on the 15th July 1884 for a consideration of Rs. 21,454. Now it has been established that Nand Kishore's private income at that time was only about Rs. 150 a year. There is no evidence, nor is there any suggestion, that he borrowed money to make this purchase and it is impossible to believe that he could have done so from his own funds. If, however, he had managed to do so, it cannot be doubted that he would have done all in his power to keep the property, yet we find that three years after the purchase there was a default in payment of revenue and the property was sold for the small arrear of Rs. 13-2-11. Of the arrear and of the sale Nand Kishore had full notice. There can also be no doubt that the purchase-money was not withdrawn by Nand Kishore. The balance of the purchase-money amounted to Rs. 16,000, yet three years later we find that Nand Kishore was reduced to borrowing a sum of Rs. 1,000 for which a bond (Exhibit 56) was executed in 1910, from which it appears that up to that date he had not been able to repay the amount.

To meet these difficulties the defendants have attempted to set up a new case, namely, that the purchase was by Nand Kishore jointly with another member of his family, Nand Lal. There is nothing, however, to support this case which was not made in the written statement, and as many years before the sale Nand Kishore and Nand Lal separated, there seems no doubt that the story is an afterthought. That the purchase was made by Nand Kishore is, therefore, in the highest degree improbable and this improbability becomes a certainty when we find that he was neither in possession of the property nor of the sale-deed. The evidence on this point has been very carefully considered by the learned Subordinate Judge and I find no reason to differ from his conclusions. The sale-deed was filed by these defendants in a succession certificate case, and in connection with this there is a very significant matter which leaves no doubt in my mind as to the benami nature of the purchase. The succession certificate case led to a suit by Musammatt Lakhpati Kuer and Musammatt Ganesh Kuer against Bishandayal Singh and others in respect of Jamalpore and to other Mouzahs. In this suit they stated that Jamalpore was purchased benami in the name of Nand Kishore. The suit was contested by the defendant No. 1 but in the written statement the allegation of benami was not denied, and finally the suit was decreed on compromise. It is certain that if the purchase had not really been benami, the defendants would have denied the allegation and would have pleaded that the suit was not maintainable under section 36 of the Sale Law.

The next point argued is with regard to legal necessity, and it is contended that the sale by Musammatt Lakhpati was good because it was to obtain funds for the construction of a temple and the installation of idols and for performing the Gaya Shradh for her husband. The temple has been constructed and the idols have been installed. It is conceded that ordinarily this would not constitute an item of legal necessity, as, however, there is a recital in the sale-deed that the temple was to be constructed in compliance with the wishes of her ancestor, it has been argued that this is sufficient, and reliance is placed on the ruling in Nanda Lal v. Jagat Kishore Acharjya (7). In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council held "that under ordinary circumstances and apart from Statute, recitals indeed can only be evidence as between the parties to the conveyance and those who claim under them." But in that particular case they did not think these recitals could be disregarded, nor on the other hand did they consider that any fixed and inflexible rule could be laid down as to the proper weight which they are entitled to receive. The essential portion of this judgment for the purposes of this case is the following:—

"It is only necessary that a representation should have been made to the purchaser that such necessity existed and that he should have acted honestly and made proper enquiry to satisfy himself of its truth. The recital is clear evidence of the representation, and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible, the recital, coupled with such circumstances, would be sufficient evidence to "support the deed."

The question is whether the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed the truth of the recital. In that case the circumstances did, but in this case they certainly do not. The oral evidence as to the directions of Surjun Singh is given by Paryag Singh; but this evidence has been rightly rejected by the Subordinate Judge. Surjun Singh had died about 25 or 30 years before the execution of the sale-deed. At the time he was only 15 or 16 years of age and had just married Musammatt Lakhpatti Koer. It is unlikely that under the circumstances he would have given any direction to build a temple or to instal idols, and if he had, Musammatt Lakhpatti Koer would certainly have carried out his wishes earlier. In addition to this we have it that the purchase was a benami one and the defendants certainly did not believe in the truth of the recital, because three years afterwards they fraudulently defaulted in payment of Government revenue and made a fraudulent purchase in order to try and perfect their title. I am satisfied, therefore, that this recital was merely inserted in order to try and give some validity to the purchase.

The position with regard to the Gaya Shradh, however, is different. The performance of the Gaya Shradh is undoubtedly a legal necessity. In order to make it binding, however, there should be no sufficient income from the estate to enable it to be performed. In this case Musammatt Lakhpatti Koer had ample funds to perform the Gaya Shradh without selling any property, and in addition to this the learned Subordinate Judge does not believe that the Gaya Shradh was ever performed. In this view I agree. It is true that there is a certain amount of oral evidence, but this is of a very unreliable character and an attempt has been made to back it up by documentary evidence which is undoubtedly fabricated.

The last point which has been urged is that even if the sale was a benami one, the defendants' title was perfected by the revenue sale as the defendants had no intention of defrauding the reversioner. This contention has no force. The first purchase from Musammatt Lakhpatti was a fraudulent one. The default in revenue and the subsequent purchase at the revenue sale were also fraudulent, and the whole transaction is vitiated even if there was no express intention of defeating the plaintiff. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs, and in doing so I would note my appreciation of the extremely careful judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge.

ROE, J.—I entirely agree and have nothing to add.

Hindu Law—Immorality of woman, effect of—Tie of blood relationship, severance of—Succession to property of unchaste Hindu woman.

Immorality on the part of a Hindu woman does not sever the ties of blood relationship and there is no rule of Hindu Law which would prevent the blood relations of such a woman from succeeding to her property on her death. [p. 751, col. 2; p. 752, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional Judge, Lucknow, dated the 30th May 1917, reversing that of the Munsif, South Lucknow, dated the 25th July 1916.

Mr. J. K. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Babus Daya Kishen Seth and Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The subject-matter of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen is a house in the City of Lucknow, which was conveyed on the 20th December 1910 to a woman named Musammatt Phulbasa who died in January 1915.

It is an admitted fact that for about forty years before her death this woman had lived as a concubine with a Bengali named Jagannath Mukerji, who was the father of the present appellant Satish Chander.

SATISH CHANDER MUKERJI V. MAHABALI PRASAD.

There can be no reasonable doubt that the house was purchased with money belonging to Jagannath, and that he bought the house for the benefit of the woman whom he had kept for so long. - Both the Courts below are agreed upon this point, and it is not possible to argue that Phulbasa was a mere benamidar for Jagannath, this being the case set up in the first Court by the defendant-appellant. It must be taken, therefore, that the house belonged to Phulbasa at the time she died and the question for consideration is really, "who were the heirs of Phulbasa?" The plaintiff in the suit, who is the principal respondent here, is the brother's son of Phulbasa and, therefore, her blood relation. - But he does not claim the property on the strength of his kinship with the deceased. His case was that Phulbasa before she took up with Mukerji was the wife of one Debi Din from whom she ran away. Debi Din thereafter married another woman Musammal Jagdei, a respondent in the case. When he died he left Jagdei and the respondent Kusehar Din, his nephew. The plaintiff has bought up the titles or assumed titles of these parties and claims the property as their transferee.

The first Court was of opinion that the plaintiff had failed to prove a marriage between Phulbasa and Debi Din and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court on the other hand has found that the marriage is proved.

The finding has been attacked here on the ground that the Judge of the Court below misinterpreted the pleadings and assumed that the defendant Satish Chander had admitted that Phulbasa was a married woman when she began to live with Jagannath.

I am myself inclined to think that the learned Judge did construe the pleadings too literally. Satish Chander, in replying to the allegations in the plaint relating to Phulbasa's relations with Debi Din, stated that he had no knowledge of the facts and obviously he had not. I understand that there was a complete estrangement between Jagannath and his lawful wife who lived in Bengal, and Satish Chander seems to have lived with his mother and to have known nothing about his father or the woman Phulbasa. In the first of the additional pleas contained in paragraph 10 of his written statement, Satish Chander said that while Phulbasa lived with Jagannath as his mistress she had severed all connection "with her husband and his relations." Bearing in mind the facts above stated I should not have interpreted this to mean that the defendant was admitting that Phulbasa was to his knowledge a married woman. The import of the plea appears to be that after Phulbasa took up with Jagannath she had no dealings with her relations, whoever they might be. And in any case there was no admission that the woman was the wife of Debi Din.

The matter, however, is of little importance, for the plaintiff produced evidence which satisfied the Judge that Phulbasa had been married to Debi Din and I think that the fact of this marriage is established.

To come then to the question of inheritance, the view of the Judge is that Debi Din's heirs are the heirs of Phulbasa, because the property in suit was "obviously" her stridhan and because the degradation of Phulbasa did not dissolve the ties of kinship.

With regard to these opinions I may say that the question whether the property was Phulbasa's stridhan is not quite so simple as the learned Judge thought. It is no doubt the case that according to the Bengal School of Hindu Law the term "stridhan" has no technical meaning and embraces all property which a woman has power to give, sell or use independently of her husband's control. But Phulbasa was subject not to the Dayabhaga but to the Mitakshara school of law, and it is by no means clear that property which a woman subject to the Mitakshara acquires from the wages of sin is her stridhan property as known to that school of law. There is authority of this Court for the view that it is not (Makarana v. Thakur Pershad (1).)

Again while there appears to be a general consensus of judicial opinion that immorality on the part of a Hindu woman does not sever the ties of blood relationship (indeed it is difficult to understand how a physical relation could be got rid of by mere immorality), it is by no means settled that the tie of affinity is not dissolved.

(1) 12 Ind. Cas. 778; 14 O. C. 234.

PROTAP CHUNDRA DUTT v. ABHIMANINI SURINI.

And again there is authority for the view that even if the bond of marriage is not loosed by the misconduct of the wife, her status as an heir of her husband is forfeited so as to prevent the heirs of her husband inheriting to her. The question is one of great difficulty, as was said in the Full Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court reported as Hari Lal Singh v. Tripura Charan Roy (2).

Fortunately it is not necessary for me to discuss this problem here. It is admitted that the plaintiff is the nearest blood relation of Phulbasa and if we take it that the tie of blood was not dissolved by the woman's immorality, the consequence seems to be that the plaintiff is entitled to the property by reason of his relationship with the deceased as there appears to be no definite rule of Hindu Law which would prevent inheritance in such a case.

If then it is uncertain whether the heirs of the woman's husband could lay a claim to the property, it is at any rate tolerably clear that her blood relations can. And in any event if we are driven to apply the principles of justice, equity and good conscience, it must be held that the plaintiff's right is superior to that of Satish Chander who in fact has no right at all, for he can claim no relationship with Phulbasa.

While I do not agree with all that has been said by the Judge of the Court below, I am satisfied that his decree is right and must be affirmed.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where in accordance with the provisions of Order XX, rule 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, the judgment of a Court of Small Causes contains the points for determination and the Judge's decision thereon, but omits to give reasons for the decision, the High Court will not interfere with it. [p. 753, cols. 1 & 2.]

Rule against the order of the Court of the Munsif, Bolpur, in Small Cause Court Suit No. 894 of 1917.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Babu Manmothonath Roy, for the Petitioner.—This Rule arises out of an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Causes Courts Act. The judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge is very short and it does not even set forth the plaintiff's case. It does not appear from the judgment that the learned Judge applied his judicial mind to the facts of the case. No doubt the learned Judge has technically complied with the provisions of the Code. But as the judgment is not self-contained and as it is not possible to know from it whether the learned Judge understood and judicially considered the plaintiff's case and the evidence adduced by him in support of his case, it is no judgment at all. Of course, a Small Cause Court Judge may deal with a case summarily, but this is not the way in which summary powers should be exercised. Refers to Maik Rahmat v. Shiva Prasad (1).

[FLETCHER, J.—Order XX, rule 4, lays down what the judgment should contain.]

But that rule does not do away with the necessity of writing an intelligible, complete and self-contained judgment. From the judgment a party to a suit must know that the Judge did apply his judicial mind to the facts of the case and considered the evidence adduced by the parties.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

FLETCHER, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why the judgment and decree complained of should not be set aside. What happened was this: the plaintiff brought a suit against the defendants in the Small Cause Court for the price of paddy with interest.

(1) 13 A. 533; A. W. N. (1891) 172; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 337.

DARGAHI v. RAJESHWARI PERSHAD.

The learned Judge's judgment consists of the following:—

"The points for decision are:

(1) Whether defendants borrowed the paddy in question?

(2) Whether plaintiff is entitled to the interest claimed?

The first point is found in the negative. So, the second point does not arise for determination. Dismissed with costs." The plaintiff complained that he is entitled to a judgment setting forth the reasons which moved the learned Judge to come to the conclusion he arrived at. That turns purely on the construction of the Statute. Order XX, rule 4, sub-rule (1), says, "judgments of a Court of Small Causes need not contain more than the points for determination and the decision thereon." That there is a difference between "the decision thereon" and "the reasons for such decision" is obvious from the terms of sub-rule (2). The plaintiff has, therefore, got to establish that this judgment is not a judgment in accordance with Order XX, rule 4, sub-rule (1), Code of Civil Procedure. Prima facie it is, because the judgment sets out the points for determination and what was decided thereon. The case, however, the plaintiff says, is covered by the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Malik Rahmat v. Shiva Prasad (1). But no decision of any Court can get over the clear words of the section and, in so far as that decision purported to decide that in all cases the Small Cause Court must give its reasons for the decision, that was clearly in excess of what was stated in the Statute. One cannot add to or alter the clear words of the Act by judicial decisions. The Bombay case referred to, namely, the case of Bai Jasoda v. Bamansha Mancherji (2), is really an authority the other way, because the judgment of the Small Cause Court did not state, as pointed out by Mr. Justice Fulton, the points for determination and the decision thereon. In that view, of course, the judgment did not comply with the terms of section 203, Code of Civil Procedure, then in force. It seems to me that in this case we are not entitled to interfere, having regard to the terms of Order XX, rule 4, sub-rule (1), the learned Small Cause Court Judge having properly set out the points for decision and his decision thereon. The present Rule, therefore, fails and is discharged. No one appearing on the other side, we make no order as to costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

Mortgage—Interest, excessive or exorbitant rate of—Debt contracted by Hindu father on credit of family property—Discretion of Court to reduce rate of interest, reasonable exercise of—Appellate Court, interference by.

In cases of debts contracted by Hindu fathers on the credit of the family property, Courts have a discretion to reduce the rate of interest if it is excessive or exorbitant. [p. 754, cols. 1 & 2.]

An Appellate Court will be slow to interfere where it can be shown that such discretion has been exercised in a reasonable manner. [p. 754, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gonda, dated the 6th July 1917.

Babu Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Munshi Aditya Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for consideration in this case is, whether the Court below was justified in reducing the contract rate of interest in the mortgage bond upon which the suit of the plaintiff-appellant was based.

The facts may be briefly stated. The mortgage was executed by Chaudhri Jagdamka Prasad, the father of the defendant Rajeshri Prasad, on the 3rd of July 1911. The principal sum was Rs. 3,000 and there was an agreement that interest should be payable at the rate of 2 annas 3 pies per rupee per annum, which works out to just over Rs. 14 per cent. per annum. It was also agreed between the parties that interest should be payable yearly and that in case of default compound interest should be calculated at the stipulated rate with yearly rests. Nothing having been paid on account of the mortgage, the present suit for sale was brought, the amount of the claim being Rs. 6,167-10-8. The plaintiff asked for the sale of the mortgaged property consisting of a 2-annas share in a village called Rahmatpur.

(2) 23 B. 384; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 222.

DARGAHI V. RAJESHWARI PERSHAD.

Various pleas were put forward by the defendant, of which it is only necessary to consider one. He pleaded that the rate of interest was exorbitant and was not justified.

The Court below has found that there was legal necessity for the borrowing of this money. It seems that at the time the mortgage was made, certain ancestral family property of Jagdamka Prasad had been sold in execution of a decree. The judgment-debtor was anxious to have the sale set aside under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 89, and it is proved that on the day after this mortgage was executed Jagdamka Prasad deposited in Court a sum of Rs. 2,304 odd and had the sale of the property set aside.

Turning to the mortgage-deed in suit, it is to be noted that out of the principal sum of Rs. 3,000, a sum of Rs. 2,210 was advanced in cash to Jagdamka Prasad for the purpose of enabling him to deposit the money in Court. The balance was appropriated in discharge of a previous debt owing to the plaintiff. I think there can be no doubt on these facts that the finding of the Court below is correct, namely, that the legal necessity for the taking of the loan was established. The question then is, whether the Subordinate Judge was justified in holding that the contract rate of interest was liable to be reduced. It is no longer possible to argue that the Courts have no powers to interfere in cases of this kind with the rate of interest agreed upon. The principle has been sanctioned by their Lordships of the Privy Council in cases where a mortgagee has dealt with a Hindu widow, and such a principle can reasonably be applied also to the case of a father who is the manager of a joint Hindu family and who has qualified powers of disposal over the family property for the purpose of meeting what is called legal necessities. I need only refer to two cases in this Court, in which it has been held that the Courts have a discretion to interfere with the rate of interest in cases of this kind [Of. Sarabjit Singh v. Gur Bakhsh Singh (1) and Sadho Oharan Prasad v. Ram Ratan (2)]. I may also refer to a judgment of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court which is reported as Padam Singh v. Ram Rup (3). It has been argued that the present case may be distinguished from these other cases on the facts and that here the rate of interest is not so exorbitant as it was in the cases to which I have referred. In the case reported as Sarabjit Singh v. Gur Bakhsh Singh (1), it appears from a perusal of the record that the rate of interest there was 24 per cent. per annum compoundable with 6-monthly rests. In the case reported as Sadho Oharan Prasad v. Ram Ratan (2), the interest was 24 per cent. compound with quarterly rests. In the Allahabad case the rate of interest was 18 per cent. compoundable with 6 monthly rests. It may, therefore, be taken that in the present case the contract rate of interest was substantially lower than it was in any of these reported cases. The Subordinate Judge allowed 12½ per cent. simple interest, thinking that that was a reasonable amount of compensation to the creditor. The reason why this rate was fixed on was that there had been a previous loan transaction between Jagdamka Prasad and the plaintiff in which the money had been borrowed on a simple bond at the rate of 12½ per cent. per annum. It is pointed out, however, and I think correctly, that the Subordinate Judge omitted to notice that the simple bond provided for compound interest; and so it has been argued here on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the Subordinate Judge, if he had noticed this fact, would have allowed at least 12½ per cent. compound interest in the present case. Whether this was so or not it is difficult to say. The law being that the Court has a discretion to interfere with the rate of interest in cases of this nature, an Appellate Court will be slow to interfere if it is shown that the discretion of the Court below has been exercised in a reasonable manner. One fact is worth consideration in the present case, and that is that when this mortgage was executed the only cash which was advanced was a sum of Rs. 2,210. The balance which went to make up the total of Rs. 3,000 was, as I have said, applied to the discharge of a previous debt. Interest, however, has been charged on the whole amount of Rs. 3,000, and from this point of view it may be said that the total amount of interest claimed in the present suit is excessive, having regard to the fact that the only money which the debtor got on the date of the mortgage was a sum of Rs. 2,210. The lower Court has given the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 5,047-15 0 together with proportionate costs and future interest at $12\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. up till the date fixed for payment. On the whole, therefore, I do not feel disposed to interfere with the decree. It seems to me that having regard to all the circumstances just referred to, the mortgagee has had substantial justice and that there is no occasion for me to interfere with the decision of the Court below for the purpose of increasing the amount of the decree by awarding compound interest. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition, suit for—Separation—Burden of proof.

In a suit for partition by a member of a joint Hindu family the initial onus is on the defendant to prove separation. [p. 755, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur.

Mr. Rajendra Prosad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rai Gurusaran Prosad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

COURTS, J.—This was a suit by one Narsing Misser for partition of joint family property, details of which are set out in schedule I of the plaint. The defendants are Birju Misser, brother of plaintiff's father Rajnath, the two sons of Birju Misser and the grandson of Birju Misser. The plaintiff's case, as made out in the plaint, is that his father Rajnath Misser died in 1310 F. S. while the family was joint and that after his death plaintiff and the defendants constituted a joint Hindu family of which Birju Misser, defendant No. 1 was the Karta. The plaintiff became major some time ago; he separated in mess from the defendants 4 years ago and now being dissatisfied with the management of the joint property by Birju Misser, he brought this suit for partition. The defendants on the other hand contend that plaintiff's father Rajnath died in 1309, that he had separated from the other defendants some years before, namely, in 1302, and that since then the defendants had been in separate possession of their respective shares, the share of Birju defendant No. 1 being larger on account of the custom of Jethangs which obtained in the family. The suit has been dismissed and the plaintiff has appealed.

The question is whether there was a partition or not, and the first point which is urged before us is that the family being a joint Hindu family, the onus was on the defendants to prove separation. The learned Subordinate Judge, after discussion, made the plaintiff produce his evidence first, and it is contended that he has been thereby seriously prejudiced and that the learned Subordinate Judge has, by, putting the onus on the wrong side, been led to a wrong conclusion. It is true that the family being a joint Hindu family, the onus was on the defendants to prove separation and it is also a fact that the learned Subordinate Judge made the plaintiff produce his evidence first. It is clear from his judgment, however, that he realised that the onus was on the defendants and although he did not in the first instance approach the case in the best way, it is clear from the evidence which is now all before us that the plaintiff has not in fact been in any way prejudiced.

The defendants rely principally on the Record of Rights, which shows the majority of the plots in the name of the plaintiff or of the defendants and some plots shamilat. The explanation of some plots being recorded as shamilat is that this was done in cases where the land was in the occupation of the tenants. The record also shows two bighas more in the possession of the defendant Birju than in the possession of the plaintiffs, and from this it has been argued that there can have been no partition. It is clear from the evidence, however, that the custom of Jethangs by which the elder brother got a larger share obtains in the family. The Record of Rights then is strong presumptive evidence of partition, particularly as it was prepared at a time when there was no enmity between the parties. Moreover the evidence of the record is corroborated by a large number of witnesses who have been examined on behalf of the defendants. The most important of these are the two Panches who made the partition. They state that the partition was made in 1302; their evidence was believed by the learned Subordinate Judge. The rest of the witnesses are all neighbours who certainly knew the state of the family. They depose that the plaintiff and defendants lived in separate houses and were separate both in mess and property. Several of the witnesses are tenants of the plaintiff and they depose that they pay rent to him separately. This evidence has all been carefully considered by the learned Subordinate Judge who has believed it, and no reason has been shown to us why it should not be accepted.

The plaintiff on the other hand relies principally on oral evidence and on the fact that there has been no mutation of names in the landlord's sherista. With regard to the latter point, Birju himself says that mutation was not made after partition because it involved payment of salami and because the parties were not on bad terms. This is a reasonable and very common explanation of non-mutation of names, and there is on the face of it no reason why it should not be accepted. The oral evidence adduced by the plaintiff not only does not rebut the defendants' evidence, but goes far to support the stay of partition. The witnesses all admit that the parties lived in separate houses and that they were separate in mess and that their moveables have been partitioned. They also admit that there was disruption of the family in 1302 by which certain members became separate and that Birju actually has separate property. They say, however, that in spite of this the plaintiff and the defendants still remained joint. Their evidence, however, on this point is of an exceedingly doubtful character. In several instances it has been elicited by means of leading questions put by the plaintiff's Pleader, it has not been believed by the learned Subordinate Judge and it is, in my opinion, totally unworthy of credit.

In the result, then, I am satisfied that there was a partition in the time of Rajnath as alleged by the defendant and this being so, the plaintiff is not entitled to a partition. I would accordingly confirm the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge and would dismiss this appeal with costs.

ROE, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

T. M. MUTHUSAMIA PILLAI—

PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), s. 16—Attachment of insolvent's property after adjudication, legality of—Vesting order, absence of, effect of—Action for money had and received, scope and, extent of—Assignment by creditor of debt due to him and his co-creditors—Collection of whole debt by assignee—Mistake

RAMASAMI NAIDU v. MUTHUSAMIA PILLAI.

—Suit against assignee by real owner, maintainability of.—Principal and agent.—Power-of-attorney to collect debt.—Right of agent to sell debt.

Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and one R. were partners. R. was adjudicated an insolvent. The outstandings due to the partnership were sold in public auction by the Official Receiver, instead of R.'s share alone, which was a fourth, and were purchased by the 1st defendant. The 1st defendant, believing bona fide that he had purchased the whole debt due to the partnership, collected the debt. Plaintiff, who held a decree against defendants Nos. 2 to 4, attached the latter's shares in the debt. Before the attachment defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were adjudicated insolvents. The plaintiff, who was appointed Receiver in the suit in which the shares of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were attached, brought the present suit for recovery of 3/4ths of the amount recovered by the 1st defendant from the partnership debtor as money had and received by the 1st defendant for the use of defendants Nos. 2 to 4:

Held, (1) that there being no privity between the plaintiff and the 1st defendant or between defendants Nos. 2 to 4 and the 1st defendant, the action was unsustainable; [p. 760, col. 1; p. 765, col. 2.]

(2) that the attachment effected by the plaintiff was void and of no effect as the shares of defendants Nos. 2 to 4 had, by their adjudication, become vested in the Official Receiver [p. 758, col. 2; p. 763, col. 1.]

Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar, 34 Ind. Cas. 602; 20 M. L. J. 415, explained.

Per Oldfield, J.—Whether there is or is not a distinct order vesting an insolvent's properties in the Official Receiver, they become divisible among the creditors from the date of the adjudication in insolvency, which relates back to the petition. [p. 758, col. 2.]

An agent authorized by a power-of-attorney only to collect debts has no authority to realise their value or any part of it by selling them. [p. 759, col. 1.]

It may be permissible in India, as in England, to sue only the solvent members of a firm, when a decree is sought against the firm. [p. 759, cols. 1 & 2.]

The action for money had and received is still to be regarded, as it was originally, as based on an implied or fictional promise. The authorities, however, negative the possibility of such a promise being deduced from the exquum et bonum, as it may appeal to the sympathy of the Court in the particular case or from circumstances in which the defendant having no privity with the plaintiff, when the money was received, need not be supposed to have given and had no duty to give any promise. [p. 760, col. 2; p. 761, col. 1.]

Per Sadasiva Aiyar, J.—While privity of contract between the parties is not necessary to sustain an action for money had and received, there must be what might be called some privity of a legally recognizable nature, such as some knowledge of particular facts in the man who received the money and some mistake or ignorance of fact on the part of the man who paid the money, or some relation of trust or confidence between the person who received the money and the person claiming the money or a portion thereof, on which the Court could fasten as creating the relation of principal and agent (though by fiction) between the plaintiff and the defendant. [p. 765, cols. 1 & 2.]

A co-sharer may, by a stretch of language, be treated as standing in a position of confidence towards his co-sharers, but a person who ignorantly purchases from a co-sharer the whole of the claim of all the co-sharers cannot be said to be in such a position. [p. 765, col. 2.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 405 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tuticorin, in Original Suit No. 185 of 1915.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. M. D. Devadoss, for the Appellant. —Plaintiff's attachment was after defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were adjudicated insolvents, and plaintiff could not lay an exclusive claim to the shares of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. There was, no doubt, no order of the Insolvency Court distinctly vesting the insolvent's properties in the Official Receiver, but that is not necessary. Under section 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the properties became vested in the Court from the date of adjudication and became available for pro tanto distribution among all the creditors.

The action is misconceived and unsustainable. Whether 1st defendant had a right or not to collect the whole debt, he did so under a bona fide mistake as to his right. The suit cannot be sustained on the basis of an action for money had and received, as there is no privity between the plaintiff and the defendants. There is no suggestion that plaintiff or the 2nd, 3rd or 4th defendants had any knowledge of, or connection with, the payments to 1st defendant. There is no allegation of fraud in the plaint. The decided cases where the action was allowed were mostly those in which a fiduciary relationship existed between the parties.

Mr. A. Krishnasawmy Aiyar, for the Respondent.—The insolvency of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 before plaintiff's attachment does not affect plaintiff's claim, as there was no order of Court at the date of attachment, vesting the insolvent's properties in the Official Receiver.

The plaintiff's suit is, in effect, one for money had and received by 1st defendant for the use and benefit of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. This form of action includes all claims arising ex æquo et bono and the justice of the case. Sinclair v. Brougham (1). In Litt v. Martindale (2) the action was sustained even where there was no fiduciary relation between the parties. See also Sankunni Menon v. Govindan Menon (3). The 1st defendant, when he collected the debt, must be deemed to have done so for the benefit of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The scope of the action for money had and received extends to the facts of this case.

JUDGMENT.

OLDFIELD, J.—The main facts of this case can be stated shortly. Plaintiff obtained a decree against 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants and after attaching money, alleged to belong to them and to be in 1st defendant's possession, was appointed Receiver in his own execution and in that capacity is now attempting to recover from 1st defendant, the other defendants being impleaded as persons interested. The defence of 1st defendant, the appellant before us, is that (1) the money is a sum due to 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants and one Rajappa Mudali, the right to collect which he acquired in a legal manner; (2) if his own title is bad, some at least of the money has vested in persons other than plaintiff, those who are administering 2nd and 3rd defendants' estates in insolvency.

The lower Appellate Court's judgment is mainly occupied with the second of these contentions. The facts relied on are that 2nd defendant on 13th March 1911 and 3rd defendant on 7th October 1911 became insolvents, the one in Tinnevely and the other in Madura, and their assets, therefore, vested for the benefit of all their creditors, before plaintiff attached this portion of them on 15th July 1914. The District Munsif's finding that this was so in the case of 2nd defendant has not been attacked. He and the lower Appellate Court found otherwise in the case of 3rd defendant, because he was adjudicated insolvent by the Official Receiver, Madura, and no distinct vesting order, such as Official Receiver of Trichinopoly v. Somasundaram Chettiar (4) requires, having been passed, the debtor's estate is still available to satisfy individual claims. But this is unsustainable. The authority cited may entail that the estate did not in the absence of a distinct order vest in the Official Receiver. The fact, which the lower Courts overlooked, remains that in any case it vested under section 16 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act in the Court and became divisible among the creditors from the date of the petition and that under section 16 (2) after the date of the adjudication, which related back to that of the petition, no creditor had any remedy against it. The cases of 2nd and 3rd defendants are, therefore, similar. Plaintiff can execute his decree only by proving in their insolvencies; and on this ground at least his claim to what is alleged to be in part their money in 1st defendant's hands must fail.

The lower Appellate Court has next held against 1st defendant's right to that money on the special ground that he obtained it in proceedings, which could not bind them or 4th defendant. It consists in a debt, which he has collected in virtue of his purchase at a sale held by the Official Receiver, Tinnevely, in the administration of the estate of Rajappa Mudali above referred to and of an assignment to him, Exhibit I, by 2nd defendant. That sale is represented by 1st defendant as being of the debts due to a firm composed of Rajappa and 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants. But, as Exhibit B, the auction list, shows, what was sold was only "the right to arrears due to Rajappa Mudali, insolvent petitioner, as due under the day book and ledger of R. M. shop," R. M. N. being the firm above referred to. Exhibit K, the sale-deed by the Official Receiver to 1st defendant, is no doubt for "the debts due to the joint shop conducted under the style of R. M. by Rajappa Mudali." But the insolvency was, it is not disputed, that of Rajappa, not the firm; and it is sufficiently clear that only his share, not 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants, purported to be or could have been sold. How the Official Receiver could sell one partner's share of the debts due to the firm, instead of following the normal course and selling his share in its assets, as it might be ascertained, is not clear; but this irregularity appears to have gone unnoticed until the hearing in this Court and on the view I take would not affect the conclusion. The sale in these circumstances giving no title to any portion of the debts except Rajappa's, 1st defendant has relied also on Exhibit I, the assignment of 2nd and 3rd defendants' shares, which he obtained shortly after. It is, I agree with the lower Court, ineffectual as regards 3rd defendant's share because Exhibit A, his power-of-attorney in 2nd defendant's favour, authorised the latter only to collect debts due to the shop, not to realise their value or any part of it by selling them. The result so far is that 1st defendant's right to the debts has been established only in respect of second defendant's and Rajappa's shares but that, as already found, plaintiff cannot be heard to deny it in respect of the former's. The question is next of the general objection, which has been made to his claim to the share of 4th defendant. That objection would, it may be observed, be available against his claim to the other shares also.

Before referring to this objection, I observe that plaintiff's decree, which has been shown us during the hearing, was obtained against 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants, Rajappa not being a party. It may be permissible in India, as it is in England, [Hawkins v. Ramsbottom (5)] to sue only the solvent members of a firm, when a decree is sought against it. But there is nothing in the decree, except the use of the Vilasam R. M. N. before each defendant's name, and that is insufficient, to indicate that relief was sought or given against the firm's assets, not the defendants individually, and on such a decree plaintiff's proper course was after exhausting their separate property to proceed against their shares in those assets after they had been ascertained in proper dissolution proceedings, if necessary at his instance in defendants' insolvencies or otherwise. Again, however, this point has not been taken at any stage and, I, therefore, turn to the general argument already referred to.

It may for the present purpose be considered only as regards 4th defendant, and it is that the suit will not lie, because plaintiff cannot recover from 1st defendant money which he received owing to a mistake from the debtors of 4th defendant, plaintiff's debtor. Certainly 1st defendant had no right to receive the money. But there is no finding that in doing so, he acted otherwise than honestly and in bona fide mistake as to his right. When or how he became aware of the invalidity of his title, as based on his purchase at the Official Receiver's sale or his assignment (in the case of 3rd defendant), if he did become aware before collecting the money, has not been ascertained; but, the plaint containing no suggestion of fraud or collusion between him and the Official Receiver or any person concerned, no presumption can be made against him. And then, as plaintiff's position can be no better than that of his debtors, the question simplified is, whether 4th defendant or either of the others could recover from 1st defendant what he has received mistakenly as due to them.

This question in terms of English Law is, whether in the circumstances an action would lie against 1st defendant for money had and received for their use; that is, for the use of plaintiff. The scope of this form of action and the considerations which led to its extension are discussed fully in Sinclair v. Brougham (1), although it is possible that the former has never been defined exhaustively. Plaintiff's argument has accordingly been that it comprehends all claims arising, in the words of Blackstone's definition (Comm. III, 162), ex sequo et bono and "the justice of the case." First defendant contends, and I shall hold, that one test of its applicability to such facts, as those before us, is afforded by the existence of privity between the plaintiff and defendant, a test which those facts do not satisfy. For it is not suggested that plaintiff or 2nd, 3rd and 4th defendants had any knowledge of or connection with the payment to 1st defendant. No doubt there are, as is to be expected in the circumstances referred to in Sinclair v. Brougham (1), decisions, in which this test was not applied clearly. But, so far as they cannot be distinguished, they must be regarded as discredited by the mass of cases, in which the general rule was enunciated.

To refer to cases, in which the question arose, as it arises here, in connection with the recovery of payments mistakenly made to the defendant, not by the plaintiff directly, but by a third person alleged to be liable to the plaintiff, and in which there was no direct or obvious fiduciary relation between the parties, reliance has been placed first on Litt v. Martindale (2) and it is certainly in plaintiff's favour. But, although the objection taken by the defendant was that money had and received would not lie, the judgments (which are laconic) indicate that the action was treated as founded on fraud, of which there is no question in the case before us. In Littlewood v. Williams (6) the point of privity was not dealt with distinctly, but would appear to have been decided in the plaintiff's favour on the ground of their previous relation with the defendants and their servant and his, from whom he received the money, the conclusion being that it was the plaintiff's money in his hands. These English cases, therefore, the strongest on plaintiff's side, in no way detract from the insistence on the necessity for evidence of privity in others, to which I turn. In Rogers v. Kelly (7) the defendant received money due on plaintiff's bill from his bankers owing to a clerk confusing a bill which had been provided for with one which had not been; and the action was dismissed on the ground that whatever plaintiff's position as against his bankers or theirs against defendant, there was no privity between the parties before the Court. And so also in Chambers v. Miller (8) and Aiken v. Short (9), in which it was regarded as material that the mistake owing to which the defendant received the money was one, with which he had nothing to do, since it was between the person who paid him, and the plaintiff. In these cases defendant was no doubt entitled to the money, though not from that person. But that was not so in Rogers v. Ingham (10), a suit between two persons claiming to be legatees of whom the defendant had been paid by the executor's mistake; and, though the action for money had and received was not in question, the principle now under discussion was applied, James, L. J., observing that relief against mistake had never been given in the case of a simple money demand between the parties, there being no fiduciary relation between them and no equity to supervene by reason of the conduct of either. So also in Mackersy v. Ramsays (11), where it was held that, because privity existed between plaintiff and defendant, his banker, who had undertaken to collect the amount of his bill and had agreed to credit him with the amount received, the latter was liable to him and that, because privity did not exist between him and the banker's agents, whose insolvency caused loss of the money, those agents were not. And in Prince v. Oriental Bank Corporation (12), in which Mackersy v. Ramsays (11) was approved, the absence of privity again afforded a ground of decision. It is to be observed that the language in Sinclair v. Brougham (1), on which plaintiff's claim to a liberal view of the action for money had and received mainly rests, was used rather of its early development than

of its scope as settled at the present time by authority. It is no doubt still to be regarded, as it was originally, as based on an implied or fictional promise (see the judgments of Lords Haldane and Dunedin). But Sinclair v. Brougham (1) is completely in accordance with the great body of other authority in negating the possibility of such a promise being deduced, as plaintiff here would deduce it from the requum et bonum, as it may appeal to the sympathy of the Court in the particular case, or from circumstances, in which the defendant having no privity with the plaintiff, when the money was received, need not be supposed to have given and had no duty to give any promise. Here 1st defendant was clearly under no such duty. For he collected the debts due to 4th defendant and others without reference to them and was not enabled to do so by reason of any fiduciary relation with them or in consequence of any fact independent of the willingness of their debtors to pay him.

The conditions, on which a plaintiff can sue for money received to his use, have been discussed in India more often with reference to the applicability of Article No. 62, Schedule I, Limitation Act, than to the existence of a right of action; and, when the latter has been in question, the issue of privity has seldom arisen or been raised. The cases, therefore, are of little assistance. Plaintiff, however, relies on Syud Looft Ali Khan v. Musammat Afzuloonissa Begum (13) and Tellis v. Saldanha (14), the latter being explained in Vaidyanath Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (15). But in all these the parties were in the relation of joint tenants or co-owners and the principle of section 90, Trusts Act, was applicable, the defendants having in each case received the money sued for as representing the plaintiffs and themselves; and a fiduciary relation was, therefore, in question. Sankunni Menon v. Govindan Menon (3) was no doubt decided with reference to Blackstone's definition of the action and a very general statement that the defendant's obligation arose ex æquo et bono. But the suit was to recover money, for which no doubt defendant, a member of a Tarwad, and plaintiff had given a pro-note, apparently by way of acknowledgment, to the Karnavan; and, when the money was returned from the Government deposit, for which defendant originally received it, his receipt of it was apparently regarded as part of the transaction, into which he had entered with the Karnavan's concurrence for the Tarwad's benefit. The decision, therefore, might, it would seem, have been based on a ground narrower than the one adopted and consistent with the conclusion already reached on English authority. In it reference was made to Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (16), a case, in which the fiduciary relation between the parties, co-sharers, was clear and in which, therefore, nothing turned on the reference it contains to Litt v. Martindale (2), already cited, as an action for money had and received. This reference in fact merely reproduced that made in another case relied on by plaintiff, Raghumoni Audhikary v. Nilmoni Singh Deo (17), in which Litt v. Martindale (2), Neate v. Harding (18) and Holt v. Ely (19) were referred to. But the claim in the two last mentioned cases was for money taken wrongfully from the plaintiff, directly in the one and from his agent in the other; and the question of privity was, therefore, not raised in them. It has been pointed out that it was not discussed in the first mentioned; and in Raghumoni Audhikary v. Nilmoni Singh Deo (17), the claim being for money obtained fraudulently by the defendant from the Collector, who received it as plaintiff's deposit and apparently was holding it for him, it would probably have been useless to raise it. On the other hand, in Ramaswami Aiyar v. Kanthayyan (20), also a case of withdrawal of money from a collector, at but not one in which it was held as a deposit or withdrawn by fraud, although the relevancy of the reference to Kendal v. Wood (21) is not clear, the suit was held unsustainable, on the ground that the payment by the Collector and the receipt by defendants were bona fide and without notice of plaintiff's preferential right; and Harihar Missir v. Syed Mohammad (22) was a case, in which evidence of privity was insisted on and the suit was held to be governed by Article No. 62 only because that evidence was sufficient. There is accordingly no reason for holding that the principle accepted in England has been rejected in this country. We must, therefore, decide that plaintiff's suit does not lie for any of the money claimed.

This conclusion renders it unnecessary to deal with the argument of Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar for plaintiff relating to 4th defendant's share of the amount received by the 1st defendant and based on Lindley on Partnership, 6th Edition, page 692, or with the memorandum of objections. The result is that the appeal is allowed and the suit dismissed, plaintiff to pay the 1st defendant's costs throughout. The other defendants have not been made parties to the appeal. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

SADASIVA AIYAR, J.—The material facts may be shortly stated thus:—The Official Receiver of the Tinnevely District sold by public auction the debts due to a partnership of four persons who carried on business in Tuticorin. The principal partner, Rajappa Mudali, was adjudicated an insolvent with effect from the 5th December 1908. The partnership business itself had been closed in February 1908 (see Exhibit I). I think it may be taken that the partnership had become dissolved between February 1908 when the business was closed and December 1908 when Rajappa was declared insolvent, except, of course, that the rights and obligation of the partners continued in all things necessary for winding up the business of the partnership. (Section 263 of the Contract Act.) When Rajappa Mudali was adjudicated an insolvent, he was entitled only to $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the assets of the partnership, which assets principally consisted of the outstandings due to the partnership by its debtors. The Official Receiver seems to have put up for auction sale the whole of the outstandings due to the partnership and the 1st defendant became the purchaser thereof in October 1910 (see Exhibit K) for Rs. 250. I think it is clear that the 1st defendant (the appellant before us) never intended to purchase only Rajappa Mudali's $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the outstandings and it follows that he never considered himself as a co-sharer with the other three partners of Rajappa Mudali, (namely, the defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4) of the right to recover those outstandings. He never recognised the 4th defendant as having been a partner at all, and the 4th defendant himself always repudiated that he was a partner, though the finding of the lower Courts (which is binding on us in second appeal) is that he was a partner.

The 2nd defendant in November 1910 (within three weeks of the 1st defendant's purchase) admitted in Exhibit I that the whole of the outstandings belonged to the 1st defendant by his purchase at the Receiver's sale, and on receipt of a consideration released all his (2nd defendant's) right in, or connection with, the outstandings in favour of the 1st defendant. Thus the 1st defendant became legally entitled at least to half share in those outstandings, whether his claim to the whole of the outstandings was well founded or not.

The plaintiff got a decree for money against the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 in a Small Cause Suit of 1910. The 1st defendant persuaded a debtor of the firm to agree to pay about Rs. 1,650 to him in compromise of a suit brought by him against that debtor and afterwards received Rs. 450 more than three years before this suit and again Rs. 1,200 in 1912 within three years before this suit from that debtor. The plaintiff, in execution of his Small Cause decree against the defendants Nos. 2 to 4, attached $\frac{2}{3}$ ths of this amount of Rs. 1,650 in July 1914, though meanwhile the 2nd defendant had relinquished his rights to the 1st defendant in November 1910 and had even been declared insolvent in the Madura District Court with effect from March 1911. The 3rd defendant also had been adjudicated insolvent in the same Court with effect from October 1911. Thus it is clear that the plaintiff's attachment in 1914 (assuming that the 2nd and the 3rd defendants continued to have each $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the outstandings of the firm notwithstanding the Tinnevely Receiver's auction sale of the whole to the 1st defendant in October 1910) was wholly ineffectual so far as the 2nd and the 3rd defendants' shares were concerned, as the said shares had become vested in the 1st defendant and the Official Receiver respectively or in the Official Receiver of Madura alone before the attachment of July 1914.

The plaintiff brought the present suit in April 1915 for recovery of $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of Rs. 1,650 (Rs. 1,237-8-0) recovered by the 1st defendant in 1911-12 from the partnership-debtor. (The plaintiff had been appointed Receiver in the suit in which the shares of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were attached in 1914.) The suit was brought on the allegation that $\frac{3}{4}$ ths share of the money so recovered by the 1st defendant was money had and received by the 1st defendant for the use of the defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

The lower Courts have given a decree in favour of the plaintiff for half of Rs. 1,200 (that is, Rs. 600) which the 1st defendant collected from the partnership-debtor in 1912 within three years of the suit, treating that Rs. 600 as the half share of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 received by the 1st defendant for the use of the defendants Nos. 3 and 4. I shall at once dispose of one of the points that arise in the case by stating that the plaintiff's attachment of the 3rd defendant's alleged $\frac{1}{4}$ th share in the Rs. 1,200 is legally ineffective as that share, assuming it to have existed in 1911, had become vested in the Official Receiver of Madura who was not a party to the plaintiff's execution proceedings of 1914. The second appeal has, therefore, to be allowed in any event to the extent of half the amount decreed in plaintiff's (respondent's) favour by the lower Courts.

The only question, therefore, remaining is whether the 1st defendant received Rs. 300, being the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share (of the Rs. 1,200) due to the 4th defendant, for the use of the 4th defendant and whether the 1st defendant is, therefore, liable to pay over that Rs. 300 with interest from 23rd April 1915 to the plaintiff. The question of law involved must be admitted to be one of very great difficulty. Suppose A and B are joint creditors of C, who owes them Rs. 100. D, a stranger, purchases the whole debt from A, believing that A was entitled to transfer the whole debt of Rs. 100 to D. D then is paid by C, the debtor, the whole of the Rs. 100. Can B, the co-creditor, treat Rs. 50 of the Rs. 100 as having been received by D for B's use and sue to recover it from D? (It will be seen that I have tried in the above illustration to eliminate as far as possible unnecessary incidents appearing in the facts of the present case but not bearing on the question of law.)

Now it is clear that if A himself received the whole of the Rs. 100 from the debtor C, B, his co-creditor, could treat Rs. 50 as money had and received by A for B and sue A for it. The question is whether when D got the transfer of the debt from A, believing that D got the title to it free from any claim to any portion of it on the part of anybody else, and when D recovered the whole of the money from the debtor C on that footing, D could be treated as having received half of it on behalf of B. In Sinclair v. Brougham (1). (House of Lords), Lord Chancellor Haldane, Lord Dunedin and Lord Sumner have considered the nature of the action for money had and received. The Lord Chancellor says (see pages 415 to 417*):—"Broadly speaking, so far as proceedings in personam are concerned, the common law of England recognises only actions of two classes, those founded on contract and those founded on tort. When it speaks of actions arising quasi ex contractu, it refers merely to a class of actions in theory based on a contract which is imputed to the defendant by a fiction of law..... The action (for money had and received) was in principle one which rested on a promise to pay, either actual or imputed by law..... Lord Mansfield explained..... 'If the defendant be under an obligation, from the ties of natural justice, to refund, the law implies a debt, and gives this action founded on the equity of the plaintiff's case, as it were upon a contract'..... The form of the common indebitatus assumpsit count... was a form of a claim which had been very gradually evolved. The researches of recent writers appear to me to have placed its origin in its true light. The basis of actions of this kind was originally tort, a writ having been framed in consimili casu under the provisions of Chapter 24 of the Statute of Westminster

*Pages of (1914) A. C.—Ed.

RAMASAMI NAIDU v. MUTHUAMI PILLAI.

(13 Edw. 1). By degrees, out of this action on the case and as one of its forms, a new form which was soon to diverge wholly from tort, the action of assumpsit arose..... Holt, C. J., is reported to have said: 'That the notion of promises in law was a metaphysical notion for the law makes no promise, but where there is a promise of the party.' Yet the observation of Holt, C. J., notwithstanding, a little later on this 'metaphysical notion' became firmly established. For it was just the fiction of attributing a promise in a multitude of cases where in reality there was none, which finally gave the action its comprehensive range and made it available even where no fact importing or implying privity of contract could be proved. The history of the action of the assumpsit has been described by a writer to whom lawyers and historians alike owe much, the late Professor Ames of Harvard University, in language which shows how easily the fiction of a promise grew into part of the law. Speaking of the action of assumpsit generally he says:—'In its origin an action of tort, it was soon transformed into an action of contract, becoming afterwards a remedy where there was neither tort nor contract. Based at first only upon an express promise, it was afterwards supported upon an implied promise, and even upon a fictitious promise. Introduced as a special manifestation of the action on the case, it soon acquired the dignity of a distinct form of action, which superseded debt, became concurrent with account, with case upon a bailment, a warranty, and bills of exchange, and competed with equity in the case of the essentially equitable quasi contracts growing out of the principle of unjust enrichment.' " Lord Dunedin says at pages 431 to 433*:—"The familiar case is the paying of money by A to B under the mistaken impression in fact that a debt was due, when in truth there was no debt due. It was to fit cases of this sort that the common law evolved the action for money had and received. I think one cannot help feeling that this action was truly the putting of an equitable doctrine under a legal form. I am using the word equitable in a non-technical sense, for I am not suggesting for a moment that the action was borrowed from technical equity. My noble and learned friend Lord Sumner in his opinion, which I have had the advantage of seeing, has conclusively shown that it was not. But being a legal form, it does not admit in spite of Lord Mansfield's dictum that such an action was very beneficial and to be encouraged, of being stretched beyond its capacity..... My Lords, I confess that for a person not bred to the common law to express an opinion as to the true meaning and extent of common law actions is to handle periculosæ plenum opus alexi." Lord Sumner, says at pages 453 to 456*: "The action for money had and received cannot now be extended beyond the principles illustrated in the decided cases, and although it is hard to reduce to one common formula the conditions under which the law will imply a promise to repay money received to the plaintiff's use, I think it is clear that no authority extends them far enough to help the appellants now." Then the noble Lord referred to the argument invoking Lord Mansfield's authority that: "Whenever it is ex æquo et bono for A to repay money which he has received from B and would be against conscience for A to keep it, then B has an equity to have A decreed to repay it," and proceeded: "My Lords, I cannot but think that Lord Mansfield's language has been completely misunderstood..... Even the decision in Moses v. Macferlan (23), which has since been dissented from, for some time unsettled the law [see Smith's Leading Cases, Notes to Marriot v. Hampton (24)], and this last-mentioned case is one which illustrates the proposition that money is not thus recoverable in all cases where it is unconscientious for the defendant to retain it, for no one could doubt that Hampton's retention of the money in that case was very like sharp practice... With whatever complacency the Court of King's Bench might regard the views expressed in Moses v. Macferlan (23), protests were very early made against it in the Common Pleas [Johnson v. Johnson (25)], and in Miller v. Atlee (26) Pollock, C. B., bluntly (23) (1780) 2 Burr. 1005; 97 E. R. 676. (24) (1797) 7 T. R. 269; 2 Sm. L. C. (11th Ed.) 421; 12th Ed. 403; 2 Esp. 546; 101 E. SUKHDEI KUMRI v. MAHAMAYA PRASAD.

declared the notion that the action for money had and received was an equitable action to be 'exploded' and Parke, B., sitting by him, did not say him nay. This episode is reported only in 13 Jurist, but it smacks of truth..... There is now no ground for suggesting as a recognizable 'equity' the right to recover money in personam merely because it would be the right and fair thing that it should be refunded to the payer." I have quoted thus at a length, which may be called wearisome, to show how dangerous it would be for an Indian Judge like myself to deal in my own language with the nature, scope and extent of the action for money had and received or to classify accurately and exhaustively the circumstances which would entitle a person to bring an action for money had and received against another, especially when Latin phrases like ex æquo et bono have to be freely used by Judges and Counsel to explain themselves fully. Lord Sumner at page 458* says: "Of equitable principles I hesitate to speak confidently." Lord Dunedin has in a passage which I have already quoted expressed himself even still more diffidently as "a person not bred to the common law" about his ability to express an opinion as to the true meaning and extent of common law actions. In Sankunni Menon v. Govindan Menon (3) Benson, J., and myself did quote Blackstone to indicate the wide nature of the common law action for money had and received in the olden days. But the scope of that action ought not to be extended beyond what would be covered by the principles governing the numerous decisions which have laid down what kinds of actions do come within it and what kinds of actions do not. In the case in Sankunni Menon v. Govindan Menon (3) the defendant who received the money knew from the beginning that the money belonged to his Tarwad and not to himself and the person who paid it did not know it. While privity of contract between the parties is, of course, not necessary to sustain such an action, I think there must be what might be called some privity of a legally recognizable nature, such as some knowledge of particular facts in the man who received the money, and some mistake or ignorance of fact on the part of the man who paid the money, or some relation of trust and confidence between the person who received the money and the person claiming the money or a portion thereof, on which the Court could fasten as creating the relation of principal and agent (though by fiction) between the plaintiff and the defendant. I shall try to illustrate what I mean by a simple example, B owes money to A. A dies. There is a dispute between C and D, each claiming to be the sole heir of A. B pays the money to C. Can D sustain an action for money had and received against C even if he establishes against C that he is the rightful heir and not C? I am clearly of opinion that he could not do so, his only remedy being against the debtor B. In the present case, it is not shown that when the partnership-debtor paid money to the 1st defendant, the 1st defendant knew that he had not a right to the whole of the money paid to him and it is also not shown that he was ever in a position of trust or confidence towards the 4th defendant and it is also not shown that the debtor had any fraudulent motive in paying the whole money to 1st defendant. A co-sharer may, by a stretch of language, be treated as standing in a position of confidence towards his co-sharers, but a person who ignorantly purchases from a co-sharer the whole of the claim of all the co-sharers cannot be said to be in such a position. I, therefore, agree that the plaintiff has no cause of action against the 1st defendant and I concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2 (3)

SUKHDEI KUMRI v. MAHAMAYA PRASAD.

—Execution of decree—Payment out of Court not certified, effect of.

Where a judgment-debtor makes a payment out of Court to the decree-holder towards the satisfaction of the decree, he is nevertheless not entitled in execution proceedings under the decree to claim the benefit of the payment unless he has complied with the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, sub-rule (3) of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 767, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga.

FACTS.—The appellant obtained a decree for Rs. 2,000 against the respondents on the 2nd of December 1910. On the 24th of February she made an application for execution of the decree, in which she admitted payment of Rs. 750. The judgment-debtors entered an objection that the entire sum had been paid up, except Rs. 333-5-3 which they deposited in Court. They produced several receipts to prove the payments. The Sub-Judge believed the receipts and held that the decree had been paid up. The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Parmeshwar Dayal (with him Messrs. Jagannath Prasad and L. K. Jha), for the Appellant, contended that the payments alleged to have been made by the judgment-debtors but not admitted by the appellant were not certified payments in accordance with the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. The execution Court was not competent to recognize such payments under the provisions of sub-rule 3 of rule 2 of Order XXI. He relied on Ram Doyal Banerjee v. Ram Hari Pal (1), Ana Muna Veena Rana Veerappa Chettiar v. Ponnayya (2), Janki Prashad v. Thakur Das (3), Gokul Chand v. Brika (4) and Bhajan Lal v. Cheda Lal (5).

Mr. Sudhansu Kumar Mitra (for Mr. Saroshi Charan Mitra), for the Respondents, contended that the payments had been held to be genuine payments and therefore substantial justice had been done in the case. The High Court should not interfere in such cases.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, O. J.—This is an application for execution of a decree. The appellant Musammam Sukhdei Kumri obtained a decree for a sum of Rs. 2,000 in respect of her maintenance and cost of certain ornaments against the respondents, who were members of the same family. On the 24th February 1917, she took out execution proceedings under the decree. A question then arose between the parties as to whether any and if so what part of the decree had already been satisfied. The appellant, plaintiff in the suit, admitted payment of the sum of Rs. 1,083-10-3, including two sums of Rs. 333-5-3 and Rs. 83 10 6 paid or deposited in Court pending the execution proceedings. The amount which the appellant now claims to be due is a sum of Rs. 916 and odd.

The figures are set out in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge now appealed against, and a question arose before him on behalf of the respondents, whether certain sums which are there referred to had been paid out of Court by the respondents to the appellant in satisfaction of the decree, leaving a balance due of about Rs. 100 only.

Now the learned Subordinate Judge, after apparently hearing the evidence on this point of both the parties, came to the conclusion that the sums had, in fact, been paid and deducted them from the amount claimed; but the learned Subordinate Judge has unfortunately omitted to take into consideration the effect of Order XXI, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, which provides: "Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree and the Court shall record the same accordingly." It is further provided if the decree-holder fails to do so, "The judgment-debtor also may inform the Court of such payment or adjustment and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause on a date to be fixed by the Court why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified." And then follows sub-clause (3), which says "A payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid shall not be recognised by any Court executing the decree."

Now what happened in the present case was that the amount in dispute was according to the respondents paid to the appellant out of Court and the Subordinate Judge so found although the appellant denied it. If the sums were in fact paid by the respondents, judgment-debtors, as the Subordinate Judge finds they were, they nevertheless are not entitled in the execution proceedings under the decree to claim the benefit of the payment unless they have complied with the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, sub-rule (3). It may possibly be a hardship in such cases if in fact the money has been paid or the decree otherwise adjusted. We have no doubt, however, that the rule was introduced with the very object of avoiding in execution proceedings disputes between the parties and frequently long enquiries as to what sums had or had not been paid out of Court in satisfaction of the decree. Unfortunately the Subordinate Judge has not adopted the right procedure as laid down in Order XXI, rule 2.

We are, therefore, of opinion that this appeal ought to be allowed and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge set aside and judgment should be entered for the appellant for the principal sum of Rs. 916-5-9. The interest falling due in respect of that amount, if any, should be calculated by the Subordinate Judge and added to the amount decreed. The appellant is entitled to costs of this appeal.

The rule of the Mitakshara which lays down that a boy whose mother the adoptive father could not have married in her maiden state cannot be lawfully adopted, is not recognised by Kashmiri Brahmans so that the adoption of a daughter's son is permissible according to the custom prevailing among them. [p. 769, col. 2.]

Where the custom of a community is in question and it is clear that direct evidence cannot be obtained of instances of such custom, which occurred before the memory of man, persons, having special means of knowledge, are, in view of the provisions of sections 32 (5) and 49 of the Evidence Act, permitted to testify to their existence from such knowledge as they might possess of what has been practised in their community or from what they might have heard from persons, having special means of knowledge of what was practised before. JUDGMENT—The parties to the suits out of which these appeals have arisen are Kashmiri Brahmans, settled in Oudh. The exact time when the family to which the parties belong migrated to these provinces is not ascertainable, but it is not disputed that during the period of Moghul rule, which extended to Kashmir, numerous families of Kashmiri Brahmans came and settled in the Punjab and in these provinces and elsewhere for the purpose of business or employment and that during the period of Pathan dominion, following the disruption of the Moghul empire, the atrocities committed by the Pathan rulers compelled a still larger number to leave their country and settle elsewhere to escape persecution and forcible conversion at their hands.

The number of Kashmiri Brahmans

settled in British India does not, according to the evidence, exceed 5,000 souls, males, females and children all told. They comprise about 450 families. The use of the Kashmiri language is little known among them except to the elderly few, but they have preserved their religious and social practices and customs intact, and many of the ceremonies which they observe on the occasions of marriages, deaths and adoption are still recognised or known by their Kashmiri names.

The parties admit that they are governed by the Mitakshara Law, except in so far as it is inconsistent with or has been modified by the customs prevailing among them. According to the evidence of Pandit Bishambhar Nath (P. W. No. 27), the Mitakshara is little known in Kashmir and Apararka is more generally followed there. Dr. Buhler says that he found the Apararka in common use there (Dr. Jolly's Tagore Law Lectures, 1853, page 24). Apararka is a commentary on the Institutes of Yagnyavalkya by Aparaditya, the King of the Konkan, in Southern India. The Mitakshara was written by an ascetic who was at one time attached to the Court of King Vikram of Kalyan in Southern India and is similarly a commentary on the Institutes of Yagnyavalkya. On the question of adoption there is little or no difference between the Mitakshara and the Apararka.

The dispute between the parties arises out of the adoption of Rajendra Narain by his maternal grandfather Ram Narain. Bishun Narain, the head of the family to which the parties claim to belong, died in 1867, leaving four sons, Raj Narain, Ram Narain, Bakht Narain and Suraj Narain. He left considerable property, to which additions were made after his death. Raj Narain and Ram Narain were practising Pleaders. Bakht Narain was a member of the Provincial Judicial Service of Oudh. Suraj Narain was employed in the Amethi Estate. They lived jointly and carried on some joint family business at Lucknow. Raj Narain, the eldest of the four brothers, died in 1890, leaving a widow and a daughter. Ram Narain then became the head and manager of the family. He had a daughter Musammat Prano, who was married to Ratan Lal defendant No. 8. On or about the 1st May 1895 Ram Narain adopted Rajendra Narain, one of the sons of Musammat Prano, as his son. He died on the 19th October 1900 while living jointly with his brothers and their sons. On his death Bakht Narain got his name entered in the Revenue papers in the place of Ram Narain as the head of the joint family. Rajendra Narain was a minor at the time. At the end of 1903 Suraj Narain applied to the Revenue Authorities to have his and Rajendra Narain's names entered in respect of two-thirds of the family property but was unsuccessful.

Suraj Narain and his son then filed a suit against Bakht Narain and his sons for the partition of a half share of the joint family property, alleging that they had separated in October 1901. They ignored the right of Rajendra Narain as an adopted son of Ram Narain and did not make him a party to the suit. The suit was decreed by the Additional Judge of Hardoi on the 27th August 1908 and Suraj Narain was awarded mesne profits with effect from October 1901. The latter portion of the decree was subsequently varied on appeal by this Court on the ground that the family had continued to be joint till the date of the suit, and a decree directing accounts to be taken from the date of the suit was substituted. That decision was confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council on the 10th December 1912 [Suraj Narain v. Iqbal Narain (1)].

On the 10th April 1911 Rajendra Narain filed the present suit, which has given rise to First Appeals Nos. 10 and 15 of 1916, claiming separate possession by partition of a one-third share of the family properties on the strength of his adoption by Ram Narain and exclusive possession of certain other properties which, he alleged, had been acquired by Ram Narain out of his personal income, with mesne profits from the date of his death. He asserted that he attained majority on the 20th August 1908, that is, within three years of the institution of the suit and that this adoption by Ram Narain was valid according to the custom prevailing among the Kashmiri Brahmans. The defendants denied the existence of such a custom and pleaded, inter alia, that the claim of the plaintiff was barred by limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was born on the 30th August 1890 and that his claim was within time from the date of his attaining majority. He also found that the custom set up by the plaintiff was established and that his adoption was valid in law. He decreed the claim accordingly for partition of a one-third share out of such properties as were proved to have belonged to the joint family and for mesne profits from the date the plaintiff was excluded. He held that Bakht Narain who succeeded Ram Narain as the manager of the family, and after his death his sons and grandsons, defendants Nos. 3 to 7, who have been in possession of the family property, were liable to account for the profits of the plaintiff's share.

On the 23rd October 1912 the sons and grandsons of Bakht Narain filed a cross-claim, which has given rise to First Appeal No. 11 of 1916, seeking to eject Rajendra Narain and his natural father, Ratan Lal, from a house situated in Hardoi, which was in the occupation of Ram Narain at the time of his death and has continued in the occupation of his son-in-law, Ratan Lal, and his adopted son, Rajendra Narain, since. Rajendra Narain pleaded that the house in question was built by Ram Narain and belonged to him as his adopted son and that his natural father, Ratan Lal, was living in it on his behalf. The defence of Ratan Lal was the same. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the house formed part of the joint family estate, and holding that Rajendra Narain was the lawfully adopted son of Ram Narain he allowed him and Ratan Lal to continue to live in the house till a partition was effected.

The first point for consideration in these appeals is whether the adoption of the son of a daughter is permissible according to the custom prevailing among the Kashmiri Brahmans. The ordinary rule, as recognised by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (2), is that the adoption of a daughter's son by a Hindu of any of the three regenerate classes, Brahman, Kshatriya and Vaishya, is repugnant to the Hindu Law and is illegal and void; but as pointed out by Sir Arthur Wilson in Rup Narain v. Gopal Devi (3), the above general rule may be varied by a family custom and often is so varied. In the Punjab adoptions of a daughter's son are not uncommon (Tupper's Customary Law of the Punjab, Volume II, page 111, and Volume III, page 78, and Sarkar's Law of Adoption, Second Edition, page 341). In the Bombay Presidency they are similarly common (Mandlik's Vyavahara Mayukha, Volume II, page 478) and according to Mayne they are not uncommon elsewhere too (Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 174). In the Madras Presidency the existence of a custom recognising such an adoption among Nambudri Brahmans has been expressly upheld [Eranjoli Illath Vishnu Nambudri v. Eranjoli Illath Krishnan Nambudri (4), Vayidinada v. Appu (5) and Appayya Bhattar v. Vengu Bhatta (6).]

Among Kashmiri Brahmans the adoption of a daughter's son is similarly common and recognised by the community as valid. Some of the leading members of the community, residing in these provinces and the Punjab and Kashmir, have given evidence that the restriction regarding the possibility of a valid marriage between the adoptive father and the natural mother of the boy to be adopted before she was married is not recognised among them. The Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru (P. W. No. 20), one of the leading Advocates of the Allahabad High Court, for instance, deposes: "Among Kashmiri Pandits daughter's sons and sister's sons are adopted as sons. That is my belief and conviction. I came to know of it among Kashmiri friends and relations. I have never heard of such an adoption being ever challenged in our community. I believe in it as a custom. I have heard and known such adoptions all along." On one occasion, he adds, when he was preparing for the law examination he heard his mother, since deceased, talking to a Kashmiri lady visitor about the adoption of a daughter's son which had taken place at or about that time and on his saying that such an adoption was contrary to the Hindu Law, his mother remarked that whatever might have been the law such was the usage and a number of instances of such adoptions were given by her. The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (P. W. No. 25), another prominent Advocate of the Allahabad High Court, similarly says: "In our community there exists no restriction against the adoption of a person whose mother is prohibited in marriage to the person adopting. Daughter's son, sister's son and younger brothers are adopted among us as sons. It is an old custom so far as I have heard. I heard from my grandfather who died in 1906 at the ripe age of 78 or 79 and from some other elders at Delhi and in Kashmir. So far as my informants are concerned, they are all dead." The Hon'ble Pandit Jagat Narain (P. W. No. 5), one of the leading Vakils of this Court, gives evidence to the same effect and says that the adoption of a daughter's son was considered valid by the community according to the custom prevailing among the Kashmiri Brahmans.

The Hon'ble Pandit Bishun Narain Dar (P. W. No. 10), a Barrister-at-law and a prominent member of the Kashmiri Brahman community, states: "In our community we do adopt persons whose mother is prohibited in marriage to the person adopting; a sister's son, a daughter's son and a brother are adopted by us according to custom. I have heard of this usage and seen it observed in our Kashmiri community. I heard of this usage from my father, uncles and mother; of these my mother alone is alive." Pandit Narender Nath, Deputy Commissioner of Multan (P. W. No. 13), also says: "Daughter's sons are adopted in our community. Our community is not restricted by the rule which prohibits the adoption of a boy, whose mother, if virgin, could not have been married by the adopter. I can cite instances which took place more than 40 years ago." Similar evidence is given by Pandit Shiam Sunder Nath, Taluqdar of Bethar, District Unao (P. W. No. 46), Pandit Sheo Nath Chak, retired Deputy Collector (P. W. No. 23), and Rai Bahadur Pandit Prem Nath (P. W. No. 14), who retired as Examiner of Accounts, Punjab, in 1902.

Pandit Tribhuwan Nath Sheopori, Additional Judge of the Small Cause Court, Lucknow (P. W. No. 38), deposes: "There is no such restriction in our community against adoption as is asserted or claimed by the Benares School of the Hindu Law. The adoption of a sister's or daughter's son is recognised among the Kashmiri Pandits." He is supported by Pandit Suraj Narain (P. W. No. 1), a retired Subordinate Judge, and Pandit Suraj Narain Bahadur (P. W. No. 7), another Subordinate Judge now posted at Partabgarh. Pandit Radhe Nath (P. W. No. 9), a Kashmiri Brahman belonging to a respectable family residing at Lahore, testifies to his having heard of the adoptions of daughter's sons at several places and to their being treated as the sons of their adoptive fathers by the community. He gives three instances of such adoptions. Pandit Shiam Manohar Nath Sharga (P. W. No. 23), Munsif of Bara Banki, Pandit Jai Narain (P. W. No. 6), a retired Engineer and an Honorary Magistrate and a Municipal Commissioner of Meerut, and Pandit Iqbal Narain Masaldan (P. W. No. 11), a Barrister-at-law, practising at Lucknow, since deceased, similarly testify to the existence of a custom recognising the adoption of a daughter's son among Kashmiri Brahmans. Rai Brij Narain Gurtu (P. W. No. 34), a Vakil of the High Court at Allahabad and a Zemindar paying land revenue exceeding Rs. 8,000 per annum, Pandit Shanker Nath (P. W. No. 22), a Pleader of Hardoi, Pandit Jagmohan Nath Raina (P. W. No. 25, examined on commission), a Deputy Collector, and Pandit Sahab Ram (P. W. No. 18), a retired Mir Munshi, are equally positive as to the existence of the said custom. Pandit Pran Nath Namju (P. W. No. 44) says that the custom recognising the adoption of a daughter's son or of a sister's son was old and that he came to know of it from Pandit Baijnath Kunzru, who was the husband of his sister and the elder brother of the late Pandit Ajudhia Nath of Allahabad.

Three ladies, Musammatt Mohan Rani (P. W. No. 21) aged 40 years, Musammatt

IKBAL NARAIN v. RAJENDRA NARAIN.

Maharaj Rani (P. W. No. 36) aged 55 years and Musammat Bhavneshwari (P. W. No. 24) aged 83 years (all examined on commission) support the existence of the said custom from what they heard from their elders and from the instances which occurred in their community.

The evidence of Pandit Hargopal Kaul (P. W. No. 7), a Pleader of Srinagar, paying a land-revenue of Rs. 7,500 per annum, who is admitted by one of the defendants' own witnesses (D. W. No. 26) to be a leading member of the Kashmiri Brahman community of Srinagar, and Pandit Vid Lal Dar (P. W. No. 8), a Jagirdar of Kashmir and the representative of another leading family of Kashmir, known as the family of King Makers (vide P. W. No. 17), presumably on account of one of his ancestors having brought the Sikhs from the Punjab to eject the Pathan rulers, and that of the other witnesses examined in Kashmir similarly establishes that the validity of the adoption of a daughter's son is recognised in Kashmir and that a custom to that effect prevails among the Kashmiri Brahmans there.

The defendants' own witnesses have, moreover, admitted that the restrictions introduced into the Mitakshara Law by the Dattaka Mimansa and Dattaka Chandrika in regard to the invalidity of the adoption of a person, whose mother the adoptive father could not have lawfully married in her maiden state, is not recognised by the Kashmiri Brahmans either in Kashmir or in the provinces to which they migrated in search of livelihood or for other cause. Kesho Bayu Ganzoo (D. W. No. 3), for instance, admits that a brother can be taken in adoption and that his adoption would be valid according to the custom prevailing there. Durga Shankar (D. W. No. 2), who was examined in Court, goes further and says that in this community, that is, in the community of Kashmiri Brahmans, there is no prohibition against the adoption of a daughter's or a sister's son. Pandit Kamta Prasad (D. W. No. 23), who is a Judicial Officer at Gwalior, similarly admits that among the Kashmiri Brahmans the adoption of a daughter's son or of a younger brother is sanctioned by custom and that no objection is taken thereto by the caste. Pandit Janki Nath Kaul (D. W. No. 2), who was examined on commission at Delhi, acknowledges that among Kashmiri Brahmans every boy who is full born can be adopted without any regard to his Gotra, though he subsequently qualifies his statement by saying that if there is anything in the Institutes of Manu prohibiting the adoption of a daughter's son, he would not take such an adoption as valid. It may be noted, however, that the Institutes of Manu contain no such prohibition and that the Institutes of Yagnyavalkya, which are treated as of paramount authority, commentators like the authors of the Mitakshara and the Apararka, also do not refer to it. It is significant that the Mitakshara and the Apararka, the latter being a work supposed to be of great authority in Kashmir, similarly nowhere state that a boy whose mother the adoptive father could not have married in her maiden state cannot be lawfully adopted. The restriction is mentioned by the Dattaka Mimansa and the Dattaka Chandrika and some other minor works. The Dattaka Mimansa was written by Nanda Pandit of Benares in the 17th century. Nanda Pandit takes pains in the Dattaka Mimansa to point out that a daughter can be validly adopted, a practice which is no longer recognised or sanctioned by law except perhaps by force of custom, where it may exist, among the persons following the profession of dancing or prostitution. His views in regard to the impropriety of adopting an only son, or a wife's brother's son, or a son more than five years old, or whose tonsure has been performed, have not been treated as binding [Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma (7), Puttu Lal v. Parbati Kunwar (8) and Ganga Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh (9)]. The appointment of a daughter by a previous compact with the proposed bridegroom with the object of taking the first male child, which may be born of her, is expressly sanctioned by Manu, Yagnyavalkya and all text-writers and commentators, Dattaka Mimansa and Dattaka Chandrika included; and if the son born of an appointed daughter can be the son of the person who stood in the relation of a maternal grandfather to him, the adoption of a daughter's son in the Dattaka form cannot offend either the ideas or notions of the people or the spirit which underlies the rules which sanction such affiliations. The Dattaka Chandrika starts by saying that the author there propounds what he had left unwritten in the "Chandrika." It was supposed that the Chandrika therein referred to was the Smiriti Chandrika of Devanda Bhatt, who belonged to the southern country, but as the last verse of the Dattaka Chandrika shows, it purports to have been written by Kuvera and not by Devanda Bhatt. If Kuvera had written a treatise called the "Chandrika", dealing with questions of inheritance or succession, it is surprising that he should have left unwritten there what he now seeks to propound in the Dattaka Chandrika. Writing as far back as in 1855, Pandit Ishwar Chandra Vidya Sagar stated that the Dattaka Chandrika was written under the nom de plume of Kuvera by a person named Raghumani Vidya Bhushan (Vidyasagar's Disquisitions on Widow Re-marriage, page 182), and Pandit Bharat Chandra Shiromani, who published a Bengali edition of the Dattaka Mimansa and Dattaka Chandrika, also suggested the same. In a footnote to the preface to the Vyavastha Chandrika, Babu Shyama Charan Sircar, a scholar of considerable repute, writing in 1878 observed that many of the Pandits of Bengal attributed the Dattaka Chandrika to the late Raghumani Vidya Bhushan, the spiritual adviser of the Raja of Nadia and a distinguished Pandit, who flourished in the latter part of Jagannath's life and is said to have assisted Colebrooke in the preparation of his translation of Dayabhaga and Mitakshara (Vyavastha Chandrika, preface, page 21). In fact it has been suggested that the book was forged in order to support a claim which was pending at that time, though no occasion arose for its use, as the case was compromised (Shastri's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, page 136, Sarkar's Hindu Law of Adoption, Second Edition, page 124). Dr. Jolly, another writer on Hindu Law, also questions the value of the book as a general authority (Dr. Jolly's Tagore Law Lectures, 1883, page 22).

They were the earliest books dealing exclusively with the subject of adoption to be translated into English; and as suggested by Mayne, a statement by Macnaghten that they were equally respected all over India brought them into easy prominence (Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, page 30). In certain decisions referred to in Bhagwan Singh v. Bhagwan Singh (2), their Lordships of the Privy Council treated them as works of high authority; but in Sri Balusu Gurulingaswami v. Sri Balusu Ramalakshamma (7) Lord Hobhouse pointed out that the Dattaka Mimansa was written during Muhammadan rule and could not be the work of a lawgiver or judge, while the date of the Dattaka Chandrika was uncertain and it stood only on the footing of a work of a learned man. In Puttu Lal v. Parbati Kunwar (8) a caution was expressed against accepting the glosses of Nanda Pandit, where they deviated from or added to the Smiritis.

Whatever the value of these works may be in Bengal and these provinces as a part of the general law, there is nothing to show that their reputation had at any rate reached Kashmir, or that they were known or recognised as infallible guides in the administration of the law of adoption in that part of the country.

It is contended that the opinion of persons, belonging to the Kashmiri Brahman community, is by itself not entitled to any weight, unless it is corroborated by instances, showing a uniform course of practice, recognised by all the members of that community. Section 48 of the Indian Evidence Act provides that when the Court has to form an opinion as to the existence of any general custom, the opinions as to the existence of such custom of persons who would be likely to know of its existence, if it existed, are relevant. The explanation to that section shows that the expression "general custom" includes customs common to any considerable class of persons. Section 49 of the Act similarly provides that where the Court has to form an opinion as to the usages and tenets of any body of men or family, the opinions of persons, having special means of knowledge thereon, are relevant. An immemorial custom, says Manu, is transcendent law and clear proof of it outweighs the written text of the law. But direct evidence cannot be obtained of things which occurred before the memory of man, and persons having special means of knowledge are, therefore, permitted to testify to their existence from such knowledge as they might possess of what has been practised in their community or from what they might have heard from persons having special means of knowledge of what was practised before. In Lekraj Kuar v. Mahpal Singh (10) their Lordships of the Privy Council, referring to certain entries in a wajib ul-arz, stated that even if those entries were not to be treated as records describing the custom, they could at all events be treated as recording the opinions of persons likely to know it, and as such the record of those opinions could be admitted in evidence. In Garuradhwaja Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (11) evidence based on a tradition about a custom of the family was admitted under section 32, clause (5), and section 49 of the Indian Evidence Act, on the ground that the tradition was derived from persons who were dead and that the persons who gave the evidence had special means of knowledge about them.

IQBAL NARAIN v. RAJENDRA NARAIN.

The witnesses adduced by the plaintiff have, moreover, cited in support of their statements instances of the adoption of a son of a sister or of a daughter which took place in their community.

[After discussing certain instances, the learned Additional Judicial Commissioners proceeded as under:—Ed.]

The adoptions proved in the case cover a period of nearly one hundred years. They were obviously made with due publicity, for they are well known to the members of the brotherhood. In some cases the property affected was of considerable value. In the case of Iqbal Kishen (19) 5 C. 744 at p. 754; 6 C. L. R. 593; 7 I. A. 63; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 93; 3 Suth. P. C. who was adopted by Daya Nidhan, the property affected was worth five or six lacs (D. W. No. 5, examined in Court). In the case of Kunwar Kishen adopted by Sri Kishen, the property involved was similarly worth over two lacs (P. W. No. 28, examined by commission). Kameshwar Nath (P. W. No. 36) lost by adoption a share in the property left by his natural father, which was worth over Rs. 10,000, his natural brother, Raj Kishen, getting the whole of it (Exhibit Y-2). The property inherited by Gauri Prasad from Shiam Prasad by virtue of his adoption has already been referred to. Shiam Narain inherited property worth Rs. 9,000 by virtue of his adoption by his maternal uncle, Ram Narain, to the exclusion of the brother and nephew of the latter (P. W. No. 3, examined by commission). Kirpa Shanker similarly inherited the property of his maternal uncle, Daya Shanker, by reason of his adoption to the exclusion of his natural brother (P. W. No. 50, examined in Court). It is reasonable to assume that these adoptions would have been challenged, had there been no such custom.

The evidence produced by the defendants is of no value and the learned Counsel who appears for them has not chosen to refer to it. What he has strenuously urged is that in most of the instances cited, the existence of collaterals living jointly, or persons who could have legitimately challenged the adoptions, was not established, that where the adoptions were made by widows, it was not proved that they had any authority to adopt from their husbands, and that some of the so-called adoptions were cases of nomination merely for the performance of funeral ceremonies. In many instances, however, there were more daughters than one and several daughters' sons besides the one adopted. The evidence of the defendants' own witness Madhu Sudan Shastri (D. W. No. 23) shows that the nomination for the performance of funeral ceremonies is more or less a euphemism for adoption, for it carries with it a right to succeed. It appears from the evidence of Janki Nath Ganzu (P. W. No. 1), Janki Prasad Sharga (P. W. No. 15) and Brij Mohan Nath (D. W. No. 22) that a widow is allowed by custom to make an adoption without the permission of her husband. In fact as the Hon'ble Pandit Moti Lal Nehru (P. W. No. 20) explains, an adoption does not depend among the Kashmiri Brahmans upon the adoptive father having property. On the contrary adoptions are more frequent in the case of widows, particularly if they are young, when the husband leaves no property at all, and the widow herself is dependent for her maintenance upon her relations. The validity of adoptions made by widows was, moreover, never questioned during the hearing of the suit in the Court below. On the other hand, when questions were put to elicit whether such a custom existed, objections were taken on behalf of the defendants to their relevancy. In Maharaj Narain v. Banaji (12) it was held that the Kashmiri Pandits of the Delhi district were governed in matters of adoption by custom and not by the principles of the Mitakshara form of the Hindu Law and that amongst them a widow had full power, after the death of her husband and without his express permission in that behalf, to adopt any boy whom she might select, provided he was of the same tribe. The evidence adduced in that case in support of the custom included witnesses who belonged to the United Provinces.

Dealing with the customs and ceremonies of the Kashmiri Hindus, Mr. Walter Lawrence, at one time the Settlement Officer of Kashmir and Jammu State, writes: "Before concluding this account of the ceremonies of the Kashmiri Hindus, it is necessary to allude to their customs of adoption and re marriage. Every Hindu can adopt a son either from his own Gotra or from another Gotra, and the only restriction on adoption is that the adopted son must not have been invested with the sacred thread." (The Valley of Kashmir by Lawrence, page 266.)

In regard to the change of the family surname, the practice appears to be somewhat loose. But except where a person is brought up from infancy for love or affection, the change of the family surname generally corroborates or implies an adoption.

The witnesses are generally agreed that the performance of ceremonies is not essential to validate an adoption. Some witnesses state that the Datta Home or the Jatkarm or Namkarm ceremonies are usually performed, while others say that sweets are distributed and some worship is done by the priest. But it appears from the evidence of the Hon'ble Pandit Jagat Narain (P. W. No. 5) that the practice is not uniform and that beyond giving and taking no rituals are actually necessary. Pandit Ram Nath Shastri (P. W. No. 8), Pandit Iqbal Narain Masaldan (P. W. No. 11), Sahab Ram (P. W. No. 18) and Musammatt Lalta Shuri (P. W. No. 19) say the same. So far as the adoption of plaintiff is concerned, it was accompanied by the usual ritual and formalities (P. W. No. 8). On hearing of it Pandit Bakht Narain, the father of defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 and the grandfather of defendants Nos. 6 and 7, is said to have observed that by doing so Ram Narain had sown that day the seed of poison in his family. That seed has apparently borne fruit in the shape of the litigation in which the property of Ram Narain is now involved. It is noticeable, however, that in the mutation proceedings which took place consequent on the death of Ram Narain, Bakht Narain did not raise any question as to the validity of the said adoption (Exhibits 346 to 402, 520 and 586) and in regard to the license for arms kept by the deceased, he allowed the same to be renewed in favour of the plaintiff (Exhibits 579, 580, 582, 589 and 590).

As regards Pandit Suraj Narain, it is sufficient to refer to his application of the 8th December 1900 to the officer-in-charge of Tahsil Hardoi (Exhibit 588), opposing the application of Pandit Bakht Narain to the entry of his name as the manager of the family and entreating that the names of each of the three branches, including that of the present plaintiff, whom he described as the adopted son of Pandit Ram Narain, should be entered in the revenue papers. Similar admissions were made by him in other applications (Exhibits 579, 580, 590 and 616). There was no lack of similar recognition by defendant No. 3, the eldest son of Pandit Bakht Narain. The Court below has referred to documents, in which the status of the plaintiff as the adopted son of Ram Narain was admitted by each of the above persons.

No question of estoppel can, however, arise, as the position of the plaintiff was in no way influenced or altered by the said admissions. They are all the same valuable as indicating that had no such custom, as is set up by the plaintiff, been in vogue, Pandit Bakht Narain, who was a Judicial Officer of considerable standing, and his eldest son, who is a Pleader, would have been the last persons to refrain from challenging the validity of the adoption forthwith.

The validity of the adoption was for the first time questioned in September 1903 (Exhibit 488). In June 1905 Suraj Narain and his son filed a suit for partition of the family property, ignoring the adoption. They alleged that they had separated in October 1901 and were excluded from the profits. The Court of first instance accepted their contention and allowed them a decree for partition of a half share and for mesne profits with effect from October 1901. On appeal this Court directed accounts of profits to be taken from the date of the suit, and that decision was confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In pursuance of that decree, Suraj Narain and his son got possession on the 9th March 1909. The plaintiff has been excluded from the profits from the time of the death of Pandit Ram Narain, and he is entitled to obtain possession of a one third share of the family property by a partition of the same with mesne profits for the period during which he has been and remains out of possession. He was a minor on the date of the death of Pandit Ram Narain and did not attain majority till the 30th August 1908.

The next question relates to certain properties which the Court below has included in the decree for partition. Following the decision in the suits filed by Suraj Narain and his son against Bakht Narain and his sons and grandsons and against Ratan Lal, the Court below has included certain properties, specified in its judgment, as belonging to the joint family and excluded others as belonging exclusively to Ratan Lal. The dispute in the appeal filed by the sons and grandsons of Bakht Narain, who died during the pendency of the suit for partition, is confined to 40 items of property, but no argument has been addressed to us except in regard to items Nos. 2 and 4 of List 5, relating to the properties said to have been held under mortgages. It is stated that the mortgages were redeemed in the lifetime of Ram Narain, but no evidence has been adduced on the point. If the mortgages were redeemed after the death of Ram Narain or during the pendency of the suit for partition brought by Suraj Narain and his son, the plaintiff shall get his share of the moneys which may have been realized, when those mortgages were redeemed.

In regard to the house in Hardoi, which is occupied by Rajendra Narain and his natural father, Ratan Lal, the finding of the Court below is that it forms part of the joint family property and that Rajendra Narain and his father cannot be ejected because the former holds a one-third share in the said property. As Rajendra Narain has been found to have been validly adopted by Ram Narain, the Court below rightly refused to eject him, leaving the other co-sharers their remedy by partition. Ratan Lal is living on behalf of Rajendra Narain and he too cannot be ejected.

The only other point remaining is that arising out of the appeal filed by Suraj Narain and his son, claiming that Rajendra Narain should be asked to make good out of his share the value of the properties which, by reason of the misconduct of Ram Narain, his adoptive father, have now gone to Ratan Lal. There is nothing, however, to show that the property, given to Ratan Lal, belonged to the joint family or that it was purchased out of joint family funds; and as held in Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (13), Ratan Lal would be treated as the owner of the said properties, and no question of compensation, therefore, arises.

On behalf of Suraj Narain and his son, it is suggested that the extent of their liability for mesne profits should be specifically determined. Having been excluded from the enjoyment of the family property from the time of the death of Ram Narain, the plaintiff is entitled to recover mesne profits for such period as he has been out of possession from the person or persons in possession. Suraj Narain and his son have obtained a decree for a half share (13) 40 Ind. Cas. 988; 20 O. C. 211; 21 C. W. N. 1035; 2 P. L. W. 160; 33 M. L. J. 180; 15 A. L. J. 634; 19 Bom. L. R. 737; 22 M. L. T. 121; 26 O. L. J. 267; 6 L. W. 503; (1917) M. W. N. 477; 4 O. L. J. 762; 40 A. 159; 44 I. A. 201 (P. C.), of the profits for the period extending from the 20th June 1905 to the 9th March 1909. Out of the profits or share of the income which may be awarded to them, the plaintiff is entitled to recover one-third, leaving Suraj Narain and his son in the enjoyment of the remainder. Out of the profits for the period preceding the 20th June 1905 the plaintiff is not entitled to claim any profits from Suraj Narain and his son except to the extent, if any, they may be shown by defendants Nos. 3 to 7 to have realized in excess of their one-third share. In regard to the period subsequent to the 9th March 1909, Suraj Narain and his son will similarly be liable for one-third of the profits of the half share over which they have obtained possession. The balance of the plaintiff's entire share of the mesne profits from 19th October 1900 to the date on which he gets possession will be recoverable from defendants Nos. 3 to 7 and the estate of Pandit Bakht Narain deceased. After the death of Ram Narain, Bakht Narain was the manager of the family and his liability and that of his sons and grandsons, who succeeded him, is, of course, unquestionable. The exact extent of the liability can be determined by the Court below under Order XX, rule 12, of the Code of Civil Procedure, when the accounts are gone into in the manner above stated. No other pleas are pressed.

These appeals fail and are dismissed with costs.

Appeals dismissed.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 99 OF 1915.

May 9, 1918.

Hindu Law—Custom—Adoption—Ceremonies, performance of, whether necessary.

In the Punjab the performance of an elaborate ritual or religious ceremony is quite unnecessary to the validity of an adoption, but there is no authority for the view that mere treatment, unaccompanied by a formal giving and taking of the child to be adopted, satisfies the conditions necessary to a legal adoption. Adoption may be of two kinds, formal and informal, but it is only the adoption of the first description which is recognized by law and which confers upon the adoptee the status of son to his adoptive father. In other words, the law requires from the adoptor a manifestation of his unequivocal intention to clothe the adoptee with the legal status of his son. Such a manifestation of the adoptor's intention can be made either by a formal document combined with a proper treatment or by a formal giving and taking of the child, [p. 777, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, New Delhi, dated the 5th October 1914.

Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Appellant.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. S., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is one for possession of property left by Bishambar Nath who died on the 30th April 1912, and the plaintiff, his widow, is opposed by the deceased's sister's son, who alleges that he was adopted by the deceased. The parties are Sarsut Brahmans of Delhi, and the questions for decision were, firstly, the factum of the adoption, secondly, its validity. The Courts below found for the defendant, but the learned Additional Divisional Judge has given the plaintiff-appellant a certificate purporting to be a certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act.

On behalf of the defendant-respondent a preliminary objection is raised that this Court should not proceed upon the certificate, inasmuch as it does not set forth in so many words that the question of custom involved is of importance and that the evidence concerning it is conflicting or uncertain, so that there is substantial doubt regarding its validity or existence. The certificate was issued in 1914 and its language is not in strict conformity with the language of the section; but prior to the issue of instructions from this Court it was not the practice of the District Courts to issue certificates in a strictly correct form, but, having regard to the fact that the learned Additional Judge in his certificate states that it is a certificate issued under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act, we must take it that he had considered the conditions laid down by that section and had come to the conclusion that this was a fitting case for the grant of a certificate, and we accordingly overrule the objection,

RATTAN DEVI v. MUNO.

Now, the theory which has been accepted by the learned Additional Judge is that Bishambar Nath did not adopt the defendant Muno by any formal act, but that he took him into his house, performed his mundan and janeo ceremonies and had him married and that the pedigree table recited at the marriage was the pedigree table reciting the defendant as his son, and he has held that among the Sarsut Brahmins of Delhi such an adoption is valid by custom. He has based this conclusion upon statements by witnesses on either side that no ceremonies are essential to an adoption, but we doubt whether he has interpreted the evidence of the witnesses correctly. No doubt in the Punjab the performance of an elaborate ritual or religious ceremony is quite unnecessary to the validity of an adoption, but we know of no authority for the view that mere treatment, unaccompanied by a formal giving and taking of the child to be adopted, satisfies the conditions necessary to a legal adoption. Adoption may be of two kinds, formal and informal, but it is only the adoption of the first description which is recognized by law and which confers upon the adoptee the status of son to his adoptive father. In other words, the law requires from the adoptor a manifestation of his unequivocal intention to clothe the adoptee with the legal status of his son. Such a manifestation of the adoptor's intention can be made either by a formal document combined with a proper treatment or by a formal giving and taking of the child. Now, in the case before us there can be no doubt that Bishambar Nath regarded the defendant with affection and treated him with kindness, and the decision of the learned Additional Judge really amounts to this, that he holds the adoption proved by reason of the statements of two witnesses that at the marriage of the defendant a pedigree-table was recited in which Bishambar Nath was declared to be the father of the defendant. Now, the defendant was married in 1890 and the statements made by these two witnesses were made nearly 25 years later, so that the learned Additional Judge's decision is based upon very precarious evidence. Before this Court the learned Counsel for the defendant has supported the theory that it is impossible to say at what time before the defendant's marriage Bishambar Nath really adopted him, but he contends that the critical period was the marriage of the defendant when the adoption was completed by the recital in Sanskrit of the pedigree-table aforesaid. The defendant's natural father, however, who was not produced as a witness before the first Court and was especially called by the Appellate Court, tells quite a different story. He states that as soon as defendant was born Bishambar Nath claimed him as his son and then and there adopted him. Now, who should know better the details of the adoption than the natural father of the defendant? Yet the learned Additional Judge has brushed aside his evidence as merely incorrect. This seems to us to be an incorrect way of dealing with the evidence of such a witness. It is not sufficient to treat it as evidence which merely fails to support the case for the defendant, it is clear evidence against the case set forth by the defendant; and this appears to us to justify our considering the case on the merits even on second appeal.

On the facts as a whole, we are bound to say that we consider the conclusion of the learned Additional Judge to be against the weight of evidence; for while in favour of the adoption we have only oral evidence of a doubtful description, against it we have documentary evidence and the very significant conduct of the defendant. The defendant was the first born son of his natural father and it is highly improbable that the latter would have surrendered his first, and, at the time of the adoption as alleged by him, his only son to be adopted by Bishambar Nath. Again, at the time of the defendant's birth Bishambar Nath himself was only about 20—25 years of age whilst his wife was only 18—20 years old, so that at that time Bishambar Nath had every reason to expect offspring of his own. Indeed, at the time of the defendant's birth Bishambar Nath had a son of his own, who was born in April 1878 and died in August 1879. These considerations are quite sufficient of themselves to refute the story as told by the defendant's natural father. Again, much capital has been made of the fact that defendant was born in Bisham-

bar Nath's house; but defendant had two sisters both of whom were also born at Bishambar Nath's house. Again, defendant, when he married, resided in Gandi Gali and his children were born in Gandi Gali and when his son was born in 1899, the defendant was recorded in the Municipal Birth Register as the son of his natural father and not as the son of Bishambar Nath. If he had been adopted by Bishambar Nath, it is extraordinary that the fact was not generally known so that the suggested explanation is unsatisfactory, even if we admit that the report of birth may have been made by somebody other than defendant. It is also a matter for surprise that after his marriage he lived in Gandi Gali with his wife's relatives and gave up his abode in Niabans, where his alleged father Bishambar Nath resided. It is also in evidence that Bishambar Nath gave shelter not only to defendant's family but also to the son of his wife's sister, so that he seems to have extended his kindly treatment to more than one member of his family. Again, there is the post-card, dated 1894 which has been proved by Sukhdeo Das to be in the handwriting of Bishambar Nath, wherein Bishambar Nath writes that his daughter is with child and that if she be safely delivered the child will be his. Further, there is evidence that relations, who would have been in duty bound to present marriage gifts to the defendant had he been the adopted son of Bishambar Nath, did not present such gifts on that occasion. But the most damning piece of evidence against the adoption is the admitted fact that the defendant did not perform the kirya karm of Bishambar Nath. The excuse given is that he was unwell and in fear of infection; but the kirya karm is performed 11 days after the death and consequently the excuse is a worthless one. A still more striking circumstance is that on the death of Bishambar Nath the defendant did not shave his head. Finally the learned Additional Judge does not appear to have understood correctly the evidence of Sukhdeo Das. He says that Sukhdeo Das would not have directed the defendant to perform the kirya karm if he had not known that the defendant was the adopted son of Bishambar Nath. But Sukhdeo

Das' evidence appears to be that he told the defendant to perform this ceremony because he considered it unfitting that that burden should be thrown upon women.

All the foregoing facts tell very strongly against the theory that the defendant was, in fact, adopted by Bishambar Nath and it is most remarkable that the defendant, who is a man approaching 40 years of age, should not be able to produce one single document to show that he was ever recognized, or described himself, as the adopted son of Bishambar Nath. Finally, there is the oral evidence of some influential Yajmans of Bishambar Nath, who state that they never heard that defendant had been adopted by Bishambar Nath. On the facts we have no hesitation whatever in holding that the adoption of defendant by Bishambar Nath entirely fails of proof.

With regard to the custom, we note that though some names have been mentioned, no details have been given in regard, to any one single case to shew that the adoptions referred to conferred upon the adoptees a legal status as such and that, in fact, in the presence of other heirs they were by reason of that legal status able to inherit the property of their adoptive fathers. Even if it be conceded for the sake of argument that a daughter's son may be adopted among these Sarsut Brahmans of Delhi—and it is strange, if this is so, that no such adoptor or at any rate adoptee or his descendants have been called to give evidence—still we hold that there is no proof whatever that an adoption can be made without a formal giving and taking of the child or some other unequivocal manifestation of the adoptor's intention to confer upon the adoptee the legal status of son.

For these reasons we accept the appeal and decree for plaintiff with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Patna.

Mr. Khurshed Husain, for the Respondent.
JUDGMENT.

MULLICK, J.—This application for revision arises out of a dispute as to the possession of a portion of the property of Musammât Fasihân, a Muhammadan lady, who died on the 2nd July 1909, leaving her surviving two sons Muhammad Umar and Kalimuzaffar, and four daughters named Habiba, Fatima, Saira and Salima. Shortly before her death the lady had executed various deeds of gift in respect of certain properties in favour of Habiba and her two sons and on the 26th March 1912 Fatima and Saira brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Patna seeking to set aside these transactions and praying for the administration of the estate of the deceased. Four separate and somewhat similar suits were lodged by Salima but with these we are not concerned. The suit lodged by Fatima and Saira was transferred to the Court of the District Judge of Patna and numbered 6 of 1913. Salima's suits were numbered 9, 10, 11 and 12 of 1913.

In Suit No. 6 of 1913, the District Judge held that all the deeds of gift, except that in favour of Kalimuzaffar dated the 7th May 1909, were invalid and he directed a partition of all the lands of the estate with the exception of those covered by the said deed of gift.

There was then an appeal to this Court which was disposed of on the 18th July 1917* by Chamier, C. J., and Jawala Prasad, J. The learned Judges held that the deed of gift in favour of Kalimuzaffar was also invalid having been made without the consent of other heirs and contrary to the intention of the donor. The following passages from the judgment of Jawala Prasad, J., shew the reliefs which were granted to the plaintiffs:—

"All the deeds of gift including the Hiba of the 7th May must be set aside and declared invalid and inoperative. The deeds of gift, therefore, do not stand in the way of the heirs of Bibi Fasihân taking their shares under the Muhammadan Law. Her husband Sobhan inherited one fourth share of the lady's properties: her two sons Muhammad Umar and Kalimuzaffar each took 6/32 and each of her four daughters, Habiba, Fatima, Saira and Salima took 3/32 of the properties left by her. The heirs of such of the aforesaid persons as have died since the death of the lady have succeeded to the shares inherited by their predecessors. The properties left by Musammât Fasihân are, therefore, liable to be distributed among her heirs and heirs of her heirs, unaffected by dealings or transfers of interests in excess of their legal shares. As the donees and the heirs have been dealing with the properties since 1909 and the matter is complicated by the claims of creditors and others and thus the appeal gives each of the heirs a decree for his or her share in the ordinary way. The result of passing such a decree would be endless litigation. The proper course appears to be to direct a general administration of the property of Musammât Fasihan under the orders of the Court.

"I would dismiss with costs Appeals Nos. 73, and 219 arising out of Suit No. 6, Appeal No. 42 arising out of Suit No. 9 and Appeal No. 339 arising out of Suit No. 11. I would allow with costs Appeal No. 112 arising out of Suit No. 6 and Appeal No. 581 arising out of Suit No. 6 and set aside the deed of May 7th, 1909. I would declare that the heirs of the deceased are entitled to the shares specified above in the properties of Musammât Fasihan. I would remand Suits Nos. 6 and 9 of 1913 to the Court below, in order that in the presence of parties a preliminary decree may be passed with reference to Order XX, rule 13, ordering such accounts and enquiries to be taken and made and giving such directions as may appear to be necessary. It would probably be necessary to appoint a Receiver or Commissioner to carry out the administration. Arrangements must be made to pay off the debts of the deceased as soon as possible. Those heirs or representatives of heirs who have been in possession of parts of the property should be debited with what they or their heirs claiming under them have received."

In consequence of the above decree the District Judge on the 22nd September 1917 made a preliminary decree for administration and on the 25th January 1918, after notice upon the various mortgages and creditors, appointed a Receiver to carry out the same.

It appears that on the 4th February 1913, that is about a year after Saira and Fatima's suit was instituted, Muhammad Umar mortgaged the proprietary interest in certain Mauzas to Musammât Dulhin Sona Kuer. The consideration at first was fixed at Rs. 85,000, out of which Rs. 60,000 were to be paid by Musammât Sona Kuer to the creditors of Muhammad Umar and Rs. 25,000 to one Kesho Das, who held a mortgage from Musammât Fasihan of certain properties which included the properties covered by Muhammad Umar's mortgage. Kesho Das refused to take the amount tendered to him, and, therefore, for all intents and purposes the consideration of Umar's mortgage must be regarded to have been the sum of Rs. 60,000 which was due to be paid and was paid by Dulhin Sona Kuer to his creditors. Sona Kuer sued upon her mortgage and on the 25th February 1915 obtained a decree for Rs. 72,958.

On the 20th June 1916 she brought the mortgaged properties to sale and purchased them herself. It is alleged that a sum of Rs. 37,000 is still due to her under her decree.

In September 1916 she got possession of all the mortgaged properties except three, which had subsequently to her mortgage been sold for arrears of Government revenue and had passed out of the possession of the mortgagor. It is not disputed that her possession in consequence of her auction-purchase still continues.

When the Receiver was appointed, Sona Kuer refused to deliver up possession to him, and upon the matter being referred to the District Judge, he on the 22nd March 1918 decided in favour of the Receiver. It is against that order that Musammât Sona Kuer prefers the present application for revision, namely, No. 75 of 1918.

Revision No. 138 of 1918 has been preferred by another set of transferees, namely, Ram Prasad Singh and others, and against whom a similar order has been made directing delivery of possession to the Receiver.

I will deal first of all with Case No. 75 of 1918 which relates to Sona Kuer's properties.

It is unnecessary to consider what would have been the position if the transfer by Muhammad Umar had been made before the institution of the administration suit. Clearly the transfer is affected by the provisions of section 52 of the Transfer of Property Act regarding lis pendens. I agree with the appellant that the transfer does not become ipso facto void, but if the provisions of section 52 have any meaning at all, then as soon as the Receiver was appointed to carry out the administration, the Court was entitled, if it so chose, to consider the transfer a nullity and to regard the property as still in the hands of Muhammad Umar and I do not think there can be any doubt that the Court had full authority to direct the Receiver to take possession.

It is contended that under Order XL, rule 1, sub-clause 2, the Court is not authorised to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a right so to remove; that Muhammad Umar as one of the heirs of Musammāt Fasihan was a co-owner who had full power to give a mortgage to the extent of his share in the estate and that the other co-owners could only eject him if it was shown that he had taken possession of more than his proportionate share. That is an argument which might have had some force if the transfer had been one before the suit, but it being pendente lite I do not think there can be any doubt that the plaintiffs in the administration suit were competent to ask the Court to take possession of all the properties in the custody not only of the co-owners but also of transferees who had obtained possession by transfers subsequent to the institution of the suit. Muhammad Umar has died since the suit was instituted and it is urged that in the absence of a specific order in the preliminary decree of the 22nd September 1917 directing his co-owners to deliver up the properties in their possession, the present order of the Court is ultra vires. I am unable to appreciate this argument. The preliminary decree read with the appellate decree of the 18th July 1917 gives power to administer the property generally and to appoint a Receiver. The Receiver's powers are regulated by Order XL of the Civil Procedure Code and I am of opinion, the only ground upon which his possession can be resisted is sub-clause 2, which has already been considered and held to operate in favour of the Receiver and not the appellant.

The learned Vakil for the appellants next relies upon the judgment of this Court, dated the 15th July 1917, and contends that it was the intention of the learned Judges, when directing a general administration, to preserve the possession of the various transferees, as far as possible, to the extent of the shares of their transferors.

It is admitted that Muhammad Umar had no right to transfer the specific properties in question and that he had merely an inchoate right to the residue after the estate was fully administered by reason of his joint undivided share in the estate. But it is contended that the intention of this Court was that the administration should be carried on and accounts taken leaving Sona Kuer in possession till it was ascertained that she was holding more than Muhammad Umar's share. I have in vain examined the appellate judgment of this Court for an indication of this intention. The passages I have cited certainly do not support this interpretation and I can find no others which give us any assistance in the matter. Clearly the administering Court will be put to the gravest inconvenience if it cannot take possession of the properties in the custody of the co-owners, and it is conceivable that under certain circumstances further proceedings may be reduced to a standstill if this procedure were adopted. It may be the Court's management would be more beneficial and more efficient than that of the mortgagee or that the sale of the zerait lands might save the rest of the property. There may be many reasons to support the decision of the learned District Judge to take the property into his own custody and I do not think that the appellant has any cause for complaint, seeing that she took the mortgage with full notice after the institution of the suit and knowing that she would be bound by whatever orders the Court thought fit to pass in the suit.

Mr. Kulwant Sahay on behalf of the appellant has offered to deposit a year's rent in Court as security against the risk of the property being sold for arrears of Government revenue, but I do not think that any arrangement of this kind can be accepted in view of the fact that unless all the properties are brought under the custody of the Court, the Court cannot come to a satisfactory conclusion as to the real value of the assets. Other transferees may make the same claim and the appellant is, in my opinion, not entitled to and ought not to be allowed any special preference as against them. The appellant might perhaps resist the Receiver if she could shew that she had a right to suppose that her vendor was mortgaging for the purpose of paying Musammāt Fasihan's debts. She would then be competent to invoke the equitable principle which was recognised in Price v. Price (1). But in the case before us, although an attempt has been made to shew that a sum of Rs. 25,000 out of the consideration money was intended to pay off Musammât Fasihân's mortgage to Kesho Das, it is quite clear that no part of this money was in fact the consideration for Sona Kuer's mortgage and that the true consideration was the sum of Rs. 60,000 only. This sum of Rs. 25,000 is said to have been, after Kesho Das refused to accept it, deposited in the Bank of Bengal and subsequently withdrawn by the appellant herself.

It is next contended that on the 2nd January 1917 Musammât Sona Kuer paid a sum of Rs. 36,000 to Kesho Das to discharge the incumbrance created by Musammât Fasihân on two Mauzas. This payment is said to have come about in the following way. Kesho Das sued upon his prior mortgage from Fasihân, which covers not only the properties now in suit but other properties, and on the 26th February 1916 brought the mortgaged properties to sale. On the 15th December 1916, the Subordinate Judge set aside the sales on the ground of fraud and dismissed the execution case. Against that order there was an appeal by the auction-purchasers to the High Court, which affirmed the Subordinate Judge's order setting aside the sale upon the judgment-debtor paying to the auction-purchasers a certain sum as compensation. On the 2nd January 1917, Sona Kuer came in and paid to Kesho Das the sum of Rs. 36,000 for the purposes of freeing from his charge the properties covered by her mortgage. I fail to see how this payment can be considered sufficient to subrogate Sona Kuer to the rights of Kesho Das. It seems settled that there must be a satisfaction of the whole mortgage before a person interested can claim to be subrogated to the position of a prior mortgagee [Gurdeo Singh v. Ohandrika Singh (2)]. Here according to the appellant's own case there was no satisfaction of Kesho Das' full decree but only that portion of it which fell upon the properties covered by the present proceedings. The principle of subrogation, therefore, does not assist the appellant in respect of the mortgage of Kesho Das.

It is, however, said that Kesho Das agreed to a splitting up of his mortgage. Of this there is no evidence. It is said the point was taken before the learned District Judge, but the petition of the appellant before him does not disclose any such contention in clear and unequivocal terms. There was certainly no evidence tendered by the appellant on this question of fact. The truth is that a case is now being made in this Court which, even if indicated, was never developed in the Court below. The appellant is not entitled to raise a point of this kind in appeal and much less in revision. Indeed Mr. Kulwant Sahay's argument on this part of the case convinces me that complicated questions as to the rights of transferees are certain to arise and that they can only be satisfactorily decided if the Court is in custody of the whole estate. Mr. Khurshed Husnain agrees that if it is found by the Receiver that Kesho Das has in fact split up his mortgage, the sum paid by the appellant for the two Mauzas will be refunded to her.

In the view I take of the merits it becomes unnecessary to consider whether an appeal lies in this case or not. As the point, however, has been argued I will deal with it shortly. Sona Kuer objects to deliver possession to the Receiver appointed by the Court under Order XL, Civil Procedure Code, and in my opinion an appeal lies under Order XLIII against the order of the learned District Judge. The appellant, following a decision of this Court which laid down that no appeal lay if the person aggrieved was not a party to the suit, has filed an application for revision. But in a recent case we considered all the authorities and held that the proper remedy of a person in the position of the appellant was by appeal. We have, therefore, no power to interfere unless we accept the application for revision as a memorandum of appeal.

Now there is ample authority for accepting an appeal which is found incompetent as an application for revision, and there is also some authority for the converse process of converting an application for revision into a memorandum of appeal. In my opinion this Court has ample jurisdiction, in exercise of its inherent powers under section 151, to condone in special cases the misapplication of the Civil Procedure Code, if the provisions of the law as regards limitation and Court-fees are complied with.

Here the applicant's fault was that she misconceived her remedy by reason of a judgment of this Court and if she had, instead of describing her application as an application for revision, described it as a memorandum of appeal she would have been competent to invoke the assistance of the Court. It is admitted that there is no defect as regards Court-fees and limitation and having regard to the special circumstances of this case, I think the interests of justice require that we should accept the application as a memorandum of appeal. The appellant, however, must be confined to the grounds taken in her application and she cannot be allowed to urge any ground which she had not taken in it in support of her appeal.

The result is that in the view that I take the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

This judgment disposes of Revision No. 138 of 1918 also. That application must also be treated as an appeal. The facts in this case are simpler than in Case No. 75. The mortgage of Muhammad Umar in this case was in favour of Ram Prasad and others. It was executed on the 3rd November 1913 for Rs. 9,000 and was followed on the 21st January 1917 by a sale in favour of the mortgagees by Umar for Rs. 16,000 and the appellants, after satisfying the mortgage charge, are alleged to have paid the balance to Umar in cash. The sale-deed mentions the fact that an appeal against the decision of the District Judge is pending in the High Court and it appears that in order to indemnify himself against the risk of Umar's title under the hiba being declared invalid, the mortgagees took a security bond by way of indemnity. So there can be no doubt that the principle of les pendens is fully applicable in this case and if that is so, the transfer is invalid for the purpose of affecting the rights of the plaintiff and the Receiver is clearly entitled to take possession.

The application for revision treated as an appeal as in the last-mentioned case is dismissed with costs. The costs in both appeals will be calculated on the assumption that the value of the appeals is above Rs. 5,000 in each case.

The defence of the appellant was that the sale was a nominal transaction intended to defeat and defraud the decree-holder. Both the Courts below have found that there was consideration for the sale-deed and that the transfer was a real transfer not intended to defeat the decree of the decree-holder.

It is first contended that as the consideration money, Rs. 700, was not paid to the vendor but to the creditors of the deceased husband of the vendor, the transaction was not a sale but one creating a security. I cannot agree with this. There was a sale for Rs. 700 and the purchaser, instead of paying the money to the vendor, paid off her husband's creditors. The suggestion is a novel one, and it is inconsistent with the main defence put forward in the Court below.

It is contended that the vendor is in possession and hence the sale is nominal. This argument is based upon a misapprehension. The house itself has been leased but the plaintiff and his daughter are, however, living in another house. This is a fact which has been noticed by the Courts below as one giving rise to no suspicion. It certainly does not justify my holding that the house in suit is not in the possession of the vendee.

The appellant's decree has not been paid off, but the vendee made himself responsible only to the extent of Rs. 700 and he has proved to the satisfaction of the lower Court that he has paid the amount. No question was raised as to the adequacy of the consideration.

Preference shown to other creditors is not a ground for holding that the transaction comes within the scope of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The case cited in the lower Courts [Musahar Sahu v. Hakim Lal (1)] fully supports this view.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where a partition takes place between the members of a joint Hindu family, the presumption is that there is a complete partition in status and of all the properties, and if certain properties are left undivided there is no presumption that the co-parcenary right is retained in those properties. [p. 785, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 21st May 1917.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Appellant.

Mr. Duni Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The land in suit was the joint property of Harnam Das, father of the plaintiffs, and his brother Dhanpat Rai, the husband of the defendant.

In 1900, Harnam Das and Dhanpat Rai separated from one another, as the plaintiffs have admitted. They divided the outstandings and moveable property, but the immoveable property was left undivided.

In 1902 Dhanpat Rai died, and his share in the land was mutated in favour of the defendant.

The latter having applied to the Revenue Authorities for partition of her share, the plaintiffs have brought the present suit for a declaration that they are the sole owners of the land, contending that on the death of Dhanpat Rai their father became the owner of the whole land by survivorship, the defendant being entitled only to maintenance.

The first Court dismissed the suit, but on appeal the learned District Judge has passed a decree in the plaintiffs' favour, finding that at the time of Dhanpat Rai's death he and his brother were joint so far as the land in suit was concerned; that there was a co-parcenary in existence; and that, therefore, the widow is only entitled to maintenance.

BHOLA DEVI v. MOHKAM CHAND.

The defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The question in dispute is, whether the land continued to be held by Dhanpat Rai and Harnam Das as members of a joint Hindu family after the partition of 1900.

In Mayne's Hindu Law, 8th Edition, on page 689, it is stated that there may be a partial division of the family property of such a nature that the co-parcenary ceases as to some of the property and continues as to the rest.

Of the authorities quoted in the foot-note in support of this proposition the first two, namely, Kandisami v. Doraisami Ayyar (1) and Rewun Persid v. Musammal Radha Beeby (2), lay down only that a partition may be partial, and not that the co-parcenary will continue in regard to the property left undivided. In two other cases mentioned in the foot-note, Muthusami Mudaliar v. Nallakulantha (3) and Gavri Shankar Parabhuram v. Atmaram Rajaram (4), the property left undivided was held to be co-parcenary property. Counsel for the respondents, however, has not relied on those cases, and Mr. Sheo Narain has referred us to two more recent rulings, Vaidyanatha Aiyar v. Aiyasamy Aiyar (5) and Sunilaram v. Kamakotiah (6), in support of his contention that the partial partition of 1900 effected a division in status. In the latter case it has been held that where there is a partition, the presumption is that there is a complete partition in status and of all the properties and that if certain properties have been left undivided, there is no presumption that the co-parcenary right is retained in those properties.

Against this no authority has been cited on the other side. Mr. Dani Chand has referred to some rulings, but they do not touch the point in issue.

The partition between the brothers in 1900 was complete in all respects except in regard to the land and houses. As to the land, the fact that after Dhanpat

Rai's death in 1902 mutation took place in favour of his widow and that Harnam Das or his sons never objected, raises rather a strong inference that the land was not co-parcenary property and that the defendant succeeded to her husband's share as his heir.

The Exhibits E1, F1 and G1 relied upon by the plaintiffs, to which reference has been made in the judgments of the lower Courts, do not, in our opinion, help the plaintiffs' case. They are produced with the object of showing that the defendant had been receiving Rs. 4-8-0 a month from Harnam Das for her maintenance. Atma Ram, a relation of both parties, was managing the land and it may well have been that the defendant, being unable to manage it herself, was content for some time to let him manage it for her and to receive a sum of Rs. 4-8-0 a month. But from her receiving this allowance it would not follow that she had no rights of ownership in the land, nor can we agree with the contention that she gave up her rights in the land in consideration of being paid a monthly sum for her maintenance.

The learned District Judge has remarked in his judgment that Counsel on both sides are agreed that if the land was joint as between Harnam Das and Dhanpat Rai at the time of the latter's death, the widow is only entitled to maintenance. We think there must have been a mistake here as there was no dispute that the land was joint, probably what Counsel for the defendant meant was that if the joint Hindu family subsisted his client could only get maintenance.

We are of opinion that the partition of 1900 effected a disruption of the joint family, with the result that the land was held by Harnam Das and Dhanpat Rai from that time as tenants in common and not as joint tenants.

Consequently on the death of Dhanpat Rai his widow was entitled to succeed to his share, and the land would not pass by survivorship to Harnam Das.

We accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court dismissing the suit. The respondents will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57—Execution of decree—Attachment of decree—Execution case dismissed for default, effect of—Attachment, whether raised—Purchaser of attached decree, position of.

A decree-holder applied for the attachment of a decree belonging to his judgment-debtor. The executing Court ordered the decree to be attached, but on the date fixed for orders dismissed the execution case for default. After the order for dismissal the judgment-debtor sold the attached decree to one A:

Held, (1) that until the attached decree had been realised by the decree-holder there was nothing further to be done by him in the execution case, so that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to dismiss the case for default; [p. 788, col. 1.]

(2) that notwithstanding the order for dismissal of the case, the attachment of the decree continued to subsist; [p. 788, col. 1.]

(3) that, therefore, A acquired no title to the decree by his purchase as against the attaching decree-holder, and had no right to execute it. [p. 788, col. 2.]

So long as an attachment of a decree remains in force, any dealings by the original decree-holder or any transfer or delivery of property comprised in the decree is void as against the claims enforceable under the attachment. [p. 788, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Gaya, dated the 10th November 1917.

JUDGMENT.

MILLER, C. J.—This appeal raises the question of the rights of rival claimants to take out execution of a decree. One claims to execute the decree by reason of an attachment obtained by him in execution proceedings in another suit and the other claims to execute the decree as purchaser from the original decree-holders. The facts which are necessary to be stated in order to appreciate the points which have been raised and argued are as follows:—

On the 2nd April 1910 Asfandiar Khan and Janoo Bibi, his mother, obtained a decree against Wazir Bibi and others in a contribution suit. That suit was entitled Contribution Suit No. 118 of 1910 and was tried before the Subordinate Judge of Gaya. The decree in that suit was apparently amended by inserting some costs on the 27th June 1914. I merely mention this fact because I find in the evidence that that decree is on some occasions referred to as the decree of the 27th June 1914. On the 12th August 1911 one Bhawani Kuer obtained a decree in a Title Suit No. 76 of 1911 in the same Court against Asfandiar Khan, the first of the decree-holders, in the suit just mentioned. That was a suit for delivery of possession and mesne profits in a village. Between 1911 and the beginning of 1917 there were some attempts made by Bhawani Kuer to execute that decree, which proved infructuous. Then on the 12th February 1917 Gauri Shanker, who is one of the respondents in the present appeal, purchased from Bhawani Kuer the decree which she had obtained against Asfandiar, and he thereupon made an application for execution of that decree and prayed for attachment of Asfandiar's decree against Wazir Bibi. His petition was dated the 25th May 1917, and the mode in which he sought to get the assistance of the Court in execution of the decree he had purchased from Bhawani Kuer was by praying that Asfandiar's decree against Wazir Bibi might be attached and that he, Gauri Shanker, should be authorised to execute that decree and realise the decretal amount. In the course of that execution case taken out by Gauri Shanker an order was made on the 9th July 1917; which was to this effect:—

"Let Gauri Shanker, the present decree-holder, be substituted in the place of Musammat Bhawani Kuer. Process-fee worth Rs. 2 filed. Issue attachment of decree fixing 19th July 1917 for orders."

The decree which is attached by that order is the decree obtained by Asfandiar Khan and Janoo Bibi against Wazir Bibi. Perhaps I ought to add that the only interest in that decree which Gauri Shanker could have was the interest of Asfandiar Khan. There was an interest of Janoo Bibi which had not passed to him under the attachment and no claim is made by him in so far as Janoo Bibi's interest is concerned. The order which I have just mentioned having been made, it would appear that in so far as Gauri Shanker was seeking the assistance of the Court for the execution of his decree, that is to say, the decree which he had purchased, he had got all he wanted except possibly some formal order which might have to be made later on. He had had his name substituted in place of the vendor of the decree, the original decree-holder, and he had got an order attaching the decree of the 2nd April 1910, and the only thing to be done then was for him to take out execution proceedings under the earlier decree which had been attached and endeavour to realise the decretal sum. Then, for some reason which does not appear, on the 19th July 1917, 10 days after the order which I have just referred to, there is an order in the order-sheet to this effect:—

"Copy of orders for attaching decree of Money Suit No. 118 of 1909 disposed of on 27th June 1914 received. Ordered case dismissed for want of further prosecution."

That being so, it appears that on the 26th August, that is, rather more than a month later, the present appellant, Amirul Hasan, purchased from Asfandiar and Riayasat Bibi who had succeeded to the interest of Janoo Bibi the decree which they then had against Wazir Bibi, and on the 9th September Gauri Shanker filed an application for execution of that decree in pursuance of the order of attachment which he had already received in the execution proceedings in the title suit. On the 5th November 1917 Amirul Hasan also applied for substitution of his name and for execution of the same decree claiming that it had been purchased by him. When the matter came before the Subordinate Judge, who had to decide these two cases, they both being upon his file, it was obvious that he could not allow both the applicants to execute the same decree as they were claiming in different interests. It was contended on behalf of Amirul Hasan, who is the appellant in this case, that as there had been an order made in the execution proceedings in the title suit on the 19th July 1917 dismissing that execution case for want of further prosecution, that Order XXI, rule 57, of the Civil Procedure Code applied, which provides that where any property has been attached in execution but by reason of the decree-holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a future date and that upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease. It was contended by Amirul Hasan that there had been a dismissal for default in this case and, therefore, after the 19th July 1917 there was no attachment subsisting of the decree, which he had shortly after that date purchased from the original decree-holders. He claimed that he was entitled to maintain the execution case and that Gauri Shanker had no right or title to do so. The learned Judge decided in favour of Gauri Shanker. The conclusion which he came to was that the dismissal of the original execution case, that is to say, the execution case in the title suit, did not have the effect of setting aside the attachment and in fact the view which the learned Judge has taken is that all that was necessary to be done in that execution case had been done. The attachment had been made and the applicant had been given leave to substitute his name in place of that of the original decree-holder and all that now remained to be done was to take out execution proceedings under the attached decree. It is quite clear that if in fact the execution proceedings are dismissed by reason of any default on the part of the person applying for execution that would undoubtedly have the effect of releasing any property that might have been attached in those execution proceedings, and the question we have to consider in this case is, what in fact was the effect of this order of the 19th July dismissing the execution proceedings for want of further prosecution. It is impossible to say the exact reason which induced the learned Judge to make such an order on that occasion, but it seems to me that it is impossible to conceive that there was, 10 days after the attachment order had been made, any default on the part of Gauri Shanker, who was applying for execution, which would have enabled the learned Judge to dismiss the case by reason of that default. There is nothing under the rules, so far as I am aware, which provides that where a decree is attached in the manner in which this was, the execution proceedings should be taken out within 10 days after the order was made nor can I find from the order-sheet any order which compelled Gauri Shanker within 10 days or any period to take out proceedings for executing the attached decree, and I have asked the learned Vakil for the appellant whether he can tell me in what respect there was default. He says that the applicant ought to have seen that the execution case was kept alive until he took out execution proceedings under the attached decree. It does not seem to me that there was any obligation upon the applicant to apply to the Court from time to time merely to see that the execution proceedings were kept alive, when in fact there was nothing further to be done in those proceedings until the attached decree had been realised by Gauri Shanker. That being so, it seems to me, whatever may be the wording of the order, that in truth and in fact there was no dismissal of the execution proceedings by reason of any default on the part of the applicant which brings it within Order XXI, rule 57, of the Civil Procedure Code, and if that is so, it follows that the attachment, which was made in order to enable the applicant to take out execution proceedings under the decree which was attached, remains in force notwithstanding the dismissal of the original execution proceedings which, as far as I can see, ought never to have been dismissed at all. It may be that the learned Judge, thinking that there was nothing further to be done in the execution taken out in the title suit, had wished to get rid of it from his file and accordingly made the order which he did, leaving the matter to proceed under the decree which had been attached, as it was by executing that decree that the applicant expected to get satisfaction. Having come to this conclusion upon the question of the effect of the order made dismissing the execution proceedings, it follows that if and so long as the attachment remained in force, any dealings by the original decree-holder or any transfer or delivery of property comprised in the decree attached would be void as against the claims enforceable under the attachment. That is clearly laid down in section 64 of the Civil Procedure Code and, therefore, as between the two rival claimants to execute this decree there can be no doubt in my mind that the result arrived at by the learned Judge in the Court below was right and in so far as he allowed the execution to proceed on behalf of Gauri Shanker this appeal ought to be dismissed.

I have assumed in dealing with this case that the appellant has a right to appeal. But as on the merits he fails, it is not necessary for us to determine the point raised by the respondent that in fact there was no right of appeal and that the only method of approaching this Court was by revision. This does not arise because, one way or the other, assuming we had been in favour of the appellant on the merits, we should have been entitled to go into the case either because he had a right of appeal or because he was entitled to come before us by way of revision, and he has taken both courses. But as I have already said, that question we leave undetermined because it does not seem to arise at the present moment. The judgment which I have just delivered will govern the two appeals Nos. 236 and 287 of 1917 and the two Civil Revisions Nos. 333 and 334 of 1917, all of which are dismissed with costs. We assess the costs at Rs. 135 for all four cases.

MULLICK, J.—I agree.

Appeals and revisions dismissed.

COURT OF THE FINANCIAL COMMISSIONER, PUNJAB.

REVENUE REVISION No. 129 of 1917-18.

August 29, 1918.

Present :—Mr. Fagan, F. C.

KIRPA—APPLICANT

versus

NASIB SINGH AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS,
Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887) s. 117—

KIRPA V. NASIB SINGH.

Partition—Question of title, decision of—Procedure—Applicant not in actual possession—Burden of proof.

Where a question of title is raised by the respondent in a partition proceeding, the Revenue Officer should, in accordance with the instructions contained in paragraph 8 of the Financial Commissioner's Standing Order 27, himself proceed to decide the question without referring the objector to a Civil Court. [p. 790, col. 1.]

Where an applicant for partition is recorded as a co-sharing owner along with the other parties in the land in dispute, the presumption is that he is a co-sharer in the land of which he seeks partition. He must also be presumed to be in legal or constructive possession of his undivided share through or by means of his co-sharers. This presumption cannot be rebutted nor can such possession be defeated by the mere denial of his title by his co-sharers. To effect this there must be very clear and precise proof that their possession is in fact and really adverse to him so as to amount to his actual ouster from all connection with the land in dispute and to his acceptance of such a position. [p. 790, col. 1.]

Case forwarded by the Commissioner of Ambala on the 30th April 1918.

FACTS of the case appear from the following order of the Settlement Officer (Mr. R. Whitehead) dated 14th August 1917:—

"There are three parties to the proposed partition as shown in Nagsha Alif of the Vernacular File. The first two parties, Amrao Singh, etc., and Kirpa are shown as being in possession of all the land in dispute. The third party Nasib Singh is not in possession and has asked for partition. I note that other land in the same joint khata is held and cultivated by occupancy tenants. I also observe that Kirpa has mortgaged with possession his entire holding. As Amrao Singh and Kirpa have denied Nasib Singh's title to the land, the lower Court has directed them to sue in a Civil Court for the extinction of that title. Amrao Singh and Kirpa now appeal against that order, as they consider that Nasib Singh should have been directed to sue for possession. I find that one Mohan Singh had purchased one-half of the land in dispute from one Chikan. Amrao Singh, Kirpa and Nasib Singh obtained this half from Mohan Singh by pre-emption and I find that Nasib Singh paid his fair share of the purchase-money to Mohan Singh. Under these circumstances I refuse to interfere with the order of the lower Court. I dismiss this appeal without costs."

Upon this the defendants appealed to the Commissioner (Mr. H. A. Casson), who passed the following order on 30th April 1918:—

"One Nasib Singh applies for partition of land, of which he is recorded owner along with (1) Amrao Singh, etc., and (2) Kirpa.

The possession is all entered in the names of Amrao Singh, etc., and Kirpa has mortgaged his rights to Amrao Singh, etc. These sharers deny Nasib Singh's right. The Assistant Collector ordered Amrao Singh and Kirpa to institute a suit within two months to get Nasib Singh's claim to proprietary right declared void. They appealed unsuccessfully to the Settlement Collector. They have not instituted the suit and the period of two months has passed.

In this application the defendants-appellants plead that the Collector did not consider all the grounds of appeal, that no guardian was appointed for one of them, a minor, and that the onus of bringing a civil suit should have been laid on applicant for partition who is now respondent. The order passed seems palpably wrong and not only so, but unjust. Why should Amrao Singh and Kirpa be ordered to go to a Civil Court? It is not they who have set matters in motion by applying for partition. Why should they peremptorily be told to go to the Civil Courts within two months on pain of having their objections brushed aside?

The proper order in this case, as the applicant for partition appears to be out of possession, and probably seeking to gain by his application a right which he knows will be disputed, was to file the application and leave either party to go to the Civil Courts. } A. Naturally the person who would have had to go to the Civil Courts, had the order taken this form, would have been Nasib Singh, as the other side are quite content with their present position.

Now as to the minor mentioned in the appeal, I find that she is a girl who is recorded as a co-sharer with Nasib Singh applicant. She is not, however, herself an applicant and so far has not been made a party to the case, nor is there any reason why she should be made a party at this stage.

I refer the case to the Financial Commissioner on the revision side and recommend that the application be accepted and that order be passed as at A above.

The parties do not wish to be represented on appeal."

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case are fully set out in the orders of the Settlement Collector and of the Commissioner. The applicants for revision, being the respondents in the partition proceedings, raised the question of title before the Assistant Collector. Under the circumstance that officer, in accordance with the instructions contained in paragraph 8 of Standing Order 27, should himself have proceeded to decide the question of title without referring the objectors to a Civil Court. So far at any rate his order is incorrect.

There remains the question as to the party on whom the burden of proof lies. Now as to this it is to be observed that Nasib Singh, the applicant for partition, is recorded as a co-sharing owner along with the other parties in the land in dispute. Moreover it appears from the order of the Settlement Collector that Nasib Singh joined those other parties in a suit for pre-emption of a portion of that land and that he paid up his share of the price. Under these circumstances the presumption clearly is that Nasib Singh is a co-sharer in the land of which he seeks partition. It seems clear indeed that he is not in actual physical possession or occupation of any part of the land, but under the circumstances there arises, I hold, the further legal presumption that the possession of one co-sharer is the possession of another; that is to say, that Nasib Singh is in reality in legal or constructive possession of his undivided share through or by means of his co-sharers, the respondents in the partition proceedings. The presumption cannot, I think, be rebutted nor such possession on his part defeated by the mere denial of his title by the other parties. To effect this there must be very clear and precise proof that their possession is in fact and really adverse to him, so as to amount to his actual ouster from all connection with the land in dispute and to his acceptance of such a position. I do not think that there is such proof in this case and under the circumstances it is, I consider, for the applicants for revision to prove that Nasib Singh has no title to the share in respect of which he claims partition or to obtain such partition. I am not prepared, therefore, to pass an order in the terms recommended by the Commissioner. I, however, set aside the orders of the Assistant Collector and the Settlement Collector and return the case to the former officer for disposal in accordance with the above remarks. He should call upon the respondent objectors in the partition proceedings to file a duly stamped plaint by a fixed date. No order as to costs.

Case remanded.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CIVIL SUIT No. 379 OF 1917.

March 15, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter.

MESSRS. BEST & CO., LTD.—PLAINTIFFS

versus

THE COLLECTOR OF MADRAS—

DEFENDANT.

Government of India Act, 1915 (5 & 6 Geo V, Ch. 61), s. 106 (2)—Income Tax Act (II of 1886), s. 31—Income Tax (Amendment) Act (V of 1916)—Composition of income tax—Repudiation of agreement by Collector under provisions of Act V of 1916—Suit to declare agreement binding on Collector, maintainability of—Original jurisdiction of High Court, limits of.

A suit to declare that an agreement for composition of income-tax under the provisions of section 31 of Act II of 1886 which was repudiated by the Collector after the enactment of Act V of 1916 is binding on the Collector, does not lie on the Original Side of the High Court and is exempted from its jurisdiction by section 106 (2) of the Government of India Act. [p. 791, col. 1.]

In the absence of an averment that the Collector was mala fide using the Statute to commit an act of aggression, the High Court has no jurisdiction to make an enquiry on the merits to determine whether the Collector was right in his view of the law. [p. 792, col. 2.]

FACTS appear from the judgment.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. Srinivasa Aiyangar, (Advocate General) for the Defendant, took the preliminary objection that the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit at all under section 106 (2) of the Government of India Act. The matter is one which pertains to the collection of revenue and the original jurisdiction of the High Court

Mr. Nugent Grant, for the Plaintiffs.—In Collector of Sea Customs, Madras v. Punniar Chithambaram (1) the Judges held that the prohibition against the exercise of jurisdiction contained in 39 & 40 Geo. III, C. 79, was impliedly repealed by the Charter Act and Letters Patent of the High Court. Section 106 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1915, re-enacts the Letters Patent and its effect is to overrule the prohibition contained originally in 39 & 40 Geo. III, C. 79.

There is no prohibition in the language of section 106 (2) of the Government of India Act against the High Court going into the merits to see if the repudiation of the agreement of composition was illegal. Under the terms of the section the High Court cannot try matters relating to the collection of revenue according to the usage or practice of the country or the law for the time being in force.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought by Messrs. Best & Co., Ltd., a firm of merchants carrying on business in this city, for a declaration that an agreement dated the 4th October 1915 entered into by them with the Collector of Madras of the day was binding on the parties. The action is brought because, on the 22nd May 1917, the Collector purporting to act in consequence of the Income Tax Act, V of 1915, declared that the agreement was no longer binding on him and repudiated it. The plaintiffs tendered the sum that they said to be due under the agreement and brought this action to safeguard their rights under it. The agreement is one made with the Collector of Madras under the provisions of the former Income Tax Statute II of 1886, section 31, which enables persons, instead of being reassessed every year, to arrange with the Collector for a definite sum to be assessed for a fixed period, and in this case the period agreed upon was five years from the 1st April 1915. The plaintiffs originally sued the Secretary of State for India. At one time the point was taken on behalf of the Government that the proper person to be sued was not the Secretary of State but the Collector of Madras but, on a suggestion made at the time of the settling of issues, that difficulty, which was purely a technical one, was obviated by adding the Collector of Madras as a party, so that, the relief being in the alternative against one or other of those officials, it is really immaterial to decide as to which of them is actually liable. Of course, we all know it really comes to the same thing, the Collector being the revenue authority.

By way of preliminary objection, another point was taken by the learned Advocate-General which is embodied in the first issue in the case, and that was that I, sitting as a Judge on the Original Side of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, had no jurisdiction under section 106 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915, to try the suit. The words of the section seem to be quite explicit and are as follows:—"The High Courts have not and may not exercise any original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, or concerning any act ordered or done in the collection thereof according to the usage and practice of the country or the law for the time being in force." As I say, on the face of it, it appeared to me that that entirely precluded me from entertaining the suit on the merits or from entertaining it at all. Mr. Grant took two points in answer to that contention. The first point was this: that by the decision in Collector of Sea Customs v. Punniar Chidambaram (1), which of course if the situation were unchanged would be binding upon me, I was compelled to hold that the prohibition against the High Court on the Original Side trying revenue suits had disappeared, because one of the learned Judges, Mr. Justice Kernan, held that the prohibition contained in the section of Act 39 & 40 Geo. III, C. 79, otherwise known as the Government of India Act, 1800, was repealed by 53 Geo. III, C. 155, sections 99 and 100, and the other learned Judges apparently held that the prohibition contained in 39 & 40 Geo. III, C. 79, was by necessary implication repealed by the Charter Act and the Letters Patent of this Court. What Mr. Grant says is, as

(1) 1 M. S. 9; 1 Ind. Jur. 150; 1 M. L. R. 16; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 58 (F. B.).

BEST & CO. v. COLLECTOR OF MADRAS.

I follow it, here in 1874 at the date of the judgment of that Bench, there was in existence the Act 39 & 40 Geo. III, C. 79, but the learned Judges still held that the effect of later legislation had been to abrogate that section of the Act. Then, he says, the Government of India Act, 1915, sub-section, 1 of section 106 re-enacts the Letters Patent and, therefore, I must hold just the same as the learned Judges did in 1874, viz., that the effect of re-enacting the Letters Patent is to overrule the prohibition contained originally in 39 & 40 Geo. III, C. 79, and now in the Act of 1915. I do not think that is a possible construction for me to adopt. It is very unfortunate that the section of the Act 39 & 40 Geo. III, C. 79, should have been re-enacted in section 106 of the Government of India Act, 1915, because the conflict between the King's Courts and the Sudder Courts, which was the only reason for the introduction of the section in the old Act of 1800, has entirely passed away and there is no rhyme or reason in prohibiting the Original Side of this Court from trying revenue cases. But I am not concerned with the wisdom or the policy of the legislation. The Legislature has thought fit to re-enact the section in circumstances which do not, in my opinion, require it. It has done so and I cannot hold, where an express prohibition has been re-enacted in 1915, that I can act on the view formed by a Bench of this Court in 1874 as to the effect on the original section of subsequent Statutes all of course prior to 1874, long prior to the Government of India Act, 1915. I am of opinion that the prohibition is absolute and that I have no jurisdiction to entertain this suit.

Mr. Grant took the further point that the fetter on my jurisdiction was only with regard to "acts ordered or done in the collection of the revenue according to the usage and practice of the country or the law for the time being in force," and he says, "if you go into the facts, on the merits you will find that my contention is well founded, that this was an illegal repudiation of the agreement." That contention, I think, was disposed of as long ago as 1849 in a judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Richard

Spooner v. Juddew (2). In that case the Court put a construction on a protective Statute of this kind which, so far as I know, has never been departed from, and it is put in much clearer words than I can put it, by Lord Campbell in giving their Lordships' opinion at page 379 of the report. What he says is this: "The point, therefore, is, whether the exception of jurisdiction only arises where the defendants have acted strictly according to the usage and practice of the country, and the regulations of the Governor and Council. But upon this supposition the proviso is wholly nugatory: for, if the Supreme Court is to enquire whether the defendants in this matter concerning the public revenue were right in the demand made, and to decide in their favour only if they acted in entire conformity to the regulations of the Governor and Council of Bombay, they would equally be entitled to succeed, if the Statutes and the Charters contained no exception or proviso for their protection. Our books actually swarm with decisions putting a contrary construction upon such enactments, and there can be no rule more firmly established, than that if parties bona fide and not absurdly believe that they are acting in pursuance of Statutes, and according to law, they are entitled to the special protection which the Legislature intended for them, although they have done an illegal act." It is not suggested in this case that the Collector of Madras or the Secretary of State acted mala fide or purported to seek the protection of the Statute with the full knowledge that all that was being done was to commit a mere act of aggression. Whether they were right or wrong, they thought clearly and honestly that they were taking advantage of the provisions which the Statute allowed them to take advantage of, in terminating this agreement. I am, therefore, compelled to hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. I may add that I asked the parties if they wanted me to go into the other questions in the suit and save them from further trouble in case I should be held to be wrong in holding that I have no jurisdiction. I am not

An occupancy tenant entered into an arrangement with his landlord, whereunder the former gave up his occupancy rights in a portion of the holding and obtained full proprietary rights in the remainder. Subsequently, he sold the land which he had obtained in full proprietary right to the defendant. Plaintiff, a reversioner of the vendor, brought a suit for a declaration that the sale would not affect his reversionary rights after the death of the vendor:

Held, that the occupancy rights with which the vendor had parted being ancestral, the land received by him in exchange from the landlord in full proprietary right must also be treated as ancestral, and that, therefore, the plaintiff had a locus standi to bring the suit. [p 794, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the lower Appellate Court remanding the case under Order XLII, rule 23, Civil Procedure Code, for decision on the merits. The facts are simple. Kala, defendant No. 1, was the occupancy tenant of a plot of 39 kanals 19 marlas of land of which the landlords were Ghania Singh and Gopal Singh. Kala Singh without the permission of the landlords mortgaged this occupancy holding to Moti Ram for Rs. 3,500 on the 25th August 1913. The landlords intended to take steps to avoid the mortgage, but a settlement was effected between them and Kala by deeds of the 26th December 1913. In accordance with the agreement then come to, the landlords gave up their proprietary rights in 20 kanals out of the 39 kanals 19 marlas in favour of Kala, and Kala in consideration therefor gave up his occupancy rights in the remainder of the land, namely 19 kanals 19 marlas. By this arrangement Kala became full owner of 20 kanals of land, out of which he on 5th February 1914 sold 15 kanals 7 marlas to Moti Ram. His brother Ram Singh sued for a declaration that this sale would not affect his reversionary rights after the death of Kala. The first Court held that the land was not ancestral qua the plaintiff and dismissed the suit. It is admitted that Kala's occupancy holding of 39 kanals 19 marlas was ancestral and that Ram Singh would have been entitled to succeed to it upon Kala's death. The lower Appellate Court, following Ghauns v. Imam Din (1), held that the proprietary land which Kala had received from the landlords in exchange for ancestral occupancy land must be treated as ancestral, and that, therefore, the plaintiff had a locus standi to contest the alienation. It accordingly set aside the first Court's order and remanded the case.

Dr. Narang in arguing the case on behalf of the appellants urges that there had in reality not been any exchange of land. He points out that, under section 36 of the Tenancy Act, Kala could relinquish his tenancy at any time without the consent of his reversioners. He also urges that Kala could have sold his occupancy rights to the landlords, and with the money so obtained could subsequently have bought the proprietary land, and that if he had done this the latter would have been his self-acquired property. This, however, is not what happened and we, therefore, are not going to decide whether such land could have been considered as self-acquired property or not. What obviously did happen was that there was an exchange between Kala and his landlords, Kala giving up his occupancy rights in a certain plot of land and receiving in exchange full proprietary rights in another plot. This was clearly an exchange though it was not such an exchange as is contemplated by section 7 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. Dr. Narang says that the object of the arrangement between Kala and his landlords was to avoid litigation. We do not see how the object with which the arrangement was effected can affect the nature of the arrangement. In Ghaun v. Imam Din (1) it was held that in the case of an exchange the character of the land acquired is that of the land parted with and that if the latter was ancestral, the acquired land is equally ancestral. That case followed a previous Division Bench decision of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 304 of 1897. In the present case there was clearly an exchange and as the occupancy rights which Kala parted with were ancestral, the land which he received in exchange from the landlords is also ancestral.

We, therefore, consider that the lower Appellate Court's decision is correct and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Per Phillips, J.—The Madras Estates Land Act treats the charge for arrears of rent on a holding as being of the same nature in all cases and creates no distinction between the charge where rent is payable in kind and the charge where rent is payable in money. [p. 796, col. 1.]

Though section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not specifically re-enacted in the Madras Estates Land Act, section 132 of the latter Act leads to the same result. [p. 796, col. 2.]

Per Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The absence of any separate section in the Madras Estates Land Act like section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act makes no difference in the scheme of the former Act, as it contains provisions in different sections which, in effect, reproduce the provisions of section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. [p. 798, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cozanada, in Appeal Suit No. 72 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Peddapur, in Original Suit No. 235 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. Rama Rao for Mr. P. Narayana-murthi, for the Appellant.—The sale in execution of a rent-decree is subject to the pre-existing mortgages. The arrear of rent is a charge on the holding: vide section 5 of the Madras Estates Land Act. The charge is within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, to which the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 14, Civil Procedure Code, apply. The decree is a simple money-decree and the fact that it is a money decree for rent will not place it on a higher footing than an ordinary money decree. The pre-existing encumbrances are preserved and the purchaser at the auction sale cannot claim the same consequences to flow as in the case of a sale by a Collector. Tariniprosad Roy v. Narayan Kumari (1) is in appellant's favour. The case relied on by the lower Appellate Court proceeds on the language of section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and as there is no provision corresponding to it in the Madras Estates Land Act, the reasoning adopted by the Calcutta High Court in that case does not apply to the present case.

PANANGIPALLI SURANNA V. KATTA VENKATA SURYANARAYANA JAGAPATHIRAJU.

The definition of 'charge' in the Transfer of Property Act should be adopted in construing the Estates Land Act. In Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (2) it was held that, for the purposes of the Limitation Act, the words 'charge' and 'mortgage' should be given their meanings in the Transfer of Property Act.

Mr. F. Nagabhushanam, for the Respondents. —The charge for arrears of rent is not within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. To hold so would lead to an anomalous position. The latter provision can only be applied where rent is payable in money, but where rent is payable in kind the charge cannot obviously come within section 100. The statutory charge cannot be a charge within the meaning of section 100 in some cases and not be a charge in others. If the provisions of section 100 be applied, the tenant's position is similar to that of a mortgagor, i. e., the tenant, whose holding is security for the rent, can redeem the mortgages. Under the Estates Land Act, however, a tenant cannot, by payment of the rent, extinguish the charge. The charge continues to be security for future rent.

The absence of a provision in the Madras Act similar to that of section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not affect the case. The scheme of the Madras Act proceeds on the footing of that provision. The combined effect of sections 5, 6, 77 and 135 of the Estates Land Act is substantially to reproduce section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The provisions of Chapter VI of the Estates Land Act, relating to sales by a Collector for arrears of rent, are by section 132 made applicable to rent decrees of Revenue Courts. Therefore, it follows that the sale in execution of the latter passes the property to the purchaser free of incumbrances.

Mr. Rama Rao was heard in reply.

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—The plaint properties were sold to 7th defendant in execution of a decree for rent due upon them, and the sole question for decision is, whether the purchase by 7th defendant is subject to plaintiff's mortgage on the properties or not. The two lower Courts have taken opposite views, the District Munsif holding, on the strength of the ruling in Tariniprosad Roy v. Narayan Kumari (1), that a sale in execution of a decree for rent did not affect a prior mortgage, while the Subordinate Judge, following the opinion of the Calcutta High Court in Royzuddi Sheik v. Kali Nath Mookerjee (3) that the statutory charge upon the land for arrears of rent was not a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, held that the sale transferred the property free of encumbrance.

Under section 5 of the Madras Estates Land Act a first charge is created upon the land for rent, but the provision in section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the land can be sold in execution of a decree for rent finds no place in the Madras Act, under which a landlord may sue for his rent or distrain moveable property (section 77) or sell the land through the Collector (section 111). The question is, whether having obtained a money-decree, the property can be brought to sale in execution with the same result as would follow from a sale effected by the Collector. If the charge upon the land is a charge within the meaning of section 100, Transfer of Property Act, the provisions of Order XXXIV, rule 14, of the Code of Civil Procedure clearly forbid the sale of the property except by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the charge. Under section 100, Transfer of Property Act, "where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another, and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage, the latter person is said to have a charge on the property and all the provisions hereinbefore contained as to a mortgagor shall, so far as may be, apply to the owner of such property." If we apply this section, the owner of the property, i.e., the tenant whose holding is security for the rent, is treated as being in the position of a mortgagor, and has the rights of a mortgagor, under sections 60 and 61, to redeem the charge, but under the Estates Land Act a tenant cannot get rid of the charge upon his holding by paying the rent, for the charge, continues as security for rent to be paid hereafter. It may also be noted that, where rent is payable in kind, the charge for arrears of rent cannot come within the definition in section 100 which refers only to payment of money, and it would be most anomalous that a charge created by Statute should be a charge within the meaning of section 100 in some cases, but not so in others. The Estates Land Act treats the charge as being of the same nature in all cases, and creates no distinction between the charge where rent is payable in kind and the charge where rent is payable in money. Section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act would also seem to indicate that a charge for rent is not of the nature contemplated in section 100. I would, therefore, accept the view of the Calcutta High Court expressed in Fotick Ohunder Dey Sircar v. E. G. Foley (4) and in Royzuddi Sheik v. Kali Nath Mookerjee (3) that a charge for rent is not within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. In this view, Order XXXIV, rule 14, is inapplicable to the present case.

There is, however, another aspect of the case which has to be considered. Under the decree for rent the property can be brought to sale, but if the decree were merely for money due on a debt, the sale would not have the effect of passing the property free of encumbrance, and it is difficult to see how the fact that the debt is a debt for rent can affect the case when the decree is passed by a Civil Court. In the present case, however, we are not concerned with a Civil Court's decree, because the rent-decree was obtained in a Revenue Court and under section 132 of the Estates Land Act the provisions of Chapter VI relating to sales by a Collector for arrears of rent are made applicable to the execution of a decree of a Revenue Court for arrears of rent. A sale by a Collector under Chapter VI passes the property free of all encumbrances except those specified in section 125, and consequently by virtue of section 132 a sale in execution must do the same. This view is also supported by the fact that under section 133 the Collector has certain powers given to him both in executing a decree for arrears by sale and in holding a sale for default under Chapter VI, no distinction being drawn between the two sales. Although section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not specifically re-enacted in the Madras Act, section 132 of the latter leads to the same result, and I must hold that a sale in execution of a decree for rent in a Revenue Court passes the property to the purchaser free of all encumbrances except those specified in section 125.

This second appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

KUMARASWAMI SASTRI, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed a suit in the Revenue Court against the 3rd defendant for arrears of rent, got a money-decree and in execution sold the holding. The plaintiff, who claimed to be a mortgagee under a registered deed of mortgage, dated 6th May 1910, sued for a declaration that the sale in execution was subject to his mortgage. The District Munsif was of opinion that inasmuch as the sale was in execution of a simple money decree, the decree holders must be presumed to have given up their lien on the holding conferred by section 5 of the Estates Land Act and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed the decree and held that the charge was not affected by the form of the decree.

It is argued for the appellant that the charge created by section 5 of the Estates Land Act is a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act so as to attract to it the provisions of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure and that consequently the sale of the property charged in execution of a simple money-decree will not bind a mortgagee or prevent him from redeeming. It is also argued on the strength of the observations of Petheram, C. J., in Tariniprosad Roy v. Narayan Kumari (1) that the sale in execution of a simple money-decree for rent would have no higher effect than any other sale in execution of a money-decree.

As regards the first contention I do not think that rent due by a tenant to his landlord which may be payable either in kind or in money can be said to be a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act, which expressly refers to the security being only for the payment of money. It is extremely unlikely that the Legislature intended that landlords who receive their rent in kind should be on a different footing from those who receive the rent in money and that while the former are untrammelled by the provisions of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure the latter are bound by them.

In Srimati Moharunee Dasya v. Harindra Lal Roy (5) it was pointed out that there was no strict analogy between a charge for rent and a mortgage. In Fotick Chunder Dey Sircar v. E. G. Foley (4) it was held that rent due by a tenant, which by virtue of section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was a charge on the holding, was not a charge within the meaning of section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act. And a similar view was taken by Mookerjee, J., in Royzuddi Sheik v. Kali Nath Mookerjee (3). In Gopi Nath Mahapatra v. Kashi Nath Beg (6) the purchaser in execution of a rent-decree was held to have priority over a purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree: and reference was made to section 73 of the Transfer of Property Act, which enacts that where property is sold for arrears of rent the mortgagee is entitled to enforce his mortgage against the surplus sale-proceeds.

Reliance has been placed by the appellant's Vakil on the observations in Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar (2), to the effect that in construing the words "mortgage" and "charge" for the purpose of the Limitation Act, the definitions of the Transfer of Property Act should be applied in the absence of any definition in the Limitation Act. These observations do not lay down an imperative rule of construction, but only indicate that in the absence of any repugnancy, Courts will adopt the definition in a substantive enactment, when they have to construe other Acts where the same words are used. The fact that rent is not necessarily payable in money renders the definition of a charge in section 100 of the Transfer of Property Act inapplicable. I think the view taken by the Calcutta High Court is sound and see no reason to differ from the decisions above referred to.

On the second question I am of opinion that a sale in execution of a money-decree for rent in a suit under section 77 of the Estates Land Act passes title free from all encumbrances, except when the encumbrance falls within section 125 of the Act. Section 5 declares that the rent of ryoti land together with any interest which may be due in respect thereof shall be a first charge on the holding. Under the Act the landlord can recover the rent due in these ways: (1) by distraint and sale of moveable property; (2) by a sale through the Collector; and (3) by a suit under section 77 of the Act in a Revenue Court and sale in execution of the decree passed therein. So far as distraint and sale by the Collector are concerned, there can be little doubt that the sale would confer a title on the purchaser free from all encumbrances except such as are contemplated in section 125 and there seems to be no reason why the intervention of a decree for rent should make any difference if the provisions of Order XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure do not apply. The following observations of Mr. Ameer Ali in his commentaries on section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, when dealing with Tariniprosad Roy v. Narayan Kumari (1), are in point:—"There is no warrant in the provisions of the Act for holding that a difference in the form of the action would alter the rights of the landlord relating to the enforcement of his decree for arrears of rent. If the suit is for rent and the decree is for rent, the absence of a declaration in the ordering part of the decree that the decretal amount is a charge on the tenure or holding would not, it is submitted, alter the character of the decree, BARKHURDAR V. CHATTA MAL.

the effect of which, under the law, is to make the rent a first charge on the tenure or holding in respect of which the arrears are claimed."

The observations of Petheram, C. J., in Tariniprosad Roy v. Narayan Kumari (1) are dissented from in Surto Lal v. Wilson (7) and in Royuddi Sheik v. Kali Nath Mookerjee (8). Mookerjee, J., was of opinion that the consequence which follows from the provision that rent is a first charge upon an under-tenure is that a sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent produces the effect described in Chapter XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which refers to sales for arrears under a decree and which provides for a title free from all except certain specified encumbrances to the purchaser.

It has been argued for the appellant that, as there is no section in the Estates Land Act similar to section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the decisions above referred to have no application. Section 65 provides that where a tenant is a permanent tenure-holder or a raiya, holding at fixed rates or an occupancy raiya, he shall not be liable to ejectment for arrears of rent but his tenure or holding shall be liable to sale in execution of a decree for the rent thereof, and the rent shall be a first charge thereon. As observed by the Privy Council in Arthur Henry Forbes v. Maharaja Bahadur Singh (8) section 65 is not a happily worded section and the clause refers to "rent being a first charge" and the words "seem from their collocation to have been inserted as an after-thought without sufficient consideration of their applicability to the rest of the provisions contained in the section." The Estates Land Act contains provisions in different sections which, in effect, reproduce all the provisions of section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 5 of the Estates Land Act provides that rent due by a ryot shall be a first charge. Section 6 gives a ryot rights of permanent occupancy. Section 77 gives the landlord the right to recover arrears of rent in a Revenue Court, and section 132 provides that the provisions of Chapter VI shall be applicable, so far as may be, to the execution by a Revenue Court of any decree for arrears of rent. It will thus be seen that the absence of any separate section like section 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act makes really no difference in the scheme of the Estates Land Act and does not render the reasoning adopted by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court inapplicable.

Sections 111 to 131 relate to sales by the Collector on the application of the landlord to whom rent is due, and section 125 enacts that the purchaser will only take the holding subject to "any right or interest which the ryot has created therein with the landlord's permission in writing registered and subject to any encumbrances created before the passing of the Act." It seems to me that the combined effect of sections 125 and 132 is to give the same rights to a purchaser in execution of a decree for rent, there being nothing in the Act repugnant to such a construction.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the purchaser in execution of a decree for rent gets the properties free from encumbrances, except such as are specially reserved by the provisions of the Estates Land Act. The second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

satisfied and for recovery of excess balance realised by mortgagee, dismissal of—Redemption, suit for, maintainability of.

Plaintiff mortgagor brought a suit against the defendant mortgagee, claiming that the latter had realised more than was due to him under the mortgage and asking for a decree for Rs. 100. The Court held that the mortgage had not been paid off and dismissed the suit. Subsequently the plaintiff brought a suit to redeem the mortgage:

Held, that the suit for redemption was barred by Order II, rule 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional Divisional Judge, Multan, dated the 5th May 1913.

Mr. Niaz Ali, for the Appellant.

Mr. Govind Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case mortgaged their land to the defendants in 1873. The mortgage was with possession. A portion of the land was redeemed in 1890 and for some reason or other the defendants allowed the plaintiffs to re-take possession of the rest. In 1909 the defendants sued the plaintiffs in the Revenue Court for the value of produce on certain wells. The plaintiffs urged that the defendants had already realised more than the full sum due to them under the mortgage. The Revenue Court, acting under section 98 of the Tenancy Act, referred the parties to a civil suit, and the plaintiffs then brought a civil suit, claiming that the defendants had realised even more than was due to them under the mortgage and asking for a decree for Rs. 100. This suit was dismissed, the Civil Court holding that the mortgage debt had not been paid off. The plaintiffs now sue to redeem on payment of Rs. 300 or whatever other sum may be found to be due under the mortgage. The first Court gave a decree for redemption on payment of Rs. 240-2-6, but the learned Divisional Judge on appeal dismissed the suit as barred by Order II, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code.

The plaintiffs appeal, urging that order II, rule 2, is no bar as the cause of action is not the same in the two suits. We are unable to find any different causes of action. It is the existence of the mortgage which gives the plaintiffs a right to sue for redemption. That mortgage was existing at the time when the former suit was instituted, though the plaintiffs did not then choose to admit it. It would be idle for the plaintiffs now to contend that the mortgage was not in existence at the time when the former suit was instituted, for if it was not in existence then, it is clear that it cannot be in existence now, for nothing has occurred since the date of the former suit to revive an extinguished mortgage or to create a new one. And if the mortgage be not in existence now, there is nothing which the plaintiffs can now sue to redeem. As the mortgage was in existence at the date of the former suit, the plaintiffs could have sued then for redemption, and not having done so the present suit is barred by Order II, rule 2. For the plaintiffs it is contended that a mortgagor may sue to redeem more than once, and that a mortgagor who has sued and obtained a decree for redemption but has failed to execute that decree within the period of limitation allowed by law is not debarred from bringing a subsequent suit to redeem. This may be so but it has nothing to do with Order II, rule 2, which provides a bar to a subsequent suit for a relief which has not been claimed in the former suit. The rulings [Bhav. Balaji v. Hari Nilkanthrao (1), Laluchand v. Girjappa (2) and Ram Din v. Bhup Singh (3)] cited by the learned Divisional Judge support his decision.

We uphold the decree of the Divisional Judge dismissing the suit and dismiss this appeal with costs.

A collusive decree obtained against some of the co-parceners in a joint family on a sham transaction is not binding on the other co-parceners. Where joint family property is sold in execution of such a decree, the co-parceners are entitled to get the sale set aside and to sue for the recovery of their shares. They are not, however, entitled to recover the whole property and the decree-holder is entitled to the shares of his judgment-debtors. [p. 805, col. 2 p. 806, col. 1.]

Where specific properties are sold in Court auction, it is not necessary that there should be a separate suit for partition for the allotment and ascertainment of the shares. Partition may be directed in the suit itself and the plaintiff may be given his share. [p. 806, cols. 1 & 2.] (Authorities reviewed.)

The decree-holder purchaser cannot claim against the plaintiffs, who were no parties to the collusive decree based on a non-existent debt, an equitable remedy such as that implied by subrogation. [p. 808, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Arcot, in Appeal Suit No. 38 of 1915, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tirukoilur, in Original Suit No. 1430 of 1913.

This second appeal coming on for hearing on the 10th and 11th of September 1917, the Court delivered the following JUDGMENT.—The District Judge has based his decision largely on Court Exhibits I and II, which he admitted as evidence produced on the Court's own motion. He states that these documents are conclusive on the point of fact.

Order XL, rule 27, of the Code of Civil Procedure makes it imperative that an Appellate Court should record its reasons for admitting additional evidence whenever additional evidence is allowed to be produced.

Apart from the irregularity arising from the omission to comply with this rule, we think that in fairness these documents should not have been relied on for the purpose of proving that the properties attached by the 3rd defendant (plaintiff in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909) were treated as the joint properties of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in this case (defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909) without giving the 3rd defendant, who was examined as 1st defence witness at the original trial, an opportunity of explaining the circumstances under which he made the application to attach those properties and his admission in the application. In considering the other evidence of joint dealing with the property, the District Judge has not considered and met the possibility of the explanation suggested by the District Munsif for the joint execution of the mortgage deed to Abboy Chetti by plaintiff and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 being true; and he also appears to have overlooked the point, which the District Munsif noticed, that the plaintiff's evidence as to the purchase of the plaintiff properties by sale of ancestral properties must be hearsay, when he spoke to what occurred when he was only 2 years old.

We think that it is necessary to call for a fresh finding from the District Judge on the question whether the plaintiff has any interest in the properties.

If he finds this question in the affirmative, he will also return a finding on issue No. 3 which he has left undetermined.

Findings should be returned within two months from this date. Ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of South Arcot submitted the following

FINDINGS.—This is a case which has been remanded to me for findings on the question, "Whether the plaintiff has any interest in the properties?" and secondly, if the above issue is found in the affirmative, "If the sale is to be set aside, to what equities, if any, is the 3rd defendant entitled?"

It has been pointed out by the High Court that I have fallen into an irregularity in not complying with Order XLII, rule 27, of the Civil Procedure Code in relying on Court Exhibits I and II which I admitted as evidence produced on my own motion, in that I did not record the reasons for admitting this further evidence. It is also observed that there was great hardship on the 3rd defendant in admitting this in evidence, because he was not given an opportunity of meeting this document which contradicted his evidence. It is brought to my notice by the learned Vakil for the appellant that as a matter of fact the subject of these two Exhibits I and II was brought to the notice of the 3rd defendant when he gave his evidence in the Court and that he then had an opportunity of explaining the fact, which must have been present to his memory, that he attached the property as being the property of the defendants. However, the man is since dead and in view of the High Court's observation I do not think it advisable that I should rely on these documents, nor record a reason at this stage why I should admit them, because in any case one obvious explanation and observation attaches to them, that the general conduct of the parties might have led the 3rd defendant, who would not be intimately acquainted with family affairs, to believe the property to be joint family property and it is not the conduct or the admissions of a third party, as the 3rd defendant was, which can affect the nature of the ownership of any given bit of property. The learned Vakil for the appellant brings it to my notice that the decisions in Indar Sahai v. Shaim Bahadur (1) and Madhavaiya Chetty v. Damodaram Chetty (2) are a clear basis for holding that, although there may be no nucleus of family property, where the family work together and live together and eat together and treat the property as joint property, they make a joint family even if there has been no original nucleus of family property.

As regards the observations of the District Munsif with reference to the joint execution of the mortgage deed to Abboy Chetti by the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, I have had my attention directed to it in argument and I have given my attention to it as directed by the order of reference of their Lordships of the High Court; and I think it is right to observe that this explanation by the District Munsif, that it was possible that the sons were also joined in the execution of this document as they were naturally required to do as a matter of safety by the mortgagee, is an explanation which was open to the parties and yet was not made by the 3rd defendant. But as regards the explanation that the execution of the mortgage deeds Exhibits I and X to Shroff Abboy Chetti might show that the plaintiff properties were thrown into the common stock and enjoyed by the family jointly though acquired by a single member, that does in fact appeal to me and that is in fact my final view. The decision in Thyrlambeal v. Krishna Pattar (3) is an exact decision in point. As regards the Full Bench case in Ethirajulu Naidu v. Govindarajulu Naidu (4) I have to observe with great respect that it seems to me that a good deal would turn on the date of the Will in question. If after treating the property in every way as joint property, the acquirer at his very last gasp makes a Will disposing of it as if it was still his sole self-acquired property, I think it would be open to the other members of the joint family to show that by his action in treating the property as joint property and thus keeping the family together they were prevented from going out in the world and setting up on their own account, and, therefore, it was not open to him, just before his death, to execute a Will which reversed the tacit agreement among them. If, on the other hand, in such a series of circumstances as are detailed in Ethirajulu Naidu v. Govindarajulu Naidu (4) the acquirer of the property made and registered a Will 3 or 4 years before his death, that would be a very different matter. However, though I venture to express this proviso, my present finding is not given in opposition to the decision in Ethirajulu Naidu v. Govindarajulu Naidu (4) but because it seems to me, having regard to the provisions of Exhibit X, dated 1904, and Exhibit I, dated 1908, that after setting forth most clearly that it was self-acquired property it is stated with equal clearness and precision that the property is in the joint possession of all the members of the family. And this is exactly the course and conduct which, according to the ruling in Madhavaiya Chetty v. Damodaram Chetty (2), where the family all live together, is enough to finally invest the property with the character of joint family property. The learned Vakil for the 4th respondent would wish to argue from Ram Kishen Das v. Tanda Mal (5) that there can be no joint family unless there is a nucleus of joint family property. But the decision in 1912 Madras Weekly Notes [Madhavaiya Chetty v. Damodaram Chetty (2)] is exactly opposed to such a view. It is perfectly true that the evidence as to the property having been acquired with the grandfather's own money is mere hearsay, as the High Court has been pleased to point out to me, and it is true that in certain cases, as set out in the decision in Jangi Nath v. Janki Nath (6), a single owner of a property may for certain reasons, and to avoid family quarrels, associate with himself persons who in reality have no joint title and may afterwards insist on his own full separate rights. Personally I incline to the view that this is not a line of conduct which should be encouraged or which in the end conduces to the peace and welfare of families [to quote the Privy Council in Lala Muddun Gopal Lal v. Khikhinda Koer (7)] because it seems to me that it is substituting for a temporary disagreement an inevitable, bitterly-contested law suit, which will certainly go as far as the Privy Council if the family funds or credit permit. However that may be, the present is not such a case. Here there has been a living together in one house ever since the family migrated to Sandaipettai on account of the great famine of 1876-77. A house was bought and eventually land; and this land is the subject of the present litigation. The oral evidence on the side of the plaintiff is indeed meagre and a great part of the evidence he gives as his own witness is false. But the learned District Munsif found as a fact that the plaintiff and the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have been living all along and messing together and the plaintiff's present statement to the contrary is a deliberate falsehood. This fact, while lending great weight to the theory of collusion in the present suit, is also a very important one in deciding whether the family have been throwing all their income such as it is into one joint stock. Taken with the contents of Exhibits I and X, I am satisfied that the property was altered into joint family property with the full final consent of the father who acquired it and for this reason I find the issue in the affirmative that the plaintiff has an interest in the properties.

As regards the 3rd issue the learned Vakil for the respondent wishes me to go once more over the whole question of fraud and to show that on account of the fraud being non-existent and the pro-notes being executed with legitimate purposes, his client is entitled to re-payment of the following sums of money, Rs. 600 for Exhibit I, Rs. 224 under Exhibit C and Rs. 300 towards the discharge of Exhibit VI. He argues from the decision in Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Co., Ltd. (8) that the 3rd defendant is entitled in equity to have these sums made a charge on the property as there is no evidence to rebut the fact of payment; for, as he points out, P. W. No. 1 (the 2nd defendant) admits in evidence that Rs. 40 is due from him on the pro-notes for which Exhibit C was substituted. On the other hand my attention has been drawn to the Privy Council decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (9), by which it is said that the sale of joint family property by only one or two members excluding a person who is a common co-sharer with them has no effect whatsoever and cannot bind the property at all. Thus there is no equity for the 3rd defendant retaining his two-thirds of the suit property nor for his getting his money back. It seems to me that this is the decision which I must apply in the present case and that my finding on the 3rd issue is the same as the lower Court's, viz., that the 3rd defendant (who is now represented by the 4th respondent) is not entitled to any equities in this case. Although I base my decision on the ruling in the Privy Council cases noted above and not on the finding as regards fraud—because it seems to me that I am not bound or justified in reviewing my finding on that point that there was fraud in the matter—if I take that finding as holding good, I will also say that on account of the fraud practised in the matter to which the 3rd defendant was necessarily a party he is not entitled to any equities in the case. But my finding as given above is independent of the finding on the question of fraud, which as it seems to me has been excluded from the scope of the reference. I am corrected by the learned Vakil for the respondent as regards his arguments based on 33 Allahabad [Ram Kishen Das v. Tanda Mal (5)]. He points out that his argument was that there is no presumption as to the existence of joint family property and any one who alleges it must prove it. This, of course, I concede, but he proceeded to argue as stated above that there must necessarily be a nucleus of joint family property before anything can be added to it, and this is not a correct statement of the law. Allowing, as I do, that all the burden of proof rests entirely on the plaintiff in such a case as this, it seems to me that he has discharged that burden and proved that he has an interest in the plaint properties.

This second appeal came on for final hearing on the 17th April 1918, after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court upon the issues referred by the High Court for trial.

Messrs. T. R. Vencatrama Sastri and M. S. Vencatrama Aiyar, for the Appellants.—The District Judge erred in passing a decree in favour of the plaintiff for the whole of the joint properties. Even on the finding of fraud such a decree is not warranted. Here is a case of a Court sale and not of a private alienation. The decree in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909 by the appellant (3rd defendant) against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was found to be a sham and a collusive decree and was in respect of a fictitious and non-existent debt. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were participes criminis in the fraud and their suit to set aside the sale was dismissed. They have no equities to ask for their shares in proceedings had at their instance and they cannot be permitted to obtain an indirect benefit by setting up the plaintiff to claim the whole property on their behalf. The plaintiff can only lay claim to his share in the joint family property. Kama Row v. Nukamma (10).

Whatever may be the rights of a private alienee, the claim of the 3rd defendant-appellant rests upon his sale certificate and it passes at least the $\frac{2}{3}$ shares of defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

The 3rd defendant's rights can be worked out in this suit alone and he need not be driven to bring a general suit for partition. It is settled law that the alienation by a co-parcener is binding on him to the extent of his share. In this case, the plaintiff will not be prejudiced by the shares being determined and assigned.

Lastly, Rs. 280 of the purchase amount paid by the 3rd defendant-appellant was used to pay 2 decrees which were equally binding on plaintiff. He also redeemed an othi by paying Rs. 600. Plaintiff is bound to pay to the appellant $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of these amounts. The appellant is entitled to relief in the nature of subrogation. Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Co. Ltd. (8) and Chama Swami v. Padula Anandu (11).

Mr. C. Padmanabaiyar, for Respondent No. 1.—The appellant, who obtained the decree in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909, was an active abettor of the fraud practised on the plaintiff and on the Court. The decree was fraudulent and collusive and the debt or claim in respect of which the decree was obtained was found to be fictitious. The decree-holder should be treated as having acquired nothing by the decree. His position is no better than that of a trespasser. His purchase at Court-auction should be traced back to the earlier proceedings and the decree and when these latter were tainted with fraud, the auction sale and the certificate which purports to convey title to the appellant should be treated as a nullity. Plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to eject the appellant as a trespasser and he could sue on behalf of his co-sharers also.

(10) 31 M. 485; 18 M. L. J. 576; 4 M. L. T. 331.

(11) 31 M. 439; 3 M. L. T. 395; 18 M. L. J. 306.

NADHAMUNI IYYAN v. APPU ODAYAN.

Assuming that appellant acquired the rights of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by his purchase, he can get no relief in this suit against the plaintiff. At the best the right secured by the appellant is only an inchoate right to enforce partition of his alienor's share. He cannot claim to be entitled to any specific items of property by reason of his purchase. In Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (12) the Privy Council gave the son possession of the entire property as against the holder of the decree against the father. See also Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (13), Ramanna v. Venkata (14) and Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (16).

The appellant is not entitled to any equities in the nature of subrogation as against plaintiff. There can be no such relief where the very foundation of the claim is tainted with fraud. The equity does not arise by the mere fact that plaintiff was benefited by the payments. The cases cited by the appellant's Vakil do not apply. In Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Co. Ltd. (8) and Ummachakutti v. Ummekutti Haji (16) the payments were made by persons to whom real sales were effected by persons who owned the properties, but they were held to be in fraud of creditors, and, therefore, set aside. In this case no consideration was paid by him for the notes on which he sued.

Mr. T. R. Vencatrama Sastri, in reply.—There is no analogy in the position of the appellant with that of a trespasser. It is only plaintiff that is left unaffected by the decree in the prior suit, Original Suit No. 133 of 1909. The rights of the other co-parceners are subservient to that decree, which is binding on them until it is vacated by proper proceedings instituted by them for the purpose. The certificate of sale passes to the appellant the title of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the properties.

(16) 29 Ind. Cas. 583.

It is not necessary to drive the appellant to a suit for a general partition. Where there are also properties not comprised in the decree, such a course may be necessary. Here, however, the decree in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909 comprises all the properties in the family. The rights and equities of the parties may be worked out in this suit itself without the plaintiff being in any way prejudiced by it. In the Privy Council case, Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (12), the Privy Council stated that the purchaser was entitled to have the rights acquired by him by purchase ascertained by partition. In Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (12) and Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (13) their Lordships were not dealing with the question of likely prejudice to the parties if a partition were worked out in the co-parcener's suit itself. In Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrachpal (17) such a right is recognised. In none of the cases was the point expressly considered as to how the alienor's equity was to be worked out. In any event, the observations in those cases are beside the point as they do not relate to purchases at Court-auction.

JUDGMENT.

SPENCER, J.—My learned brother has fully discussed the questions of law which have been raised in the arguments upon the 2nd appellant's memorandum of objections and I have little to add to what he has written in the judgment he is about to deliver.

We must accept the learned District Judge's findings on the issues referred to him. I think that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover more than his 3rd undivided share and that the decree in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909 is binding on defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were parties to it.

I am further of opinion that on the District Judge's finding as to fraud and on the principle that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands, the 3rd defendant, having been a party to a collusive decree based upon a non-existent debt, cannot ask as against a person who was not a party to that decree for an equitable remedy such as that implied by subrogation [vide Karuppan Ambalagaran v. Muhammad Sakuth Levvai (18)]. The suit must be remanded to the lower Court for having a partition of the plaintiff's share effected by metes and bounds and for passing a final decree for the possession of the share allotted to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff will get costs throughout proportionate to the value of his share. The defendants will bear their own costs throughout. The lower Court's decree will be modified accordingly.

KRISHNAN, J.—The learned District Judge has returned findings on the issues remitted to him, adversely to the appellant and he has filed a memorandum of objections to them.

On the 1st issue the learned Judge finds that the plaint properties were treated as joint family property with the full consent of the father long before the decree in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909 and the sale in execution of it, and that, therefore, the plaintiff has a share in them. It is objected that this is a new case which had not been set up previously by the plaintiff and that the 3rd defendant has been prejudiced by such a new case being now made out against him. Plaintiff had stated in the plaint that the properties were "common family properties" without specifying how; on the other hand the 3rd defendant had alleged that they were 1st defendant's self acquisitions. Though there was no direct issue on this question, the parties treated the second part of the 1st issue as raising it and evidence was given about it by both sides. The plaintiff's evidence was not only that they were purchased from family funds but also that they were dealt with by his father and other members of the family as joint property. The District Judge has now accepted the latter portion of his case, though he had originally found that the properties were purchased with joint family funds. There is, however, no ground for saying that the present finding amounts to the setting up of a new case for the plaintiff.

All the evidence was on record and the finding is on such evidence. I do not think the 3rd defendant can properly be said to be prejudiced, nor has he shown that any evidence was properly omitted by him from being adduced. As this is the only objection to the finding as to the joint character of the property, and as it fails, we must accept it.

The next question is, what relief the plaintiff is entitled to on that finding. He claims the right to recover the whole property, whereas the 3rd defendant contends that he should be given only his one-third share. The District Judge has accepted the plaintiff's contention. The plaint items were attached and sold in execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909 obtained by the 3rd defendant against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, the father and brother of plaintiff; and they were purchased by the 3rd defendant himself. The Munsif has found that the promissory notes on which that decree was obtained were sham transactions and without consideration and the decree was a collusive and fraudulent one probably intended to harass a creditor. On this finding plaintiff's rights in the property were clearly unaffected by the decree and sale, as he was no party to them. The District Judge has concurred in this finding of fraud. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had themselves brought Original Suit No. 965 of 1912 to set aside the decree and sale; but that suit failed for non-payment of costs within the time fixed. They can no longer sue to avoid the sale; and being parties themselves to the fraudulent decree they would have, even otherwise, no right to recover the plaint properties. See Kama Row v. Nukamma (10). So far, therefore, as their two-thirds share is concerned, it must thus be taken that the 3rd defendant's sale certificate is valid against them and the title to their share has passed to him. That being so, it will not be right to allow the plaintiff to recover the whole property and thus enable defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to get their shares indirectly through him when they cannot get them directly, unless it is strictly necessary to allow plaintiff to do so to work out his own rights. It has not been attempted to be shown that plaintiff would in any way be prejudiced as to his own rights in the properties if partition should be directed in this suit itself and he given his share.

It was, however, urged that the 3rd defendant should be looked upon as a trespasser and that it was plaintiff's right as a member of the joint family to eject him altogether from the properties. This argument fails, as the 3rd defendant is not altogether a trespasser but has got the rights of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the properties.

Then it was argued that even if we look upon the 3rd defendant as the Court auction purchaser of the shares of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, he is still not entitled to resist the plaintiff's suit to recover the whole property, his right being only to bring a suit for partition. In support of this proposition the learned Vakil relied on the Privy Council judgments in Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (12) and Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (13) and Ramanna v. Venkata (14) and Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (15). Though the alienee of a share of an undivided co-parcener is not strictly entitled to possession of any property before suing for partition, he having only an equity to enforce a partition; still in a case like the present where he is in possession of specific properties, it is not necessary to eject him and drive him to a fresh partition suit, as the rights of the parties could be worked out in this suit itself without prejudice. In the case in Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh (12) their Lordships of the Privy Council no doubt confirmed the decree giving the son possession of the whole property purchased by the holder of the decree against his father, but they added a declaration that the purchaser was entitled to have the share and interest purchased by him ascertained by partition. The case in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (13) takes a similar view. But neither of them is in my opinion against allowing the alienor's equity being worked out in the suit by the co-parcener, if it can be done without prejudice to the plaintiff. That question was not before their Lordships in the two cases cited. On the other hand, they have themselves recognised that a partition may be directed in the co-parcener's suit itself; for in the case of Ramkishore Kedarnath

v. Jainarayan Ramrachpal (17) their Lordships, while holding that the co-parcener not party to the alienation was not bound to sue for partition, expressly say "that it may well be that it is open to the alienee to insist that he stands in the shoes of his alienor as to the latter's share on partition and that the Court then would itself at the alienee's instance direct partition in that suit." The case in Ramanna v. Venkata (14) was one of a gift by a Hindu father which was found to be invalid and not binding on the son or on the father. The learned Judges, while giving effect to the power of interdiction by the son in those circumstances, recognised that in the case of a sale the alienation should be upheld to the extent of the alienor's share as a matter of equity; which, however, did not exist in that case. They did not consider how the alienor's equity was to be worked out; and moreover in the present case we have a Court auction sale binding on defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and, therefore, the observations in that case do not apply to this case. The decision in Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (15) is not in point here and the observations in it are not inconsistent with the view I am taking; in fact the observation in the case in Ramkishore Kedarnath v. Jainarayan Ramrachpal (17) above referred to is cited and followed.

Where co-parceners alienate their shares in specific properties, the other co-parceners have a right to sue for partition and for recovery of their shares in those properties alone without suing for a general partition; the validity of such suits has now been settled by the Full Bench in Iburaamsa Rowthan v. Thiruvankatasami Naick (19). Though no doubt an alienee of a co-parcener's share in a specific property has to sue for general partition to work out his rights, still where, as in the present case, there do not seem to be any other properties to be divided than the suit ones there is no object in making him bring a fresh suit. The District Judge has relied on the case in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1917) M. W. N. 439 (9) (the same case is reported in I. L. R. 39 All. 437)

(19) 7 Ind. Cas. 559; 34 M. 263; (1910) M. W. N. 380; 8 M. L. T. 269; 20 M. L. J. 743.

NIDHAMUNI IYYAN v. APPU ODAYAN.

for his view that the 3rd defendant has no "equity" to get a two-thirds share in the properties: apparently he relies on the observation of Lord Shaw that "any deed of gift, sale or mortgage granted by one co-parcener on his own account of or over the joint family property is invalid; the estate is wholly unaffected by it and its entirety stands free of it." The observation refers to private alienations and does not apply to the present case, which is one of a Court sale; the right to attach and sell a co-parcener's share for his decree debt has been established by the decision of the Privy Council itself and has never been doubted. In our Presidency, even as regards private alienations it is settled law that one co-parcener may dispose of the ancestral undivided estate to the extent of his own share by private conveyance whether for value or by gift; and this was recognised and laid down by the Judicial Committee itself in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (13) above referred to. That being so, an alienation of the joint family property by one co-parcener will bind his share, though it may not bind the shares of the other co-parceners. Their Lordships cannot well be taken to have overruled this view as they do not refer to it at all. The Madras cases referred to by their Lordships were all cases in which the question was whether the amount borrowed under a mortgage could itself be considered an antecedent debt justifying a Hindu father in mortgaging his son's share also in the joint property. As stated above, we have here a case of a Court-sale but when the question is raised about a private alienation, the applicability of Sahu Ram-Chandra's case (9) may be considered with reference to the observations of the learned Chief Justice and of Mr. Justice Kumaraswami Sastri with reference to another point dealt with by the same case, in Peda Venkanna v. Sreenivasa Deekshatulu (20).

For the above reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiff should be given a decree only for his share in the plaint properties, which is admittedly one-third.

The next question is, whether there are any equities in favour of the third defendant. (20) 43 Ind. Cas. 225; 33 M. L. J. 519; 22 M. L. T. 334; 6 L. W. 649; (1918) M. W. N. 55; 41 M. 136.

ant. He states that Rs. 280 of the money he paid for the Court purchase was used to pay off two other decrees binding on the plaintiff and that he subsequently redeemed an othi binding on the property by paying Rs. 600. He claims that he should be paid one-third of these amounts by the plaintiff on his getting one-third of the property. Plaintiff on the other hand contends that the 3rd defendant is not entitled to any equities in his favour as against him, and both the lower Courts have accepted this view.

Whatever the rights of the 3rd defendant may be as against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, we must take it on the findings in this case that the decree in Original Suit No. 133 of 1909 was a collusive one for a non-existent debt and that the 3rd defendant was a party to the fraud by which it was obtained. His Court-auction purchase was in execution of that fraudulent decree and the payments he pleads were made as such purchaser. The very foundation of his present claim is thus tainted with fraud and it seems to me the lower Courts were, therefore, right in refusing to recognise any equity in his favour against plaintiff who was not involved in that fraud. His payments have no doubt enured to the benefit of the plaintiff but that consideration by itself is not sufficient to give rise to any equity; as for example in the case of volunteers where no equity is recognised as arising from such payments. The learned Vakil for the appellant relied on the cases in Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu (11), Palamalai Mudaliyar v. South Indian Export Co., Ltd. (8) and Ummachakutti v. Ummerkutti Haji (17). The two last cases referred to payments by persons to whom real conveyances had been executed by owners of property for consideration paid and which were only set aside against creditors as being in fraud of them. Those cases are clearly distinguishable from the present case, as here there was fraud from the very beginning and there was no consideration paid by the 3rd defendant for the notes sued on by him. This is a stronger case against allowing any equity than the one in Karuppan Ambalagaram v. Muhammed Sakuth Levvai (18), where subrogation was disallowed. In the case in Chama Swami v.

ISHAR v. SUNDAR.

Padala Anandu (11) there was no fraud at all; the sale to the person who paid off the prior mortgage failed because of a prior sale to another under whom some of the defendants claimed. I am, therefore, of opinion that the equitable doctrine of subrogation cannot be invoked here in 3rd defendant's favour against the plaintiff.

In the result I would give a decree for partition to plaintiff for his one-third share in the plaint properties and dismiss the suit as to the balance. Plaintiff will receive proportionate costs throughout. The case will go back to the 1st Court for a final decree.

Custom—Alienation—Occupancy rights, creation of, whether can be challenged by reversioners.

The creation of occupancy rights in land amounts to a transfer of valuable rights and can be challenged by the heirs of the proprietor in accordance with the well-recognised principles of customary law. [p 809, col. 2; p. 810, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 16th November 1914.

ORDER.

LESLIE JONES, J. (May 3, 1915)—One Munshi has, for a consideration which is called nazrana, created occupancy rights under section 6 of the Tenancy Act in favour of Sundar. The annual rent is to be 2 annas per rupee on the land revenue over and above the Government demand.

Munshi's collaterals sued for the usual declaration and in the first Court they obtained a decree, the Munsif finding, though without reference to authority, that the transaction amounted to an alienation, and that even if consideration was proved, necessity was not made out.

On appeal the District Judge dismissed the suit, without discussing the question of necessity, on a finding that the transaction could not be regarded as more than a creation of occupancy rights and that consequently, Faquir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad (1) being cited, it was not open to challenge by reversioners.

Notice was issued on the ground that no such plea had been taken. It does not, it is true, appear in the written pleas, and there were no written statements, but the plea must have been raised orally, as otherwise it is impossible to account for the first issue which the Munsif framed.

I think that it must be faced. The question is, of course, discussed at great length in Faquir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad (1), but as in point of fact the Division Bench which decided that case, were able to find that the transaction there under consideration did in fact amount to a sale, the discussion as to the result of a genuine creation of occupancy rights not amounting to a sale appears to me to be obiter.

In the present case it does not seem to be possible to hold that this transaction is a sale, and Counsel for the respondent has not been able to explain to me why it should be so regarded. At the same time the principle involved is one of very grave importance, because if the learned argument in Faquir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad (1) is sound, it opens the way to the uncontrolled transfer of rights which may be very much more valuable in some respects than those of a mortgage.

With all deference, I cannot avoid a suspicion that there may be a flaw in the argument to which I refer, and perhaps I may explain myself.

To follow the argument. B transfers to C with the consent of A. B's collaterals cannot object, because the transaction is valid under Statute Law. Equally the heirs of A, it is presumed, would have no locus standi. Why? I think because A has a statutory right to consent, and, moreover, A is not necessarily parting with a valuable right.

Then if B transfers to A, and A transfers to C, A's heirs cannot object. Why? It seems to me that one very good reason would be that A is parting with self-acquired property, whether he parts with it a year or ten years afterwards, and to that his reversioners could in no case object.

Again, why can A not have an equal right, in the first instance, to create occupancy rights in favour of C? I suggest that it is because he is parting with valuable rights which he has not himself acquired. There may, of course, be an ample answer to these suggestions and I have not had the benefit of any criticism. But in view of the importance of the matter and the doubts which I entertain, I am of the opinion that this appeal should go to a Division Bench, and I admit it accordingly.

I have since seen that the argument in Faqir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad (1) has been questioned in Nikka v. Gurdai (2).

JUDGMENT OF THE DIVISION BENCH.

The facts of the case are given in the order passed in Chambers by Leslie Jones, J., who referred the case to a Division Bench. The question which we have to decide is whether the creation of occupancy rights for a consideration can be challenged by the heirs of the person who created those rights. The lower Appellate Court relied upon Faqir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad (1), wherein the opinion was expressed (see pages 61, 62) that it is open to a landowner to create occupancy rights in his land and that as a general rule it is not open to the landowner's heirs to challenge his action. This opinion was based upon the view that if a tenant transfers his tenancy with the consent of his landlord his heirs cannot object. This latter view is, however, contrary to the decision reported as Puran Chand v. Mahesha (3), in which it was held, following the Full Bench ruling in Karam Din v. Sharaf Din (4), that the plaintiff as reversionary heir of an occupancy tenant was competent to dispute the validity of the alienation, in favour of a stranger, of his ancestor's occupancy rights, although such alienation had received the assent of his landlords and was made under Act XXVIII of 1868, the rights of the said landlords not being in question. Now, we agree with Leslie Jones, J., that the discussion in Faqir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad (1) as to the result of a genuine creation of occupancy rights was obiter, because the Division Bench which decided that case found that the transaction then in question did in fact amount to a sale. With all due deference to the Division Bench which decided the case reported as Faqir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad, (1) we think the decision in Puran Chand v. Mahesha (3) is correct. It appears to us that the consent of the landlord only validates a transfer of occupancy rights qua the landlord and that such consent cannot take away from the reversioners the inherent rights which they possess under the customary law to challenge an alienation of ancestral land made by a person whose reversioners they are. We have not, however, to decide this specific point in the present appeal. What we have to decide is whether the creation of occupancy rights for consideration by a landowner can be challenged by the landowner's heirs. Now, even if the creation of occupancy rights cannot be considered as a sale in the strict sense, it is undoubtedly a transfer of valuable rights in land. In the present case Munshi by creating occupancy rights in his land has parted with very valuable rights, and to hold that such a transfer cannot be contested by the heirs would, in the words of the referring Judge, open the door to the uncontrolled transfer of rights which may be very much more valuable in some respects than those of a mortgagee. We are unable to hold that Munshi's act in creating these occupancy rights was an act of management. We hold that the creation of occupancy rights, being a transfer of valuable rights, can be challenged by the heirs in accordance with the well-recognised principles of customary law.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of decree—Payment out of Court—Satisfaction not certified—Execution, application for—Suit by judgment-debtor for damages—Cause of action, —Damages, measure of—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 115, 120.

Where a decree-holder does not certify a payment made to him out of Court by the judgment-debtor towards the satisfaction of the decree under the provisions of Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, and takes out execution without giving credit for such payment, the judgment-debtor has a right to sue the decree-holder for any damage he may have suffered by the latter's neglect to certify and by the proceedings in execution. [p. 811, col. 1; p. 812, col. 1.]

Such a suit is one for breach of the implied promise to certify payment to the Court and to make it effectual in execution [p. 811, col. 1; p. 812, col. 1.]

In such a case the filing of the execution petition in itself gives a cause of action though no money may have been realized, and successive applications may give rise to successive breaches and fresh causes of action. If money is subsequently realized, that will give a fresh cause of action as a further breach of the covenant and the amount recovered will form the main portion of the damages; but where money is not realized, the damages awarded can only be by way of compensation for any injury caused to the judgment-debtor and for any loss he may have been put to by the attempted execution of a satisfied decree. Such a suit is governed by Article 115 and not by Article 120 of the Limitation Act. [p. 812, col. 2; p. 811, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 9 of 1916, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Koilpatti, in Original Suit No. 299 of 1914.

FACTS appear from the judgment of Krishna, J.

Mr. K. R. Rangasawmy Aiyangar, for the Appellants.—There is no cause of action for the plaintiff's suit. If he is entitled to maintain the suit at all, the cause of action dates from defendant's failure to certify payment under the provisions of Order XXI, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. The suit is premature as no money was, at its date, realised in execution. Till money is realised plaintiff sustains no damages and he is not, in any event, entitled to ask for return of the money paid by him to the defendant. Sriramulu v. Dalayya (1).

The suit is barred by limitation. The defendant's first execution application was in 1910 and plaintiff should have brought his suit within three years from that date. Having failed to do that, he cannot rely on any subsequent execution application as giving a fresh starting point or as affording a fresh cause of action.

Mr. V. Viswanatha Sastri, for the Respondent.—The cause of action for the suit is the breach of an implied promise by the defendant to certify payment to Court and make it effectual in execution. Vide Full Bench decision in Viraraghava Reddi v. Subbakka (2). When the defendant received the decree amount out of Court he must be deemed impliedly to have given an undertaking to abstain from executing the decree for the same amount.

The action is not premature, as plaintiff need not wait till defendant realised money in execution. The damage has been caused by the very fact of execution and plaintiff is entitled to compensation for the mental pain caused by an unlawful coercive process and to incidental expenses incurred by him in resisting an unlawful claim.

(2) 5 M. 397; 6 Ind. Jur. 633; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 275 (F. B.).

GOPALASAMI NAICK v. NAMMAWAR NAICK.

The suit is not barred. Article 120 of the Limitation Act is applicable. In any event, though a claim for damages is barred for the unlawful execution application of 1910, plaintiff is in time to enforce whatever damages were caused to him by the second application of 1914. Successive breaches of the covenant give rise to fresh causes of action.

JUDGMENT.

PHILLIPS, J.—Appellants' chief contention is that plaintiff can have no cause of action until money has been recovered from him in execution. In Viraraghava Reddi v. Subbakka (2), a similar suit was held by the majority of this Court to be one to recover damages for the breach of the implied promise to certify the payment to the Court and thereby make it effectual in execution. The third Judge, no doubt, based the right of suit on the failure to discharge a statutory duty. The two views are very similar, but the former is, I think, more accurate, for the duty of certifying satisfaction imposed by the Code of Civil Procedure can be performed at any time, and no period is prescribed for its performance, whereas if the cause of action be held to be the breach of an implied covenant not to execute the decree, any application for execution would be a breach of the covenant and would give a right to sue for damages. I think, therefore, that plaintiff had a cause of action, when the execution application of 1910 was filed, but a suit on that cause of action would now be barred under Article 115 of the Limitation Act. As plaintiff cannot act upon this breach of the covenant, he relies upon a subsequent breach in 1913, treating the first breach as condoned and in this view his suit is within time.

Treating the suit as one for damages, the measure of damages is not necessarily the sum paid by plaintiff in satisfaction of the decree together with subsequent interest, for that is the maximum amount of damages that plaintiff could suffer if the decree were actually executed and plaintiff could only claim that sum if it were actually recovered from him. In the present case it is necessary to consider how far plaintiff has been damaged by the filing of the execution application, which is the breach of covenant complained of. He would be entitled to all expenses incurred by him in defending the claim, and also to compensation for any moral or mental worry caused by the fact that an executable decree is unlawfully kept alive, and steps may be taken against the judgment-debtor at any moment. I, therefore, agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

KRISHNAN, J.—The facts necessary for the decision of this second appeal may be briefly stated as follows: A mortgage decree was obtained by the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 against the plaintiff and his sons in 1906. In 1907 plaintiff paid Rs. 500 towards this decree; this payment, though denied by defendants, has been found to be true by both the lower Courts. Plaintiff alleged a further payment of Rs. 40 but that has not been proved. Without certifying the payment of Rs. 500 and without giving credit for it, defendants applied for execution for the whole decree amount, first in July 1910 and then again in June 1913. In July 1914 plaintiff brought this suit, praying that the defendants may be directed to certify payment or to pay back the amount paid with interest at 18 per cent. The lower Courts disallowed the first prayer; the Munsif held that it could be granted only in execution proceedings under Order XXI, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, and no objection was taken to this view in the Appellate Court. The Munsif had dismissed the suit in toto as barred by limitation, but the District Judge has given a decree for Rs. 500 and interest at 18 per cent, as claimed.

The first point argued before us is that as no money had been realised in execution of the decree, plaintiff had no cause of action at all. We must, therefore, consider what the nature of the plaintiff's suit is and what his rights are. The nature of a suit like the one before us was considered by a Full Bench of this High Court in Viraraghava Reddi v. Subbakka (2) and though Kindersley, J., was of opinion that the suit should be taken as based on the ground of fraud or negligence on the part of the decree-holder in not certifying the payment to Court as he was under a statutory obligation to do, the majority consisting of Turner, C. J., and Muthuswami Aiyar, J., considered it to be "a suit to recover damages for the breach of the implied promise to certify the payment to the Court and thereby make it effectual in execution." I am prepared to follow the view of the majority that the suit is really one for damages for breach of implied contract. When a decree-holder receives from the judgment-debtor money outside Court in payment of the decree amount, if there is no express agreement between the parties at the time, it may properly be held that the decree-holder does so under an implied promise that he would certify that payment as required by law and that he would not execute the decree any more for the amount or realise the amount again in execution. If this is the implied contract, as I think it is, the breach will give rise to a cause of action; and it is clear that the decree-holder commits a breach as soon as he files his execution petition claiming the same amount again. It seems to me, therefore, that the filing of the execution petition in itself gives a cause of action, though no money may have been realised; and successive applications will give rise to successive breaches and fresh causes of action. If money is subsequently realised, that will give a fresh cause of action as a further breach of the covenant. In each case the amount of damages payable for the breach will have to be ascertained. Where money is realised from the judgment-debtor in execution over again, that amount, of course, will form the main portion of the damages; but where it is not so realised, as in the present case, the damages awarded can only be by way of compensation for any injury caused to plaintiff and for any loss that he may have been put to by the decree, which ought to have been treated as part satisfied, being attempted to be executed in full against him. That, of course, will not include the amount that has not yet been realised.

GOPALASAMI NAICK V. NAMMALWAR NAICK.

This view is to some extent supported by the ruling in Medai Kaliani Anni, In the matter of (3), though that case does not deal with the measure of damages. There the claim was treated as one based on the ground of breach of duty; but as already stated, I am inclined to think that is really a breach of an implied contract as held by the majority in the Full Bench. The case of Sriramulu v. Dalayya (1) has been cited to us as against this view. But that case contains no discussion of the law and no reasons are given for the view held, and I am unable to follow it. It overlooks the fact that coercive processes may be adopted in execution of a decree and considerable injury may be caused thereby to the judgment-debtor without any money being realised. If the decree-holder's action in taking out fresh execution was wrongful, there is no reason why he should not be liable in damages resulting from it. The ruling in Arunachella Pillai v. Appavu Pillai (4) is no longer law as it was departed from in the Full Bench in Viraraghava Reddi v. Subbakka (2). I, therefore, hold that the recovery of the decretal amount in execution was not essential to give a cause of action to the plaintiff and this suit is maintainable.

The next question argued is one of limitation. Respondent's Vakil contended that Article 120 should be applied. But that is a residuary Article and can be applied only if no other Article applies. In the view I am taking of the nature of the suit, it clearly falls under Article 115 so far as it claims refund of the money paid. The relief claimed by way of injunction to direct defendants to certify payment was disallowed by the first Court and not asked for in the Appellate Court and has been expressly abandoned before us by the respondent's Vakil, as he was entitled to do. It is not, therefore, necessary to discuss what Article applied to the suit with reference to that relief; nor is it necessary to consider whether such relief could be given in this suit.

We have a case here of two successive breaches of implied contract by two successive applications in execution, one made in 1910 and the other in 1913. So far as the claim is based on the first application it is barred by limitation as the suit was filed in 1914, i.e., more than three years from the date of the cause of action. But the plaintiff is entitled to damages resulting from the application in 1913, as he is within time for it. The decree of the lower Court is clearly erroneous in holding that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole of the money paid by him with 18 per cent. interest. If defendants had realised the money a second time, that would have formed a proper item of damages but not otherwise. There must be a finding on the question "what damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to as the result of defendants' execution application in 1913." Parties may adduce fresh evidence. Finding two months; objections seven days.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Tinnevely submitted the following

FINDING.—A finding is required on the question, "What damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to as the result of defendants' execution application in 1913."

The only evidence on this point is the evidence of the plaintiff. He stated before the Munsif that he obtained copies of the application made by the defendants for execution of their decree (Exhibits F and F-1); but admitted that he received no notice of these applications until after he had instituted his criminal complaint. To this Court he estimated his loss at about Rs. 200, but said that he spent this sum in applications and in the criminal case. He has given no details of what he spent in applications, nor specified to what matter these applications relate. He has not shown that he incurred any expenditure in consequence of the applications for execution made by the defendants; for it cannot be held that the criminal case entitles him to damages in consequence of the application for execution made by the defendants in 1913. He admits that his memory is bad; and it is not improbable that any expenditure incurred by him was made in the criminal case. I cannot accept his vague estimate of expenditure, and he has given no basis for estimating any damages incurred by him. I find that he has not proved satisfactorily that he is entitled to any damages in consequence of the defendants' execution application in 1913.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—Upon the finding that plaintiff has sustained no damages in connection with the execution proceedings he had no grounds for coming to Court. His suit must, therefore, be dismissed, but in the circumstances each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Second appeal from the decrees of the Divisional Judge, Lahore, dated the 26th January 1914.

Mr. Rambhaji Datta, for the Appellants.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties in this case, who are Dhani Brahmins of Kamalia and Jamal Pahar in the Montgomery District, have been held to be governed by ordinary agricultural custom in the matter of succession. Their pedigree-table is given at page 10 of the printed paper-book and need not be repeated here. The plaintiffs, who are the daughters' sons of the last male holder, have had to institute the present suit as mutation of the land left by his widow has been sanctioned in the names of his male collaterals. The case has had a prolonged life, having been instituted in 1911. The plaintiffs based their suit upon Hindu Law and it was first dismissed on the ground that they were governed by agricultural custom. This finding was upheld by the learned

BUDHI PARKASH v. CHANDER BHAN.

Divisional Judge. On appeal to the Chief Court it was held that the question whether parties were governed by custom could not be contested in the absence of a certificate, but that the Divisional Judge had wrongly excluded from consideration certain instances in favour of the plaintiffs on the ground that they related to non-ancestral property. It was also doubted whether any great part of the property was ancestral and the case was remanded for a decision on the issues, whether the land was ancestral and if not, whether there is a custom among Dhani Brahmins of Kamalia by which a brother's grandsons exclude daughters and daughters' sons from succession to non-ancestral property. The Subordinate Judge has now held that out of 400 kanals only an area of 33 kanals 6 marlas is ancestral. He has held, however, that by custom the collaterals exclude the daughters' sons in respect of acquired property. The District Judge in a brief note forwarding the case has doubted the decision regarding the ancestral character of part of the property and has otherwise agreed with the Subordinate Judge.

The main question in this case is one of Customary Law regarding the rights of collaterals among Dhani Brahmins of Kamalia to exclude daughters' sons in respect of acquired property. The onus of this issue was placed upon the collaterals in accordance with paragraph 23 (2) of Rattigan's Customary Law and it has to be seen how far this onus has been discharged. In the first place copies of the Wajib-ul-arz and the Riwaj-i-am of the Montgomery and other Districts have been relied on by the collaterals. These copies have been described by Mr. Agnew, Divisional Judge, and by the learned Subordinate Judge on remand. It is not necessary for us to deal with them at length, as in practically all these cases no distinction is made between inheritance to ancestral and acquired property. It has been held on frequent occasions by this Court that in the absence of a clear statement to the contrary an entry in a Riwaj-i-am or Wajib-ul-arz refers merely to ancestral property. At the time when these records of custom were prepared, acquisition of property by purchase or otherwise being of rare occurrence, no inquiry whatever took place regarding succession thereto. In only two of the extracts on the record is there any reference to acquired property. The first reference is in D3, an extract from the Riwaj-i-am of the Montgomery District which has been misinterpreted by Mr. Agnew. It is to the effect that daughters have no right of succession in the absence of male descendants, but that in the matter of gifts by a proprietor to daughters or others there is no distinction between ancestral and self-acquired property. It does not refer to the right of daughters to inherit acquired property in the presence of collaterals. D4 is practically to the same effect, with the addition that Brahmin proprietors have full power of alienation of ancestral or self-acquired property. These entries are in no way in favour of the collaterals. Indeed they show that in the matter of alienations Brahmin proprietors more nearly follow Hindu Law than the normal customary law of agriculturists, and under these circumstances the onus on these high class Hindus to prove a custom excluding daughters from inheritance to even acquired property in the absence of male descendants is by no means lightened.

There only remain the instances of the exclusion of daughters by collaterals in the inheritance to self-acquired property. As regards these instances, eleven have been considered to be proved by the learned Subordinate Judge on remand. These instances are somewhat in favour of the collaterals, though their value appears to have been exaggerated by the Subordinate Judge. In the first place, most of the instances refer to Brahmins leaving acquired and ancestral property. The proportionate values of the properties are not shown; nor is it clear whether the daughter was in any position to contest the claim of the male collaterals; nor whether the property left was of any real value to her. There is also no definite information regarding the age of the daughter or whether she had married and was living in a locality distant from the property. Moreover although in some cases there is documentary evidence that part of the property was self-acquired, the greater part of the evidence is oral and of little value. Many of the witnesses refer to events which took place before their birth. Also many of the instances most probably refer to land held by a joint Hindu family to which a daughter would have no right of inheritance. Other instances refer to land held by occupancy tenants to which a daughter has legally no claim. As for house property, Brahmins being usually non-proprietors in the village, the daughter again would have no claim in view of paragraph 231 (a) of Rattigan's Customary Law.

On the other hand, even admitting these instances to be of some value, there are strong reasons for refusing to admit that they have proved the case of the collaterals. Instances are bound to occur in which the rights of girls or women are overridden by their stronger male relations and in which they are unable to contest properly the actions of usurpers. To sum up the case, therefore, we consider that the collaterals have failed to establish any custom by which they are entitled to exclude daughters or daughters' sons from inheritance to acquired property.

There was some contest before us whether an area of 110 kunals belonging to Chah Brahmanwala in Jamal Pahar was ancestral or self-acquired. The common ancestor of the parties obtained the land in about 1822 by a lekha mukhi mortgage and at some time sank a well. In 1872 it is stated that his descendants had since then been in possession and that for the last 15 years the land had been lying unoccupied. The Subordinate Judge considered that it was only proved that the common ancestor had acquired mortgagee rights and that there was no proof that he had obtained the full proprietary rights in the land. The mere fact that the common ancestor sank a well does not in any way raise a presumption that at the time he was the proprietor. We do not for these reasons share the opinion of the District Judge that the land is ancestral.

The result is, therefore, that we accept the appeal and give plaintiffs a decree for the properties sued for excluding the shop and the land known as Khata Arazi Chah Tutwala in Kamalia and the joint Khata in the same well measuring respectively 31 kanals 18 marlas and 1 kanal 8 marlas referred to as Nos. 3 and 4 in the report of the Subordinate Judge. As plaintiffs have succeeded in respect of more than 11.126hs of their claim, we give them their full costs in all the Courts.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 2—Execution of decree—Court officer improperly holding sale—Suit for damages—Limitation.

Plaintiff's property having been advertised for sale in execution of a decree, he tendered the amount of the decree to the defendant, who was the Court Amin and whose duty it was under Order XXI, rule 69, of the Civil Procedure Code, to receive the money and not to proceed with the sale. The defendant, however, refused to accept the money and proceeded to hold the sale. The plaintiff brought a suit for damages against the defendant.

Held, that the basis of the suit being that the defendant had refused to accept the money which he was bound to accept under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, or that he had improperly held a sale purporting to be under the provisions of the Code, the suit was governed by Article 2, Schedule I, of the Limitation Act. [p. 816, cols. 1 & 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Meerut.

Mr. Sital Prasad Ghosh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed damages against the defendant on certain allegations which are set forth in the plaint. They are as follows:—There was a decree out against the plaintiff for a small sum of Rs. 205-13-0. The defendant was the Court Amin, whose duty it was to sell the plaintiff's property in execution of the decree. The plaintiff alleges that on the day of the sale he tendered the amount of the decree to the defendant, whose duty it was under Order XXI, rule 69, to receive the money and not proceed with the sale. The plaintiff goes on to allege that the defendant, being a friend of the decree-holder, refused to accept the money and proceeded with the sale, the result being that the plaintiff had to deposit the full purchase money which the auction-purchaser had bid for the property together with 5 per cent. as a condition precedent to getting the sale set aside. The defendant denied that the plaintiff had tendered him the money (and it does seem a little strange that the plaintiff would have allowed the property, which he alleges to be worth about Rs. 5,000, to be attached and advertised for sale sooner than discharge a decree for a trivial sum). However, these questions have not been gone into in the Court below. The learned District Judge, instead of allowing the case to be tried by the Munsif, took it on his own file because the conduct of a Court official was being challenged by the suit. We think his action in this respect was quite correct. The learned Judge held that the suit was barred by Article 2 of the Limitation Act. That Article provides a period of limitation of ninety days for suits brought for "compensation for doing or for omitting to do an act alleged to be in pursuance of any enactment in force for the time being in British India."

In the present case if the act of the defendant complained of be the alleged refusal to accept the money due on foot of the decree, the suit is based on the allegation that the defendant omitted to do an act which it was his duty to do under one of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, to receive the decretal money before sale. If on the other hand the act complained of be the proceeding to sell the property, again there can be no doubt that the complaint is that the defendant did an act, purporting to be under the Code but improperly, namely, to sell the property after the decretal amount had been tendered. The learned District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit as barred by Article 2 of the Limitation Act (it being admitted that the suit was not brought within ninety days of the alleged act of the defendant). As a matter of fact the suit was not instituted until after the expiration of about nineteen months of the act complained of. In appeal to this Court it has been argued that Article 2 does not apply to any case where the act alleged is a wilful act and that the Article only applies where the defendant in doing or omitting to do the act bona fide believed that he was acting correctly and in accordance with law; and it is accordingly contended that the Court below ought to have determined whether or not the defendant wilfully refused to receive the decretal money from the plaintiff and if it found that he did, it ought to have given a decree against him notwithstanding the suit had been instituted after the expiration of ninety days. In support of this contention a number of authorities have been cited. For the most part they are cases in which the defendant claimed the protection of provisions in various enactments requiring notice of action. In one case, no doubt, the question whether or not Article 2 of the Limitation Act applied did arise, namely, in the case of Ranchordas Moorarji v. Municipal Commissioner for the City of Bombay (1), but it seems to us that the learned Judges who decided that case held that the Article of the Limitation Act did not apply, by applying the reasoning which formed the basis of the decision in some cases that the defendant could not plead the want of notice of action. It seems to us that the reasons which have been given in several cases for holding that the defendant could not plead want of notice of action do not necessarily apply to a plea of limitation. In the present case the whole foundation of the plaintiff's claim is the alleged omission by the defendant to perform a duty imposed by the Code. The policy of the law is quite clear, namely, that suits of this nature should be brought and investigated as promptly as possible. The issue of fact in the present case would have been whether the plaintiff tendered and the defendant refused to receive the decretal amount. A moment's reflection will show how unsatisfactory it would be that such a matter should be investigated two or three years after the sale. It may not be unreasonable, where a defendant pleads as a defence to an alleged illegal act that the act was done in pursuance of a legislative enactment which requires notice of action before the institution of suit, that the defendant should show that he acted bona fide and in the belief that his action was justified. But such reasoning is not equally applicable to a plea of limitation. We think that the view taken by the learned District Judge was correct and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

CASE REFERRED NO. 55 OF 1918.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE NO. 352 OF 1918.

September 24, 1918.

Present—Mr. Justice Phillips and
Mr. Justice Napier.In re MOGAL BEG AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED.Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Revision—Acquittal, order of, interference with—Jurisdiction.

The High Court has jurisdiction to interfere in revision even in the case of an order of acquittal, but such interference will only be where serious injustice has been caused by an error of law.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under section 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, by the Sessions Judge, Guntur, in his letter, dated the 27th April 1918.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar, for the Accused.—The High Court has appellate jurisdiction in the case of acquittals. That jurisdiction is specifically given to it by Statute, and that only on application to it by Government. The language of section 439 which alone gives it revisional jurisdiction points only to cases of conviction. The reference in the section to powers conferred on a Court of Appeal in the sections therein named exclude its competency to interfere in cases of acquittals on the revisional side. It is also against the established practice of the High Court to exercise revisional jurisdiction in such cases.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.—In this case the reference is made by the Sessions Judge, and not by a private party. There is nothing in the language of section 439, read with section 430, Criminal Procedure Code, to derogate from the jurisdiction to interfere, in revision, in cases of acquittals. The interference has, no doubt, been very rare and only where manifest injustice has been caused, but the jurisdiction exists and is very wide.

ORDER.—It is argued for accused that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application for revision in the case of an acquittal. It is, however, clear from the language of section 439, read with section 430 of the Criminal Procedure Code, that this Court has jurisdiction to interfere even in such cases. It has, however, been consistently laid down by this Court that it will not interfere with cases of acquittal when Government has not appealed, except in extreme cases. This has been held both when a private party has moved the Court and also when a District Magistrate has done so, but the present reference is made by a Sessions Judge who has not the same facilities as a District Magistrate for moving Government to file an appeal. Although the rule of non-interference might be somewhat relaxed in cases referred by a Sessions Judge, yet we think it would be wrong to interfere even in such references unless we are convinced that serious injustice has been caused by error of law.

In the present case, although we agree with the Sessions Judge's view of the law, we think the case is one of such a petty nature that we must refuse to interfere with an order of acquittal. Let the papers be returned to the Sessions Judge.

Under Explanation 4 to section 103 of the Penal Code, when the abetment of an offence is an offence, the abetment of such abetment is also an offence. The words "when the abetment of an offence is an offence" do not mean when an abetment of an offence is actually committed. They mean when the abetment of an offence is by definition or description an offence under the Code, that is, when an abetment of an offence is punishable under section 109 or section 116 or some other provision of the Code, then the abetment of such abetment is also an offence. K. then saw the Chief Presidency Magistrate of the Court with reference to the matter and played the part of a Police spy. When S. made over to K. at the latter's place the bribe which was to be handed over by K. to the Magistrate, a Police Inspector, who was concealed behind a curtain, seized the money. S. was then tried on charges framed under sections 161 and 109 of the Penal Code and convicted:

Held, that S., when he handed over the money to K., committed a distinct incitement of K. to instigate the Magistrate to take a bribe and so was rightly convicted under section 109, even though no bribe had ever been offered to the Magistrate. [p. 823, col. 2, p. 831, col. 2.]

It makes no difference in the guilt of the abettor if the agent falls in with the plans of the abettor, knowing his criminal purpose, to cause its detection. [p. 831, col. 2.]

The Hon'ble Mr. Camell, Advocate General, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

RICHARDSON, J.—The two appellants before us, Srilal Chamaria and Mimraj Benia, have been convicted by the 3rd Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta on charges framed under sections 161 and 109 of the Penal Code. The appellant Srilal has been sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to suffer a further period of two months' rigorous imprisonment. The appellant Mimraj has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for two months. The appeals are preferred from these convictions and sentences.

At the trial charges were also framed against the appellants on the footing that they respectively attempted and abetted an attempt to commit an offence punishable under section 161 read with section 109 and were, therefore, punishable under section 511 of the Code or in the case of Mimraj under that section read with section 109. These charges, however, were not pressed by the prosecution and so far as they are concerned, the learned Magistrate must be taken to have recorded a verdict of not guilty.

I am not going to enter upon an elaborate review of the facts in detail. The facts are fully stated in the judgment of the Magistrate, Mr. K. B. Das Gupta, and, without adopting every word of his reasoning, I agree on essential points with the conclusions at which he has arrived in regard to the appellant Srilal.

The outstanding feature of the case is that on the night of the 5th February a sum of Rs. 2,500 was admittedly handed over by Srilal to the witness Karuna Bhusan Banerjee, the Bench Clerk and Interpreter of the Court of the 5th Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Asutosh Mookerjee. A case was at the time pending before Mr. Mookerjee, in which the complainant was a Marwari named Ram Gopal Khemkar and the accused was a wealthy Marwari merchant named Bilas Roy Chowdhuri. Ram Gopal had been the tenant of a room in a building belonging to Bilas Roy. It is said that he was adjudicated insolvent, looked up the room and paid no rent for two months. Bilas Roy had the room opened and certain things were removed therefrom. The complaint preferred by Ram Gopal was in respect of that entry. I am not dealing with the merits. The hearing began on the 3rd January and by the 13th January a number of witnesses for the prosecution had been examined. On the 31st January charges were framed against Bilas Roy under sections 448, 453 and 380 of the Penal Code. It is clear that the case was fought with great personal animosity on both sides, though, after the present case had been instituted against the appellants, a settlement seems to have been arrived at between the parties and Bilas Roy was acquitted on the 22nd February.

Now, whether Srilal is the Gomastha or the Munib Gomastha or partner of Bilas Roy, there can be no doubt that in his dealings with Karuna he was acting on Bilas Roy's behalf and that he intended that the money paid should be made over by Karuna to the Magistrate, Mr. Mookerjee, as a bribe to secure the acquittal of Bilas Roy and something more, which I shall presently mention.

On the facts the whole controversy turns on the question whether the suggestion that the Magistrate should be bribed came originally from Srilal or from Karuna.

According to the case for the prosecution Srilal approached Karuna first on the 13th January, visiting him on that day and on a number of subsequent occasions at his house. He pressed his proposals and Karuna unsuccessfully tried to put him off. On the 28th January, Karuna laid the facts before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Swinhoe. Thereafter Karuna played the part of a Police spy, appearing to fall in with the proposals made to him, and finally on the night of the 5th February accepted from Srilal the sum of Rs. 2,500 already mentioned, in the presence of Inspector Mohendranath Mukerjee and two other witnesses, Benode Behari Bose and Narendranath Seal, who were all concealed behind a curtain. The money was seized then and there by the Inspector. The two appellants bagged for mercy. The Inspector expressed his inability to hush up the matter and the appellants after giving their names and addresses went away.

As to the 2nd appellant, I should mention that during the first part of the conversation on this occasion between Srilal and Karuna, the former was unaccompanied. When he made his terms with Karuna he went out to get the money. He returned after a short interval with the 2nd appellant, who carried the money in. The money was in notes made up in small packets. The 2nd appellant handed the packets to Srilal, who in his turn handed them to Karuna and the latter counted them and found the total correct. While it cannot be said, therefore, that there is no evidence against the 2nd appellant, the case against him is not a strong one and as we propose to acquit him, I shall from this point confine myself to the case against Srilal.

The case for the prosecution was supported in the witness box by Karuna, Mr.

Swinhoe, the Inspector and the two other witnesses I have named. Karuna was subjected by Sir Binode Mitter to a long and searching cross-examination extending over six days. I am not saying for a moment that the cross-examination, though exhaustive, was unduly protracted. Karuna was the principal witness for the prosecution and sitting, as we do, in a Court of Appeal with a paper record before us; it can only be a source of satisfaction to us to know that his account of the whole matter was thoroughly tested. Some of the questions put to the witness were no doubt argumentative questions. Some of the answers made by him may suggest the doubts and difficulties which were pressed upon us by learned Counsel. But on the whole the result of the cross-examination seems to me to have left Karuna's evidence unshaken on those points which can properly be regarded as material. That view is confirmed in my mind by the corroboration which Karuna's story receives from witnesses for the prosecution who have no reason for not speaking the truth and whose evidence, in my opinion, is beyond suspicion.

The evidence for the prosecution was such that some explanation at least was called for. The case for the defence was first put to Karuna in cross-examination on the 20th March. On the 26th March, after all the prosecution witnesses had been examined, Srilal filed a written statement and to support that statement several witnesses were examined. The case, as it is put for Srilal, is that Karuna came to his office at 2, Royal Exchange Place, on the 4th January and saw and spoke to him a number of times subsequently both there and elsewhere, as, for instance, in the neighbourhood of the Court-house and in the Court-room itself. The gist of what Karuna finally said was that he was also in treaty with the other side, Ram Gopal, and that Bilas Roy, a wealthy man, would secure results very satisfactory to himself by paying a bribe to the Magistrate, while if no bribe were paid he might find himself in Jail. The witnesses Joy Doyal Kasera, Mr. Griffiths and Mukha Lal were called to speak to seeing Karuna at 2, Royal Exchange Place. I can only say that I am not more favourably impressed than was the Magistrate by the evidence of those witnesses. To my mind their evidence adds not the slightest weight to Srilal's written statement. That statement, in other words, stands uncorroborated by any evidence on which I can place any reliance.

On the evidence, therefore, on this record, without indulging in more speculation as to what may or may not have happened, my finding is that the first advances were made by Srilal to Karuna.

But even if I accepted Srilal's statement, so far as it is at all possible to accept it, that is, to the extent of believing that the suggestion that a bribe should be offered to the Magistrate came first from Karuna, I do not think the result would be different in law. I shall come to that point later. Meanwhile, I make the following further observations on the facts generally.

If Karuna in the first instance tempted Srilal, Srilal very readily succumbed to the temptation. I refuse to believe that either Bilas Roy or Srilal was in the result influenced by any threats conveyed by Karuna. In Srilal's statement the word threat is not used until near the end: "I say that I paid the money on account of Karuna's threat." The reference appears to be to the following passage which occurs previously in the statement:—

"On the 31st (that is after Karuna's interview with Mr. Swinhoe on the 28th, there is nothing said as to any express threat before the 31st), he (Karuna) came to my office at Royal Exchange Place and told me, 'now the charges have been framed and recognizance bonds have been taken', and I must realize it was a case for Jail.....He assured me that if I did pay, not only would the case be dismissed and declared false but a sanction would be granted for the prosecution of Ram Gopal, and in case I did not pay, he would close with the other side and Bilas Babu would be sent to Jail." On the evidence I do not believe that Karuna went to Royal Exchange Place on the 31st or on any other day. I cannot, therefore, accept it that the particular threat of which the statement speaks was used.

Mr. Langford James, who was called for the defence, tells us that he was consulted by Srilal before the 31st January and gave the opinion that the case against Bilas Roy was "demonstrably false."

It seems improbable that after that, though I do not forget that the charges were not framed till the 31st January, Marwari merchants like Bilas Roy and Srilal would be frightened by anything that Karuna might say or might have said. In my opinion, they were out to secure something more than the mere acquittal of Bilas Roy. They wanted the case against him to be declared false and they wanted sanction for the prosecution of Ram Gopal for bringing a false case.

Turn to the culminating incident of the 5th February. The conversation between Karuna and Srilal on that occasion was overheard. We have the evidence of the Inspector, Binode and Narendra. There is nothing to show that Srilal was acting under any sort of coercion or threat. He went voluntarily to Karuna's house. There is nothing to suggest that having entered the house he found himself in a strange place. There is nothing in what was said and done on that occasion inconsistent with his having visited the house before. He voluntarily sought the aid and co-operation of Karuna for the purpose of procuring the acceptance of a bribe by the Magistrate. He wanted to assure himself that the money which he took to Karuna would reach the hands of the Magistrate and he stipulated for the case against Bilas Roy being declared false and for sanction to prosecute Ram Gopal. This seems to me too clear for words and it all finds a certain amount of corroboration in Srilal's own statement.

There is one point to which I have not yet referred and I will say a word about it. According to both stories the amount of the bribe originally mentioned was Rs. 10,000. On the 28th January, Karuna seems to have told Mr. Swinhoe that Srilal had reduced his offer from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 5,000. Srilal says that before the 31st Karuna expressed himself willing to accept "even Rs. 5000." It is said that is more in accordance with the general case for the defence than with the general case for the prosecution. I do not think, however, that Karuna's version is necessarily inconsistent with the main trend of his story. Srilal may have begun his bidding with an offer of Rs. 10,000 but he would not spend more than what was necessary. If Karuna showed any signs of yielding, Srilal might conclude that a smaller sum would suffice. Srilal may also have been influenced by the legal advice which he had received. If he was satisfied that Bilas Roy would in any case be acquitted, he was paying only for the sanction to prosecute. He may again have thought that Karuna and the Magistrate would deem it safer to accept the smaller sum than the larger. The larger the sum the more likely it would be that circumstances might afterwards arise in which the possession of so much money might lead to inquiry and detection. Karuna says that previously Srilal had offered ornaments or ingots of gold instead of money.

On the 5th February the total amount agreed upon was Rs. 5,000, Rs. 2,500 was paid at the time and the balance was to be paid later.

Our attention was invited to a passage in Note E to the Penal Code as drafted by the commission over which Macaulay presided. The passage runs:—

"There are countries.....where men give bribes to Magistrates from exactly the same feeling which leads them to give their purses to robbers or to pay ransom to pirates; where men give bribes because no man can, without a bribe, obtain common justice." The phraseology is picturesque enough to be Macaulay's own and the statement may represent the state of things which existed in 1837 or even in 1846 (vide paragraph 88 of the second report of the Indian Law Commissioners). But it does not represent the state of things now.

Bilas Roy and Srilal are not unsophisticated villagers. They are merchants living in Calcutta in the 20th century, with plenty of money behind them, having ready access to the best legal advice available. They would not put their hands in their pockets at the mere nod of a Bench Clerk. In the present case, who was most likely to act the part of tempter? The rich man or the poor man? The question seems to me to answer itself. Macaulay's phrases do not help Srilal on the facts and as to the law, the commentaries of the various Indian Law Commissions are not evidence, however interesting they may be historically. We are bound to construe the Penal Code in the form in which it was finally passed by the Legislature in 1860, with such amendments as may have been subsequently made by the same authority.

On the facts, in my opinion, it is abundantly clear that Srilal's conduct on the 5th February was entirely voluntary. In my opinion on that occasion he instigated Karuna to instigate the Magistrate to accept the bribe which he himself delivered to Karuna. Such conduct is shameful and iniquitous in the highest degree. It deserves the strongest condemnation at the hands of every respectable man in the country, every man who feels that it is essential to the welfare of society that justice should be pure and should not be defiled by corruption.

But we are not concerned with the moral quality of Srilal's actions. We are only concerned with their criminal quality. Nothing is a criminal offence which is not made so by the law. If Srilal has committed no offence within the meaning of the Penal Code, he is entitled to an acquittal. The question before us is even narrower. We do not propose to consider whether Srilal might have been charged and convicted of some offence other than that with which he has been charged and of which he has been convicted. We confine ourselves to the precise charge on which the conviction rests, to which alone the argument at the Bar has been directed. The question is whether on that charge given the facts I have found, the conviction can or cannot be supported in law.

What is charged is that by instigating Karuna to instigate the Magistrate to accept a bribe from Srilal, Srilal committed an offence under sections 161 and 109 read with section 116 of the Penal Code. The reference to section 109 is superfluous and may be disregarded.

Section 161 deals with the acceptance by a public servant of an illegal gratification or bribe "as a motive or reward for doing or forbearing to do any official act, or for showing or forbearing to show, in the exercise of his official functions, favour to any person." No question arises upon that section. The money given to Karuna was to be given to the Magistrate as a bribe.

Under the Code the person who offers a bribe to a public servant is treated as the abettor of the offence created by section 161. If the bribe is accepted, the public servant is punishable under section 161 and the giver of the bribe under that section read with section 109. The case is put in illustration (a) of the latter section. If the bribe is not accepted, the public servant commits no offence, but the person who offers the bribe is still punishable under section 161 read with section 116. The case is again put in illustration (a) of section 116. In both cases the offence committed by the person who offers the bribe is, according to the scheme of the Code, an abetment of the offence described in section 161, which may for brevity be called the offence of bribery.

In the present case, no bribe was actually offered to the Magistrate. The bribe was given to Karuna for the Magistrate but was arrested in his hands. The question is whether in these circumstances Srilal committed abetment of bribery. The answer to it depends on the true construction of sections 107, 108, 109 and 116 of the Code.

It is argued on his behalf that these provisions do not make it punishable for one man to instigate another to instigate the commission of bribery, unless the second abetment is actually committed and the public servant is actually instigated to accept the bribe.

Now, section 107 defines generally what is meant by the abetment of a thing. "A person abets the doing of a thing who—

First, instigates any person to do that thing; or,

Secondly, engages with one or more other person or persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing, if an act or illegal omission takes place in pursuance of that conspiracy, and in order to the doing of that thing; or Thirdly, intentionally aids, by an act or illegal omission, the doing of that thing."

The explanations appended to the section need not detain us,

Section 108 defines what is meant by abetting an offence and for the present purpose an offence is a thing made punishable by the Code (section 40). It is provided in section 108 that "a person abets an offence who abets either the commission of an offence or the commission of an act which would be an offence if committed by a person capable by law of committing an offence." It will be observed that what is abetted is in section 107 "the doing of a thing" and in section 108 "an offence" or "an act". Abetment as an offence consists of abetting some offence made punishable by the Code.

Section 108 has five explanations, of which the second and fourth are as follows:—

"Explanation 2.—To constitute the offence of abetment, it is not necessary that the act abetted should be committed, or that the effect requisite to constitute the offence should be caused."

"Explanation 4.—The abetment of an offence being an offence, the abetment of such an abetment is also an offence."

The question before us really turns on Explanation 4, but that Explanation must be construed with the rest of section 108 and with sections 109 and 116. I leave out section 115, which deals with a special case and is on the same lines as section 116.

Sections 10 and 116 prescribe the punishment for the offence created by or described in section 108, in the two cases (1) when the act abetted is committed in consequence of the abetment and (2) when the offence abetted is punishable with imprisonment and is not committed. The expression "act abetted" in section 109 can only mean "offence abetted", meaning the principal offence. No one can be punished under section 109 unless the offence or act abetted within the meaning of section 108 is actually committed. The word "act" is used in section 109 instead of "offence" as a more general word with reference to the first clause of section 103.

Explanation 4, as the learned Advocate-General suggested, may be read as follows:—"When the abetment of an offence is an offence, the abetment of such an abetment is also an offence." The abetment of an offence is not generally an offence, if the offence abetted is not committed and is not punishable with imprisonment (section 116). In other cases the abetment of an abetment of an offence is expressly declared to be an offence, that is, a thing made punishable by the Code. The words "when the abetment of an offence is one offence" do not mean "when an abetment of an offence is actually committed." They mean "when the abetment of an offence is by definition or description an offence under the Code," that is, when the abetment of an offence is punishable under section 109 or section 116 or some other provision in the Code.

But it is argued—and at first I was somewhat impressed by Mr. Das's argument on this point—that though the Code declares in the plainest terms that the abetment of an abetment is under certain conditions an offence, the Code provides no punishment for the abetment of an abetment. It is conceivable that the Legislature were guilty of this omission, but it is not likely. The true view seems to be that reading Explanation 4 with the rest of section 108 and with sections 109 and 116, what is meant is that the abetment of an abetment of an offence is merely one form of the offence made punishable by these sections, namely, abetment of what may be called the principal offence, that is, the offence aimed at by the first abettor.

Take the illustration to Explanation 4. "A instigates B to instigate C to murder Z." If B instigates C and Z is murdered there is no difficulty. It is not disputed that A is punishable, but how is he punishable except under section 109 for abetment of murder? If B instigates C but C refuses to murder Z, it is similarly not disputed that A is punishable, but he can only be punished under section 115, again for abetment of murder.

Then comes the case which approaches the present case, B refuses to instigate C and Z is not murdered. A is still guilty of abetment of murder just as he was before. A's criminality is under the Code the same in all three cases. Explanation 2 of section 108 applies when B does not instigate C just as much as when C does not murder Z.

The result would be the same, however long the chain may be between A and Z.

In this view the abetment of an abetment of an offence is no more and no less than the abetment of that offence. If the second abetment is not committed, Explanation 2 applies. This seems to me the only intelligible way of interpreting the language used. The words mean—when the abetment of an offence is punishable under section 109 or under section 116, the abetment of such an abetment is also punishable under one or other of those sections, as the case may be.

In the present case A has instigated B to give C a bribe offered by A. If the Code made the giving or offering a bribe an offence under section 161 in the same way as the section makes the acceptance of a bribe an offence, there would be no difficulty at all. We should have heard nothing of abetment of abetment. It appears to me to make no difference that the giving or offering a bribe is punishable under the Code, not under section 161 but as an abetment under section 109 or section 116, as the case may be. The offering a bribe is an offence. That offence was clearly abetted and the abetment amounts to an act punishable under the Code as an abetment of bribery or the acceptance of a bribe.

The argument that the Code treats the person abetted as the agent of the abettor is without foundation, so far as the Penal Code is concerned. The Code, as I have pointed out, speaks of abetting an act or an offence. Under the Code if A orders B to murder Z and afterwards recalls the order but B nevertheless murders Z, A would still be guilty of abetment of murder. The law in England is apparently different. (Stephen's Digest of the Criminal Law, 42). In fact the cognate topics are dealt with in English Law on lines so different that the English cases which were referred to in the argument appear to me to be of little or no assistance and I do not propose to deal with them. I feel that I might easily be misled by false analogies.

As to the Indian authorities there seems to be only one case in the Indian Law Reports which is in point, Emoress v. Troylukho Nath Chowdhry (1). The case when properly read supports the view I have expressed, but the circumstance that there was no argument for the prisoner detracts from its weight as an authority. As put in the judgment, it is the case of an abetment of an abetment and it is cited by Mayne in support of the proposition that it makes no difference in the guilt of the abettor if the agent "falls in with the plans of the abettor, knowing his criminal purpose, but intending to cause its detection" (2nd Edition, page 468). The "agent" was a man named Cummins. The prisoner as abettor instigated Cummins to aid the prisoner in stealing the goods of Cummins' master. Cummins informed his master and laid a trap for the prisoner. So it might be said in the present case: Srilal instigated Karuna to aid Srilal in bribing the Magistrate.

(1) 4 C. 366; 3 C. L. R. 525; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 232.

SRILAL CHAMARIA v. EMPEROR.

I have hitherto dealt with the question of law on the footing on which it was principally argued, namely, that the suggestion that the Magistrate should be bribed came from Srilal. But I have said above that, if the other view be taken, namely, that Karuna first approached Srilal on the subject, the fact, in my opinion, makes no difference in law. Srilal, as I have found, was a free agent, free to give or refuse a bribe, free to act according to the disposition of his own mind. It is indisputable that the bribe was to come from Srilal, not from Karuna. It is not as if Karuna, for reasons of his own, had determined to bribe the Magistrate and had then been incited by Srilal to pay the bribe out of his (Karuna's) own pocket. The resemblance is not to the case where A instigates B to murder Z, B having already made up his mind to commit the murder. The resemblance is to the case where A, whether he or B first suggested the murder to the other, comes to B at the last minute and gives B, who has no weapon, a loaded pistol for the purpose in view. Karuna could not have moved a step unless money were supplied by Srilal. It was Srilal who eventually did supply the money. The bribe, when delivered, would not have been Karuna's bribe, it would still have been Srilal's bribe delivered through Karuna's hands. Whatever may have previously happened, however much, either before or after the 28th January, Karuna may have led Srilal on, it still remains that in the final act, about the facts of which there is really no dispute, Srilal, when he handed over the Rs. 2,500 to Karuna, committed a further, separate and distinct act of instigation for which the law makes him punishable as for an abetment of bribery. In this view the overt act of supplying the money, Srilal's own act, is given the prominence which it deserves.

For the reasons indicated I would dismiss Srilal's appeal.

As to Mimraj, we set aside his conviction. The fine imposed upon him must, if paid, be refunded.

SHAMSUL HUDA, J.—The appellant Srilal Chamaria and Mimraj Benia were tried together by the 3rd Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta. Srilal has been convicted of an offence under sections 161 and 109, read with section 116, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000. Mimraj has been convicted of having abetted the offence committed by Srilal and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 1,000 only. Both of them have appealed. There were other charges framed against them but these were not pressed before the Magistrate and I am not concerned with them.

The story told by the prosecution is to the following effect:—On the complaint of one Ram Gopal Khemkar, Bilas Roy Chowdhury was placed on his trial on charges of criminal trespass, house-breaking and theft before Mr. Asutosh Mookerjee, who was then the 5th Presidency Magistrate for the town of Calcutta. The first date of hearing was the 3rd of January 1918, and the trial lasted till the 22nd of February 1918, when the complainant and the accused having settled their differences, the Court acquitted the accused under section 258 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is of some importance in this case to bear in mind the nature of the complaint against Bilas Roy Chowdhury and the defence set up by him in that case, as the gravity or otherwise of the charge against Bilas Roy must have, to a very large extent, influenced the conduct of Srilal. It appears that the complainant Ram Gopal Khemkar was for a long time carrying on business in a room at 203/1, Harrison

SRILAL CHAMARIA v. EMPEROR.

Road. There was a number of other shops in the same premises. In the meantime Bilas Roy became the lessee of the house and the complainant thus became one of his sub-tenants. Bilas Roy gave notice to the complainant on the 4th of June 1917 to vacate the room on or before 15th Asarh (Sudi) Sambat 1974 (4th July 1917), and on failure to comply threatened to charge him rent at Rs. 200 a month, complainant having refused a proposal to increase his rent. Complainant, however, did not vacate the room. There were insolvency proceedings against the complainant at the instance of some of his creditors and on the 24th of August 1917 he was adjudicated an insolvent, and on the same day the Official Assignee seized some of the piece goods in the shop and other things found there. Complainant's case was that he had resumed carrying on his business from the 24th of September 1917 with the permission of the Court, that, as usual, he closed his shop in the evening on the 4th of November 1917 and went to his house, which was near by, after locking up the door. At 10 or 10.30 A. M. on the 5th of November 1917 he was informed by his Darwan that Bilas Roy had broken the padlocks of his shop and carried off all the goods in it including his account books. It appears that Bilas Roy's Gomasta had filed an application in the Court of the 2nd Presidency Magistrate on the 3rd of November 1917 against Ram Gopal Khemkar, stating that Ram Gopal was his tenant paying him rent at Rs. 71-9-0 per month, that he had become an insolvent and had removed all the goods from the room and had kept the room under lock and key for more than two months and had not paid his rent, and he prayed that he may be allowed to open the room in the presence of respectable persons and make a list of articles, if any be found there. The Magistrate examined the complainant and made the order "file." Apparently, after this order passed by the Magistrate, Bilas Roy opened the shop and removed what was there.

The defence of Bilas Roy to the charge was that as landlord he had a right to do what he did, that the goods of the complainant in his shop had vested in the Official Assignee and the complainant could not, therefore, complain of the action taken by Bilas Roy. It was also stated by Bilas Roy in one of his applications to this Court that there was nothing in the shop except a chisel, a hammer, a few gunnies and some waste papers; all the articles in the shop having been previously removed by the Official Assignee. When these proceedings were going on between Ram Gopal and Bilas Roy, the prosecution case is that on the 13th of January 1918 Srilal Chamaria, who looked after the business of Bilas Roy and was either his Gomasta or partner, came to the house of Karuna Bhusan Banerjee, the Bench Clerk of the 5th Presidency Magistrate, and offered to pay the Magistrate Rs. 10,000 on behalf of Bilas Roy as a bribe for acquitting Bilas Roy. Karuna had in the beginning of the interview told Srilal that he would try but afterwards declined to make such an offer to the Magistrate, whereupon Srilal left. Srilal renewed his visits from time to time, but Karuna remained abdurate and even told him not to come to his house. On the 24th of January 1918 Srilal offered Rs. 1,500 as reward to Karuna. Karuna again told him not to come to his house. A day or two later he came again and Karuna's attitude did not change. On the 28th of January 1918, Karuna seems to have thought that his position was being compromised, as it appears from his evidence that he had some suspicion that he was being watched by Ram Gopal's men, that he felt uneasy at the thought that Srilal's constant visits in a motor car may have attracted the attention of his neighbours and that different men that accompanied Srilal at different times might also circulate the fact. Accordingly, for his own protection he went to the Chief Presidency Magistrate and told him what had happened. The Magistrate told him to "play" with Srilal and himself communicated with the Police. Srilal came again the next day and offered ornaments worth Rs. 5,000, if money was not acceptable. After the interview with the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Karuna's attitude towards Srilal changed and he was holding out false hopes to Srilal and it was ultimately arranged that Mohendra Nath Mukerjee, Inspector of C. I. D., with two respectable residents of the locality, would remain in hiding in Karuna's house and that Srilal would be invited to come and make the payment. On the 5th of February 1918, Karuna sent word to Srilal to come to his house between 8 and 9 p. m. with the money. He came at about 7-15 p. m., had a talk with Karuna, then went out for a while and then came back with Mimraj. There were currency notes with Mimraj and 25 packets, each consisting of currency notes of Rs. 10 and 5 to the value of Rs. 100, were handed to Karuna and as soon as this was done, Mohendra and his companions, who were in hiding and were hearing what was going on between Srilal and Karuna, came out of their hiding place and seized the packets of notes, which were afterwards produced before the Chief Presidency Magistrate. From the conversation that was overheard by Mohendra Nath Mukerjee the arrangement between Srilal and Karuna seems to have been this: that Srilal was to pay Rs. 2,500 then and the remaining Rs. 2,500 he was to pay the next Saturday to the Magistrate himself when Karuna would introduce him to the Magistrate. Mohendra and the witnesses as well as Karuna also state that Srilal not only insisted on an acquittal for Bilas Roy but also insisted on the Magistrate sanctioning the prosecution of Ram Gopal Khemkar for bringing a false case. These are the salient facts of the case as alleged by the prosecution.

It may be convenient to dispose of the case of Mimraj first. It would be seen from the facts I have stated above, that evidence against him is insufficient to support his conviction. Agreeing with my learned brother I direct that he be acquitted.

I shall now deal with the case of Srilal. He admits that on the 5th of February he paid Rs. 2,500 to Karuna, but denies that the proposal to bribe the Magistrate emanated from him. His defence, which is contained in his written statement filed before the trying Magistrate on 26th March 1918, is to the effect that it was Karuna who instigated him to bribe the Magistrate, that Karuna, when the case was going on, saw him several times in his place of business in the Royal Exchange and in the precincts of the Court, proposed that he should pay a bribe to the Magistrate and get rid of the case pending against Bilas Roy, that he was unwilling to do so at first but afterwards yielded, being threatened that if he did not pay, Karuna will close with the other side who were also proposing to pay a bribe to the Magistrate and Bilas Roy would be sent to Jail, but on the other hand if he agreed to pay, not only the case against Bilas Roy will be dismissed but also sanction will be given for prosecution of the complainant under section 211, Indian Penal Code.

The trying Magistrate has accepted the story as told by the prosecution and has disbelieved the defence.

In support of the appeal by the accused persons, it has been contended before us that the story told for the prosecution is inconsistent with the probabilities of the case and the true version is that given by the defence. The defence, I may state, examined some witnesses mainly to prove Karuna's visits to Srilal at the Royal Exchange. Karuna denies having ever gone there. An attempt has been made on behalf of the appellants to show that Karuna had been punished for misappropriating money out of fine realised from a convicted person and is not a man of the high moral character which he claims to be. It appears that a sum of Rs. 3 had actually been misappropriated and the question was, who had misappropriated the money, the Bench Clerk Karuna or Amarnath Bose the cashier. The Chief Presidency Magistrate believed the cashier and punished Karuna but subsequently Amarnath Bose was, within a few months of this incident, tried and convicted of criminal breach of trust to the extent of Rs. 1,000 and thereafter Karuna approached the Chief Presidency Magistrate for reconsideration of his previous decision and the Chief Presidency Magistrate rescinded his previous order and restored Karuna to his former grade and post. I do not think there is sufficient evidence in the record upon which I could say that Karuna had misappropriated this amount. I am not, however, prepared to believe Karuna's story so far as it is not supported by any other evidence, and although I do not consider the defence evidence to be satisfactory, there are circumstances in the case which make me hesitate to accept Karuna's story that up to the 28th of March he had spurned Srilal's proposals with contempt, that before the 28th of March he had held out no hopes and had given no encouragement to Srilal.

That Srilal would at the very beginning come out with a proposal to pay Rs. 10,000 and then reduce the amount to Rs. 5,000 seems to be only consistent with the amount of bribe being a matter of negotiation between Karuna and Srilal, Karuna asking for a larger amount and Srilal only agreeing to pay a smaller sum. This conduct of Srilal is wholly inconsistent with the prosecution story that all the importunity and solicitation was on the side of Srilal and lends support to the story of the defence. It is proved that on the 5th of February Srilal wanted from Karuna an assurance that the money which he was going to pay would ultimately reach the Magistrate. This was a reflection on Karuna and was an insult to him. If all the importunity was on the side of Srilal, would he dare to offend Karuna in this way? Srilal's attitude on the 5th of February may, however, be explained by the fact that Karuna during the last few days before that date had pretended that he was anxious to close the bargain with Srilal, and it is a possible explanation that Srilal took advantage of Karuna's pretended anxiety to close with him and did not hesitate to dictate his own terms, but reduction of the offer from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 5,000 cannot be so easily explained. It is not clear from Karuna's evidence on what date the offer was reduced from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 5,000, and I feel a strong suspicion that Karuna felt uneasy after he spoke of this reduction as having taken place before the 28th February and then changed his story and added that this reduction was made after that date i. e., after Karuna had communicated with the Chief Presidency Magistrate. This was in examination-in-chief. Mr. Swinhoe's evidence suggests that the reduction from Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 5,000 had been made before Karuna saw the witness on the 28th of January. That Karuna told an untruth when he changed his own story is clear from his statement contained in Exhibit I.

If this be so, I consider Karuna to be unreliable and this conclusion is based largely on the broad facts of the case and not on anything said by him under the stress of cross-examination.

If the reduction was made before the 28th of January, it must have been on the 25th or the 26th at the latest, as Srilal did not see Karuna again before the 29th. Apparently, the position of Bilas Roy in relation to the proceedings taken against him was less favourable on the 26th than it was on the 13th of January, when Srilal first saw Karuna. The only explanation that can be suggested is that Srilal had become somewhat confident of success by reason of the advice given by Mr. Langford James. This advice, however, appears to have been given about the 28th or the 29th of January and could not have, therefore, influenced Srilal if he had offered the reduced amount on the 25th or 26th.

It is also inconsistent with the prosecution story that although Karuna felt indignant at the offer of a bribe, he did not forthwith tell anything about it to the 5th Presidency Magistrate, to whose Bench he was attached and whom he met every day in Court. Karuna has given no satisfactory explanation of this omission. It appears from the evidence of the Magistrate that he came to know from Karuna for the first time on the 6th of February of the attempt made to bribe him. Karuna's evidence does not also explain how Srilal, having agreed to pay Rs. 5,000, came on the 5th prepared to pay only Rs. 2,500 that day, agreeing to pay the rest later on. It is also significant that when making the payment Srilal for the first time makes a new condition of an important nature about sanction to prosecute Ram Gopal. From the tenor of the conversation overheard by Mohendra and from the evidence of Mr. Swinhoe it would seem that this condition was not wholly new but had been previously discussed between Karuna and Srilal but Karuna has chosen to withhold the information.

It has also been suggested on behalf of the defence that there is no explanation why the detection of Srilal did not take place on the 3rd of February or at any rate on the 4th. It appears from Mohendra's evidence that he was ready on the 3rd as well as on the 4th to go to Karuna's house. Karuna's explanation that he was afraid, if he tried to secure witnesses, the report might reach the ears of Srilal does not appear to be satisfactory and the defence suggestion that Srilal could not be easily induced to part with his money is not without force. Karuna's conduct in continuing a pretended attitude of friendliness towards Srilal when Mohendra detected him in the act of paying money to Karuna is also suspicious and explains why Srilal did not then and there expose Karuna before the Police Officer. The impression produced in Srilal's mind was that both he and Karuna were taken by surprise by the Police Officer, and not that Karuna had betrayed him.

My conclusions, therefore, are that the truth of the defence story has not been negatived and it has not been established beyond reasonable doubt that the instigation first came from Srilal, and I am not prepared to say that the suggestion to pay a bribe to the Magistrate did not first emanate from Karuna. As I have said before, it is possible that immediately before the 23th of January something had happened which frightened Karuna and he went to the Magistrate to clear his character. If he was from the very beginning indignant at Srilal having made such a daring proposal to him, it is not likely that Srilal would have persisted in visiting Karuna about 6 times unsuccessfully. It is noticeable that although Karuna's present story is that Srilal had visited him 6 times before the 23th January, to the Chief Presidency Magistrate he mentioned only two such visits. If Srilal came to Karuna's house as often as it is alleged in motor car, the absence of any of Karuna's neighbours from the witness-box to prove such visits would also throw suspicion on the story. Without, therefore, being able to say that the defence case has been fully established, I would say that upon the evidence I am not satisfied that the story of the prosecution except as regards the incidents of the 5th of February has been established beyond reasonable doubt. I, however, see no reason to disbelieve the story of the prosecution relating to the occurrence of the 5th of February as disclosed in the evidence of Mohendra Nath Mookerjee, Benode Behary Basu and Norendra Nath Seal. It appears from the evidence of Mohendra Nath Mookerjee that on the 5th of February Srilal came to the house of Karuna at about 7-30 p. m. and called him from outside. Karuna, who was then in the room which is his baita-khana the doors of which were bolted from inside, asked who he was and a voice answered 'Manmatha'. Then Karuna went out, saw the visitor and came back. Karuna then opened the door of his room and Srilal came in and had a talk with Karuna. He told Karuna that he was going to give Rs. 2,500 then and on being satisfied that the Magistrate had got the money after an interview with him on the following Saturday, he would pay the balance of Rs. 2,500. His condition was that the case before the 5th Magistrate was to be declared false and the prosecution party were to be charged under section 211. Then Srilal went out saying that he was going to fetch the money. He then returned with Mimraj. Mimraj handed a bundle of papers to Srilal, out of which Srilal took out 25 packets of Government currency notes and gave them to Karuna. Karuna counted the contents of each packet and as soon as the counting was finished, Mohendra Babu and his companions came into the room from behind the screen and snatched the bundle from Karuna. Srilal and his companion beseeched the Inspector to hush up the matter. They took off their pugris and placed them at Mohendra's feet and wept. The Inspector then prepared a search list which was signed by his companions and Karuna.

The question is whether this evidence, if believed, is sufficient for a conviction. It is urged on behalf of the appellants that mere offer of a bribe is not an offence unless the act amounts to abetment of an act of receiving a bribe by a public servant under section 161, Indian Penal Code. If the defence story is true and Srilal did not instigate Karuna to pay money to the Magistrate but on the other hand it was Karuna who was trying to induce Srilal to pay a bribe to the Magistrate, threatening him with injury if he did not comply, Srilal would not be guilty of any offence. As I have said before, I am not satisfied that the incitement in the first instance came from Srilal and upon this view of the case I hold that the instigation charged against Srilal has not been established. It is not unusual in this country for ministerial officers to take bribe in the name of their superiors. There is some evidence in the record to show that the atmosphere of the Police Court is not wholly pure (P. W. No. 6, page 25, Part I).

It has been further contended that even upon the facts as alleged by the prosecution, on the 5th and for some days immediately preceding that date, Karuna was inciting Srilal to pay the money with the ultimate object of catching him into a trap according to instructions given to him by the Chief Presidency Magistrate. Upon the charge as framed and on which Srilal has been convicted the question to be answered is, whether on the 5th February Srilal was instigating Karuna to instigate the 5th Presidency Magistrate to accept a bribe; my answer is in the negative. Admittedly on that day Karuna had himself sent for Srilal and had asked him to come with money to bribe the Magistrate. The incitement or instigation came from Karuna, and not from Srilal. The case is different from that of a Police spy who procures the commission of an offence for the purpose of detecting it. In those cases the instigation by the spy does not affect the offence committed at his instigation. Here the question being whether Srilal instigated Karuna, the fact that Karuna was himself instigating Srilal would negative his being instigated by Srilal.

The next argument put forward on behalf of the prosecution raises a question of considerable difficulty and importance and although upon the view of the case that I take it is not necessary to decide that question, yet as the point has been fully argued I think I may shortly express my views on it. It has been contended that under Explanation 4 of section 108, Indian Penal Code, the abetment of an abetment means the abetment of an act which subsequently ripens into an actual abetment of the principal and not an abetment or incitement merely to incite another when that other has not at all been incited. In other words, it is urged that without Karuna inciting the Magistrate the abetment of Karuna by Srilal did not amount to an abetment of an abetment. The language of Explanation 4 is not very clear. The idea that the law was expressed in the form of syllogism cannot be entertained. It would be so foreign to the usual method of drafting a Statute. It is suggested by the learned Advocate-General that Explanation 4 should be read thus "when the abetment of an offence is an offence, the abetment of such an abetment is an offence." I think this is the correct way of interpreting the section.

The question mainly turns on the meaning of the words "abetment of an abetment." Having regard to the nature of the charge in this case, the only form of abetment we need consider is abetment by instigation. There is no question of a conspiracy as according to the prosecution case, Karuna and Srilal were at cross-purposes from the very beginning. I would, therefore, substitute the word 'abetment' by the word 'instigation' and put the question in this form. Was there in this case an instigation of an instigation? Having regard to the definition of the word 'abetment' as including both the abetment of an offence as well as the abetment of an act which, if committed, would be an offence, the question is whether there was on the part of Srilal an instigation of an actual instigation by Karuna, which instigation amounted to an offence, or the instigation of an act which, if committed would have amounted to an offence. It is clear there was in this case no instigation of an actual instigation, but if the prosecution story is true, Karuna was instigated to do an act which, if committed, would have been an offence. The position seems to me to be fairly clear. Our attention has been drawn to an expression of opinion contained in 4th Edition of Mayne's, Indian Penal Code (p. 239), that if A asks B to go to a place and instigate C, A commits no offence until B has instigated C. It is noticeable that this expression of opinion is not to be found in the author's own edition of the book but for the first time appears in the 4th Edition revised by Mr. Swaminadhan. No authority is cited for this proposition and I do not consider that the expression of opinion is well-founded. Reliance has been placed on various cases on both sides, but I do not think it necessary to go further into this question as I agree with all that has been said on the point by my learned brother.

I regret to have to differ from him. On the conclusions arrived at by me I would acquit Srilal also and discharge him from his bail-bond.

By THE COURT.—As regards Srilal Chamaria, the appellant in this appeal, our opinions differ. They will be laid before the Hon'ble the Chief Justice under section 429, Criminal Procedure Code, in order that he may appoint another Judge to hear the case.

The Chief Justice referred the case to Fletcher, J., who delivered the following JUDGMENT.—This case comes before me under the provisions of section 429 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The appellant Srilal Chamaria was tried along with one Mimraj Benia by the 3rd Presidency Magistrate and convicted on charges framed under sections 161 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code. Mimraj was also convicted, but his conviction has been set aside by this Court.

The appellant Srilal was sentenced by the learned Magistrate to suffer rigorous imprisonment for 3 months and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to undergo a further period of two months' rigorous imprisonment.

Srilal appealed to this Court. His appeal was heard by Richardson and Huda, JJ. The learned Judges were divided in their opinion. Richardson, J., was for upholding the conviction, whilst Huda, J., was of opinion that the conviction ought to be set aside.

The facts in the case are fully set out in the judgment of the Magistrate as well as in the judgments of the two learned Judges. Richardson, J., remarks in the course of his judgment:—"The outstanding feature of the case is that on the night of the 5th of February, a sum of Rs. 2,500 was admittedly handed over by Srilal to the witness Karuna Bhusan Banerjee, the Bench Clerk and Interpreter of the Court of the 5th Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Asutosh Mookerjee. A case was at that time pending before Mr. Mookerjee, in which the complainant was a Marwari, named Ramgopal Khemkar, and the accused was a wealthy Marwari merchant, named Bilas Roy Chowdhury. Ramgopal had been the tenant of a room in a building belonging to Bilas Roy. It is said he was adjudicated insolvent, locked up the room and paid no rent for 2 months. Bilas Roy had the room opened and certain things were removed therefrom. The complaint preferred by Ramgopal was in respect of that entry. I am not dealing with the merits. The hearing began on the 3rd January and by the 13th of January a number of witnesses for the prosecution had been examined. On the 31st January charges were framed against Bilas Roy under sections 443, 453 and 380 of the Penal Code. It is clear that the case was fought with great personal animosity on both sides, though after the present case had been instituted against the appellants a settlement seems to have been arrived at between the parties and Bilas Roy was acquitted on the 22nd February." The facts contained in the above statement are not disputed. Srilal is a Gomasta or partner of Bilas Roy and in the course of his dealings with Karuna he was acting on behalf of Bilas Roy. He intended that the bribe should be made over by Karuna to the 5th Presidency Magistrate in order to secure the acquittal of Bilas Roy.

The main controversy in this case has been as to whether the suggestion that the Magistrate should be bribed came originally from Srilal or Karuna.

The case for the prosecution is that Srilal visited Karuna on the 13th of January and on subsequent occasions at his house, that Karuna on the 28th January saw Mr. Swinhoe with reference to the matter, after which Karuna played the part of a Police spy and that on the night of the 5th of February Srilal made over to him Rs. 2,500 in the presence of a Police Inspector and two other witnesses who were concealed in Karuna's house, and the money was seized by the Inspector. On the side of the defence it was stated that the first suggestion of a bribe came from Karuna and that he subsequently saw Srilal at his office at 2, Royal Exchange. Witnesses were called in support of this defence. I may say at the outset that I do not accept the evidence adduced by the defence.

SRILAL v. EMPEROR.

The question, therefore, is whether it is safe to convict Srilal on the evidence on the record. So far as regards the evidence apart from the incidents of the 5th of February, I think it would not be safe to convict the appellant. I am not on the whole impressed with the evidence of Karuna, although I think it is not improbable that he is right in his statement that Srilal first approached him. But apart from the incidents of the 5th of February, I should hesitate to act on the evidence of Karuna without corroboration.

The incidents of the 5th of February, however, stand on a different basis. They are amply corroborated, in fact they are not denied.

On that day Srilal went to Karuna's house voluntarily. He was under no sort of coercion or threat. The conversation between Srilal and Karuna was overheard by witnesses and deposed to by them. Srilal wanted to be satisfied that the money reached the Magistrate. He wanted the case to be declared false and sanction to prosecute Ramgopal to be granted.

There seems to have been a clear incitement by Srilal of Karuna to instigate the Magistrate to accept a bribe, which Srilal then handed over to Karuna.

The question is whether on these facts the conviction of Srilal can be supported. The answer depends on the meaning of sections 107, 108, 109 and 116 of the Penal Code. No bribe was actually offered to the Magistrate. It was argued on behalf of the defence that the Code does not make it an offence for a man to instigate another to instigate the commission of bribery unless the second abetment is actually committed. Under section 107 a person abets the doing of a thing who instigates any person to do that thing.

Section 108 defines what is meant by the abetment of an offence. There are five explanations to this section. The second explanation provides that to constitute the offence of abetment, it is not necessary that the act abetted should be committed or that the effect requisite to constitute the offence should be caused.

Explanation 4 is in the following terms: "The abetment of an offence being an offence, the abetment of such an abetment is also an offence." The prosecution read the explanation as follows: "When the abetment of an offence is an offence, the abetment of such an abetment is also an offence." Both Richardson and Shamsul Huda, JJ., adopted this view. On consideration I am of the same opinion. As Richardson, J., points out in his judgment, the words 'when the abetment of an offence is an offence' do not mean "when an abetment of an offence is actually committed." They mean when the abetment of an offence is by definition or description an offence under the Code, that is, when an abetment of an offence is punishable under section 109 or section 116 or some other provision of the Code, then the abetment of such abetment is also an offence.

Now, if that be the true reading of Explanation 4 to section 108, there can, to my mind, be no doubt about the correctness of the conviction of Srilal. Srilal, when he handed over on 5th of February Rs. 2,500, committed a distinct incitement of Karuna to instigate the Magistrate to accept a bribe.

It makes no difference in the guilt of the abettor if the agent "falls in with the plans of the abettor, knowing his criminal purpose, but intending to cause its detection" [Mayne's Criminal Law, 2nd Edition, page 469, Empress v. Troylukho Nath Chowdhry (1)].

In the circumstances, I hold that the appellant Srilal was rightly convicted and accordingly dismiss his appeal.

The appellant must surrender and serve out his sentence.

Appeal dismissed.

DEWA SINGH v. EMPEROR.

PUNJAB CHIEF COURT.
CRIMINAL REVISION No. 275 OF 1918.
May 10, 1918.

Present:—Mr. Justice Shah Din.
[DEWA SINGH—PETITIONER
versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 225B—Resistance to lawful arrest—Offence, ingredients of—Overt act, proof of.

In order to constitute an offence under section 225B of the Penal Code, something more is required than an evasion of arrest or a mere assertion by the person sought to be arrested that he would not like to be arrested or that a fight would be the result of such arrest; there must be an overt act of resistance or obstruction. There must be positive evidence to show that the officer armed with a warrant of arrest produced the warrant and that the person sought to be arrested resisted such arrest.

Criminal revision from the order of the Sessions Judge, Gurdaspur, dated the 14th February 1918.

Mr. Bishen Nath, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Lal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner has been convicted of an offence under section 225B, Indian Penal Code, and the sole question for decision in this revision is whether, upon the facts found, his conviction under the said section is justified. The learned Sessions Judge records the following findings against the petitioner: "On the 1st May 1917 the bailiff took the warrant and showed it to the accused, who, however, refused to accompany the bailiff to Court"..... "In my opinion, the evidence sufficiently proves the defiant attitude assumed by Dewa Singh, who refused to accompany the bailiff, or give security for his due appearance."

In support of his view that the petitioner is guilty under section 225B, Indian Penal Code, the learned Sessions Judge observes as follows: "The warrant of arrest was to be executed under the provisions of section 55, Criminal Procedure Code. It was not necessary for the bailiff to use force, but Dewa Singh was bound to accompany him to the Court under the warrant, unless he were prepared to take the alternative of paying the decretal amount, for which he had made himself liable there and then."

Upon the above findings the petitioner is not guilty of an offence under section 225B, Indian Penal Code, inasmuch as it is not found that he intentionally offered any resistance or illegal obstruction to the lawful apprehension of himself. In a recent decision reported as Aijaz Husain v. Emperor (1) Mr. Justice Sundar Lal held that, in order to constitute an offence under section 225B of the Indian Penal Code, something more is required than an evasion of arrest or a mere assertion by the person sought to be arrested that he would not like to be arrested or that a fight would be the result of such arrest. There must be positive evidence to show that the officer armed with a warrant of arrest produced the warrant and that the person sought to be arrested resisted such arrest. In the Allahabad case the accused, on the warrant of arrest being shown to him, said to the officer who had come to arrest him:—"Take me, if you can, to the Tabsil. I won't go." The High Court held that this act did not constitute an offence under section 225B, Indian Penal Code. Similarly, in the case of Emperor v. Gajadhar (2) it was held by Mr. Justice Banerji that to justify a conviction under section 225B there must be an overt act of resistance or obstruction.

Following these authorities, I hold that the petitioner's conviction under section 225B, Indian Penal Code, is not justified. I accordingly accept this revision and, setting aside the conviction and sentence, I acquit him.

Trust, charitable—Trustee mixing trust funds with private funds—Presumption—Burden of proof—Trustee, removal of—Misconduct—Scheme for management—Strangers, association of, with trustee, inexpediency of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92.

Where the trustee of a charitable endowment mixes up his private funds with the trust funds in the accounts, the presumption is that the whole of the funds belong to the trust and the onus is on the trustee to show that any portion of them is his private property. [p. 834, col. 2.]

A Court will not be justified in removing a trustee who has long held the office at the instance of strangers who have no better title, in the absence of clear proof of the trustee's misconduct. [p. 836, col. 2.]

In framing a scheme for the management of a trust, the association of strangers with the trustee which is likely to lead to friction should be avoided. Provision must, however, be made for periodical auditing of the accounts and for their inspection by those interested in the trust. [p. 837, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Original Suit No. 4 of 1916.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri (with him Mr. M. S. Vaidyanatha Aiyar), for the Appellant. —The finding of the lower Court negatives the specific charges of misappropriation brought against the defendant. Laxity in management and want of method in keeping and maintaining accounts cannot entail his removal from office. That is found by the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge has framed a scheme appointing a Board of Trustees to manage the temple, though the defendant is to be one of the members. This Board is to be subject to the general control of the Dharmarakshna Sabha in Madras.

The mere fact that the trustee was a young man and lacking in experience does not justify the association of strangers with him in the management of the temple. It is obvious that the machinery will not run on smoothly and there is likely to be friction among the trustees. Mahomed

Ismail Ariff v. Haiee Ahmed Moolla Dawood (1). "Proper safeguards might be interposed to prevent mal-administration of the trust funds, the defendant being ordered to exhibit the accounts periodically for inspection by the worshippers. Provision may also be made for periodical auditing of accounts. Annasami Pillai v. Ramakrishna Mudaliar (2).

The management should be under the control of a resident body and not of an association far removed from the place where the temple is situate.

Defendant and his predecessors-in-office have acquired title to the trusteeship by adverse possession. The widow of the last hereditary trustee, Sundarammal, executed a power in favour of defendant's grandfather. Defendant's grandfather and after him defendant's father and defendant have been in possession of the office since 1868. In any event they have been in enjoyment for over 12 years since the death of the widow.

Mr. P. B. Ganapathi Aiyar (with him Messrs. V. C. Seshachariar and K. S. Ramabhadra Aiyar), for the Respondents. —The defendant freely mixed up temple moneys with his own private funds. He even admitted that he used the temple moneys for his own use. That is misconduct in a trustee. The accounts had not been regularly kept and the lower Court was right in removing the defendant from the sole trusteeship and placing the management in a Board.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against the judgment of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Chingleput declaring certain properties to belong to the Shri Marundiswaraswami Temple at Tiruvannamiyur and settling a scheme for that temple. The suit was brought under section 92, Civil Procedure Code, with the consent of the Advocate-General by Sir Subramania Aiyar, the President of the Dharmarakshna Sabha in Madras, and by the Village Munsif of Tiruvannamiyur, who was previously employed under the defendant's late father as the temple Shrotriarn Amin, for the removal of the defendant from the trusteeship on account of the misconduct of himself and his ancestors, for an account of management of the temple affairs during the period when the defendant's father and defendant held office, for the recovery of properties alleged to have been misappropriated by the defendant and his family, for the appointment of new trustees, and for the settlement of a scheme for the proper management of the Devasthanam.

The Subordinate Judge carefully investigated the charges made against the defendant. He found that the charges in respect of items Nos. 1 and 2 failed as the conduct of the trustees was justifiable. He found that the 2nd, 4th, 6th and 9th charges were unproved, that the 3rd and 5th charges were concocted by the 2nd plaintiff or his brother, P. W. No. 1, that the 7th charge was unfounded and that the 8th charge related to a matter for which the defendant was not responsible. In the result he found that no definite charges had been brought home to the defendant. He considered that the management of the temple by the defendant's ancestors, though somewhat lax in respect of the mixing of their own accounts with the temple accounts, was not, on the whole, dishonest. He declared that certain properties claimed on behalf of the temple by the plaintiffs belonged to the temple and that certain others belonged to the defendant. He considered that no sufficient ground had been shown for the removal of the defendant from the trusteeship and found that he was an inexperienced young man who had not had a chance of showing that he could manage the temple affairs properly before the suit was launched; and he directed that the management of the temple in future should be by a Board of Trustees consisting of the defendant and two other persons to be appointed by the Court, and that this Board of Trustees should be under the control of the Dharmarakshana Sabha of Madras.

The defendant appeals against the decree in so far as it takes away the sole management from his hands and associates two strangers with him in the management. He also appeals against the finding of the Subordinate Judge that four lands in Patta No. 35, item No. 6 of C schedule, belong to the temple and also against the finding that the Sanad Maniyam lands in Kariambakkam belong to the temple. The plaintiffs have filed two separate memoranda of cross-objections against the finding of the Subordinate Judge that the defendant was the rightful trustee and had acquired a right by adverse possession. They also object to the finding that items Nos. 2 to 6 of A to C schedules in paragraph 50 of the judgment belong to the defendant and they ask to have the defendant altogether removed from the trusteeship.

We may first deal with the items of property about which there are disputes. Patta No. 35 contains four numbers 475, 474, 476 and 477. Of these, the defendant claimed the whole of 474, 477 and part of 475 and 476. It appears from Exhibit-L-2 that these lands were purchased in 1893 for Appu Chettiar, who was the then Manager of the temple, by the temple Kanak (accountant), Thanikachallam Pillai. They were transferred to Patta No. 11 and thence to Patta No. 35 in Appu Chettiar's name. In Exhibit L-2 under the heading "Accounts of receipt and expenditure of Maniyam Tiruvannamiyur Dharmam" there is an entry of Rs. 91 and odd paid as Teerva for the lands in Patta No. 11 and 35, with the statement that these lands "belong to the Devasthanam." This is almost conclusive in favour of the lands being the property of the temple. There is also the fact that Rs. 20 are shown in the temple accounts (Exhibit M) as spent from the temple funds towards the purchase of these lands and the Kist of the lands was also debited to the temple. We think that the Subordinate Judge was right in treating these lands as belonging to the temple. The next item is the Sanad Maniyam lands in Kariambakkam. These lands were obtained by a sale-deed, Exhibit Z, in favour of the defendant's father and his father's brother in 1890. The sale was to pay off a mortgage in favour of another member of the defendant's family. The defendant has not shown that the Rs. 100 for this purchase came from private funds. In a case like the present, where it is clear that the funds of the temple and the funds of the family have not been kept distinct in the accounts, the presumption is in favour of the temple. See Neelayathakshi Ammal v. Taluk

SUBBAROYA CHETTY v. SUBRAMANIA IYER.

Board of Mayaram (3) as to the duty of trustees to keep their property distinct from the trust property, and to maintain accounts of all loans taken from one property for the benefit of the other. We confirm the Subordinate Judge's finding upon this portion of the defendant's claim.

Turning now to the lands claimed in the memorandum of objections, the first is Chinnamuthan Chavadi land. This land was obtained under a 99 years' lease granted by Lord Clive in 1801 in favour of Mari Chetti of Tirupassoor. Under a partition between him and his elder brother in 1804 this land fell to the share of Mari Chetti. Before the 99 years' lease expired, a renewal was granted in the name of the defendant's father under Exhibit XIII. Three sums obtained as compensation for acquisition of portions of this land by Government were credited by the defendant's father to the temple, and the income and expenses arising out of possession of this land have all been entered in the temple accounts. See Exhibits LIX, XIX, XXVI, XXI and XXII. Exhibit XIX is headed "Account of Tiruvanmiyur Marundiswaraswamiar". The Subordinate Judge, having regard to the facts that the defendant's family conducted trade in yarn and advanced from their Maligai accounts large sums to this temple, thinks that these advances may have been intended as gifts to the temple and that the rents and profits derived from the land may have been taken by the family in compensation for the expenses incurred out of their own trade for the temple. The respondent's Pleader goes so far as to describe the Maligai accounts as an alias for temple accounts. But, in our opinion, he has not established so much. We find that, in some places, the temple is entered as a debtor of the family. The Maligai accounts go back to a time before the family had anything to do with the temple, and we find a system of debit and credit between the Devasthanam and the Maligai. There are also separate accounts of individual members of the family on certain pages of the Maligai accounts. The view taken by the Subordinate Judge is that, as on the whole there was always a balance of indebtedness in favour of the Maligai as against the temple, it is probable that the temple income being insufficient, the defendant's ancestors were in the habit of lending money from their own funds to supplement the temple funds without keeping any sharp distinction between the two. The entry in Exhibit XIX at page 449 of Tiruvanmiyur Marundiswaraswami temple "purchase of Seemai yarn" stands by itself, and has not been satisfactorily explained. But it is an account of 1876 and the heading in the name of the temple is inconsistent with the theory that the temple was the sole owner of all the Maligai trade. Exhibit LIX at page 668 shows that this account was in existence when Tirupassoor Subbaraya Chetti, the last trustee previous to the alienation by Sundarammal, was alive and it thus appears that the defendant and his father only followed the precedents of previous trustees in entering debit and credit items between the temple and the Maligai. A Commissioner was appointed to examine these accounts, and in his evidence he stated that the yarn account had not been brought to his notice until the trial. It appears to have been an afterthought to make much of this solitary heading. On the whole, we do not consider it proved that all the profits made from the Maligai should belong to the temple. But in respect of this particular land, we think that the onus is, as before explained, upon the defendant to prove that the property belongs to himself when he is shown to have mixed his own funds and the temple funds in his accounts; and the evidence of compensation paid in respect of portions of this land having been credited in favour of the temple and the debit and credit entries in the temple accounts for Chinnamuthan Chavadi outweighs the evidence adduced on behalf of the defendant and is sufficient for a finding that Chinnamuthan Chavadi is the property of the plaintiff temple.

The next item Palavakkani lands and a house in Brodie's Road follow the result of the finding as to Chinnamuthan Chavadi, because it appears that these properties were purchased out of money obtained in land acquisition proceedings when a portion of Chinnamuthan Chavadi lands were acquired by the Government. This land was mortgaged under Exhibit T to the defendant's father for Rs. 2,000. He took the mortgage as trustee of the temple and he again leased it under Exhibit T in that capacity. The interest obtained under the lease-deed was received by the defendant's father and he signed the receipts, Exhibit U series, as trustee of the temple. We find that this item is temple property.

Item No. 5—Pallipattu and Kottur lands were purchased in the name of Appu Chetti, defendant's grand-uncle. The Subordinate Judge holds that these lands are the private properties of Appu Chetti. They are now stated to be in possession of Abboy Chetti. Abboy Chetti is not a party to the suit. We do not think that we should interfere with the finding of the Subordinate Judge that these lands are the private properties of Appu Chetti.

Item No. 6—Odaikuppam lands were mortgaged to Appu Chetti in 1824. He brought a suit in 1891 on the mortgage and got a decree and became the purchaser in execution. He has since disposed of the lands by Exhibit F in 1903 in favour of Karimunnessa Begam, who is not a party to this suit. No declaration can be made in favour of the temple in respect of these lands and the respondents' Pleader has expressed his willingness to drop this item.

The Subordinate Judge held that the defendant's father, having been trustee of the temple for over 12 years from 1878, must be deemed to have become the rightful trustee by adverse possession and that the defendant as heir to his father must also be deemed to be a rightful trustee. The last trustee in the family of the founders of this charitable institution was Tirupasoor Subbaraya Chetti, who died in 1868 leaving a widow Minakshi Sundarammal. This widow executed a powernama in favour of Oothakadu Subbaraya Chetti, who was her uncle's son and the defendant's grandfather. He had two sons, Kandasami Chetti and Namasivaya Chetti. The latter died a lunatic and the defendant's father Kandasami Chetti died in 1911. Assuming that Sundarammal had no authority to alienate the trusteeship to persons not standing in the direct line of the founder, the defendant and his grandfather and father have been in actual management of the temple trust since 1868. Although limitation will only begin to run from the death of the widow, see Subraya Kakramaya v. Subraya Padayya (4) and Neelakanta Rao v. Narayana-swami Aiyar (5), there is an interval of more than 12 years since Sundarammal's death in 1881 and the institution of this suit. The Subordinate Judge, therefore, was of opinion that the defendant had established a right by adverse possession in his favour. We think it unnecessary to pronounce an opinion on this point. The defendant and his predecessor have been in possession of the office for many years and we should not be inclined to disturb his possession and depose him at the instance of strangers unconnected with the family of the former trustees, who have themselves no better title than the defendant and do not suggest that there is any one living who has a better hereditary title than the defendant, unless he was clearly guilty of misconduct and it appeared to be for the clear benefit of the trust that he should be deposed.

We agree with the Subordinate Judge's finding that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the defendant was guilty of any misconduct or fraud upon the revenues of the temple. It is unnecessary to discuss the charges in detail. Arguments were addressed to us at some length in respect of the 5th charge, which related to a sum of Rs. 59-8-0 paid for casuarina posts, also in respect of the 14th item of liability which was concerned with a sum of Rs. 1,250 of temple money deposited with a Nattukottai Chetti firm, and lastly in respect of a double entry of Rs. 150 in the Devastanam Kurippu Exhibit 47 at page 296, coupled with the defendant's admission that he used to take cash out of the temple balance for his own private use. It is sufficient to say that the entry of the first of these items was made by 2nd plaintiff's brother, that the 2nd plaintiff took away the temple accounts in order to set up a case of misappropriation against the defendant and that, in these circumstances, any evidence against the defendant coming from that source is tainted and not worthy of any credit. As for the item of Rs. 1,250 the statement of P. W. No. 3, a Gomasta of the Nattukottai Chetti firm, that no temple money was ever kept in deposit with that firm was not of much value, when taken with his admission in cross-examination that he had not brought his firm's accounts and that without them he could not say what money had been received by the firm. The last item of Rs. 150 is not one of the items upon which any charge has been founded in the plaint. It may be that a satisfactory explanation is forthcoming for the entry as it stands, but until the defendant has had a chance of explaining, it cannot be assumed that the amount has been misappropriated.

Mr. Venkatarama Sastri contended on behalf of the appellant that the association of two strangers along with the defendant in the management is likely to lead to friction and he quoted Mahomed Ismail Ariff v. Hajee Ahmed Moolla Dawood (1) in support of this contention. He suggests that instead of the scheme propounded by the Subordinate Judge, the defendant should be left to manage the trust subject to an arrangement for exhibiting the accounts for the examination of worshippers in a manner similar to that in the scheme of the Malleswara and Keshava Perumal temples in Annasami Pillai v. Ramakrishna Mulaliar (2). We think there is considerable force in his contention. The manner in which the accounts have been kept in the past shows the necessity of a periodical audit being made, and this is conceded on both sides to be one of the conditions that should be embodied in the scheme. At the same time it does not appear to be desirable that the management of this temple should be placed under the control of a self-constituted body having its headquarters in the Presidency Town. We, therefore, direct in substitution for the scheme provided in the Subordinate Judge's decree as follows:—

(a). The defendant is confirmed in the office of sole Dharmakarta of the suit temple.

(b). After defendant's lifetime the office shall descend in succession to his eldest male heir,

(c). An annual audit of temple accounts shall be made at the temple expense.

(d). Suitable persons shall be appointed by the members of the Saidapet Taluk Devasthanam Committee for the time being as auditors to make the audit of the temple accounts for the year. Failing them the appointment of auditors shall be made by the District Court on the application of worshippers.

(e). The results of such audit shall be posted in a conspicuous spot at the entrance of the temple and shall be kept exposed to view for the space of one month.

(f). The Dharmakarta shall allow worshippers of the temple to inspect the temple accounts between the hours of 3 and 5 P.M. on one day of every week and for that purpose shall cause the books and accounts to be kept in a conspicuous place in charge of one of his subordinates.

(g). Among the books to be kept for the examination of worshippers the Dharmakarta shall maintain registers showing the various moveable and immoveable properties belonging to the suit temple as also all the valuable moveable properties inclusive of jewels.

(h). The Dharmakarta shall have the said registers duly revised once a year.

(i). The Dharmakarta, from time to time and whenever the surplus funds of the temple exceed the sum of Rs. 3,000, shall invest the said surplus funds in any of the modes mentioned in section 20 of the Indian Trusts Act.

The net result is that the appeal succeeds as regards the scheme and fails as regards the lands in Patta No. 35 and the Maniyam lands of Kariambakkam.

The memorandum of objections succeeds as regards the Chinnamuthan Chavadi and the Palavakkam lands and the house in Brodie's Road, and fails as regards the Pallipattu and Kottur lands, the Odaikuppam lands, and the prayer to remove the defendant from the management.

Each party will bear his own costs in this Court.

January 1914.

The Hon'ble Pandit Sheo Narain and Mr.
Govind Das, for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Mr. Muhammad Shaif, Messrs.
Badr ud-Din Kureshi, Durga Das and Mahesh
Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following pedigreetable will assist in understanding this case:—

Dewan DAS MAL—Musammat Gulab Kaur.

Gowardhan Das
(adopted son).Musammat Bhag Devi, widow, plaintiff.Musammat Mohan Devi, widow, defendant No. 3Musammat Kirpa Devi, widow of Tulsi Dass, defendant No. 4.

Girdhari Lal.

Musammat Gopal Devi (deceased.) = Shiv Ram Dass, defendant No. 1.

Raghubir Singh, defendant No. 2, died during suit.

Diwan Das Mal died somewhere about 1892 or 1894 and on his death disputes arose between Musammat Gulab Kaur and Gowardhan Das, the former denying that the latter was the adopted son of her husband.
These disputes were settled in 1898 and an arrangement came to, which was evidenced by two deeds of release dated the 13th
July 1893, by which Musammat Gulab Kaur gave up all claims to the lands left by her husband, acknowledged the adoption of Gowardhan Das and took certain house property, while Gowardhan Das took all the lands but surrendered the said house property to the widow.

Subsequent to this on the 10th July
1900 Musammat Gulab Kaur executed a Will under which she divided all her property between her four daughters in equal shares, but with reference to the house now in suit she devised to Musam-mat Bhag Devi an interest in it to the extent of Rs. 1,000 and the residue she left to Girdhari Lal, son of Musammat Mohan Devi, with the condition, however, that Musammat Bhag Devi was to be allowed to reside in the house.

On the 15th January 1909 Musammat Gulab Kaur executed a deed of gift under which she gave to her son-in-law, Shiv Ram Das, and her grandson, Raghubir Singh, the house now in suit. The reason assigned in the deed of gift for adopting this course was that Shiv Ram Das had been attentive to her and had in every way assisted her and that as his wife, then deceased, had not received the same dowry as her sisters the present provision was made for the family. In June 1909 Musam-mat Mohan Devi and Musammat Kirpa Devi instituted a suit asking for a declaration that this deed of gift would not affect their rights of inheritance, having been obtained through undue influence. In this

SHIV RAM DAS v. BHAG DEVI.

suit Musammāt Bhag Devi was made a defendant and it was asserted that she had been siding with Shiv Ram Das and had assisted him in getting this gift executed. Musammāt Gulab Kaur was a defendant in that suit, which was fixed for the 6th of July 1909. When the summons was served on her, a report was made to the effect that she had made no "gift" to any one but had executed a Will in favour of Shiv Ram Das. On the 23rd June 1909 Lala Devi Das, Pleader, filed a written statement with the permission of the Court on behalf of Musammāt Gulab Kaur, in which she repudiated the gift and alleged that she had been deceived by Shiv Ram Das and induced to execute that document. Admittedly the lady was on her death-bed at the time and she actually expired before the 6th July 1909. That suit was accordingly dismissed on the ground that owing to the death of Musammāt Gulab Kaur the plaintiffs should sue for possession. The said plaintiffs, however, took no further steps in the matter, but on the 7th December 1910 Musammāt Bhag Devi instituted the present suit making her two sisters defendants along with Shiv Ram Das and Raghbir Singh. In the plaint it was alleged that Musammāt Gulab Kaur had been the owner of this house without power, however, to alienate and that the deed of gift dated the 14th January 1909 had been fraudulently obtained by Shiv Ram Das. Objection was taken to the frame of this suit, as the allegation that Musammāt Gulab Kaur had been full owner of the house and yet had no power to alienate the same was somewhat ambiguous. The plaint was accordingly returned for amendment and re-presented after being amended, it being then definitely stated that Musammāt Gulab Kaur had inherited this house from her husband and therefore her powers of alienation were limited. The defendants then produced the deeds of release referred to above and pleaded that inasmuch as Gowardhan Das, as the adopted son, was the heir the plaintiff had no locus standi to sue. The plaintiff denied the adoption but when it was held that Gowardhan Das had, as a matter of fact, been adopted, the line of attack was changed and it was alleged that Musammāt Gulab Kaur had acquired this house under the said deeds of release as her stridhan and that the deed of gift relating to it had been obtained by fraud and through undue influence. No attempt, however, was made to amend the plaint in accordance with this new case. The trial Court held that this change of front could not be allowed and that undue influence had not been proved and dismissed the suit. Musammāt Bhag Devi thereupon preferred an appeal to the Divisional Judge, Lahore, who held that undue influence had been established and decreed the plaintiff's suit. It should be mentioned that defendants had also pleaded that inasmuch as Musammāt Bhag Devi was not in possession of the whole property, a declaratory suit was incompetent. With regard to this the trial Judge doubted whether the suit was maintainable as there had been no partition. The learned Divisional Judge, however, held that as Musammāt Bhag Devi was in possession of a portion of the house, the declaratory suit was competent.

Against this decree Shiv Ram Das preferred this appeal through Mr. Sheo Narain. Raghbir Singh has died and his father has been brought on to the record as his representative. On behalf of Musammāt Bhag Devi we have heard Mr. Shafi. The learned Counsel on both sides have argued at considerable length various points raised with regard to the exact nature of Musammāt Gulab Kaur's estate and the admissibility of certain evidence. It is not, however, necessary to discuss these matters as, in our opinion, the appeal must succeed on ground No. 7 of the grounds of appeal. It is clear that Musammāt Bhag Devi is in possession of about half of the house while Shiv Ram Das is in possession of the remainder. Musammāt Bhag Devi could, therefore, have filed a suit for the ejectment of Shiv Ram Das. See Kallinath Chakravarti v. Upendra Chunder Chowdhry (1) Ramzan Ali v. Basharat Ali (2), Raghuraj Singh v. Bishen Tewary (3), Suryanarayanmurti v. Tammanna (4) and Ram Chand v. Radha Kishen (5). All that

SITARAMASWAMY v. DULLA LAKSHMI NARASAMMA.

Mr. Shafi was able to urge against this contention of the appellants was that the cases referred to above related to suits against trespassers who were in possession of the whole of the property, whereas, in the present case Shiv Ram Das is only in possession of about a half. We are unable to see any difference in principle. There can be no doubt that on the allegations made by the plaintiff, Shiv Ram Das is a trespasser and, therefore, if the plaintiff is correct in her allegations, she would be entitled to eject him. Mr. Shafi referred to section 99, Civil Procedure Code, and Musammat Bibi Hukam Kaur v. Sardar Asa Singh (6). Section 99, Civil Procedure Code, has no bearing on the point at issue and although in Musammat Bibi Hukam Kaur v. Sardar Asa Singh (6) the plaintiff was allowed to amend the plaint so as to make the claim one for possession, this concession was allowed her for very special reasons. In the present case those reasons do not exist. The defendants have throughout been objecting to the frame of the suit and it is obvious that it would be inequitable to allow plaintiff to change the nature of her suit at this late stage. In the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act it is specifically enacted that no Court shall grant any declaratory decree where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so. The suit as laid is, therefore, bad and as we can see no reason for allowing an amendment so as to make the suit one for ejectment, this appeal must be allowed.

We accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. In the circumstances, however, the parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

Order XXI, rule 10, Civil Procedure Code, only governs applications made to continue a suit. Applications presented after the termination of the suit are not within the rule. [p. 841, col. 2.]

The 'proceeding' contemplated by section 146, Civil Procedure Code, includes an appeal and the expression 'claiming under' in the section is wide enough to cover cases of devolution, etc., mentioned in Order XXI, rule 10 of the Code. [p. 842, col. 1.]

The effect of section 146 of the Civil Procedure Code is to grant an assignee of the interest of a party to a suit a right to prefer an appeal against the decrees passed in the suit which his assignor could have preferred, even though the assignee did not make himself a party to the suit. [p. 842, col. 1.]

SITARAMASWAMY V. DULLA LAKSHMI NARASAMMA.

FACTS appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham, for the Appellant.—The appellant acquired an interest in the subject-matter of the suit while it was pending. His failure to get himself impleaded in the suit deprived him of the right to contest the action on the merits. That does not, however, bar his right of appeal. The appellant claims under the original defendant within the meaning of section 146, Civil Procedure Code. The words 'claiming under' must be given a liberal interpretation so as to cover all cases of devolution of interest referred to in Order XXII, rule 10. His assignor had the substantive right to appeal and the right passes to the appellant. The word 'proceeding' in section 146 is not confined merely to suit. It covers the case of appeals.

Mr. S. Varadachariar, for the Respondents.—The application to be made a party was not within rule 10 of Order XXII, Civil Procedure Code. The rule says that, on the application of a person on whom the interest of a party has devolved, the suit may be continued. Here the suit had already terminated at the date of the application. The appellant's application to be made a party was rightly dismissed. Section 146 does not in express terms cover cases contemplated by Order XXII, rule 10. The section is aimed at securing the rights of legal representatives.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff, the mother, sued her son, the defendant, for a declaration that the property in suit was her Stridhanam. The suit was first filed in the District Munsif's Court and, on objection being taken to valuation, it was returned for presentation to the Court of the Subordinate Judge and was tried in that Court. When the suit was in the Munsif's Court the defendant executed a mortgage in favour of the present appellant. The suit was decided by the Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiff. It is alleged that, while the son was taking steps to file an appeal, he colluded with his mother and gave up the idea of preferring an appeal. Thereupon the present appellant filed an application to the District Court under Order XXII, rule 10, for an order that he be allowed to prefer an appeal, as the right to the property in suit devolved on him pending the suit,

At the same time, he filed a memorandum of appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge. On the application, the District Judge held that Order XXII, rule 10, was not applicable and dismissed it. On the appeal, he held that his order on the application concluded the right of the appellant. Against these two decisions a civil miscellaneous appeal and a second appeal have respectively been preferred.

As regards the dismissal of the application we agree with the conclusion of the District Judge, though not with the reasons given by him. He has relied on Seshagiri Row v. Velayudam Pillai (1) for the proposition that the suit in the Munsif's Court was not continued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. We reserve our opinion on the exact point decided in Seshagiri Row v. Velayudam Pillai (1). That decision is authority only for the proposition that, for purposes of limitation, the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge was different from that which was first filed in the Munsif's Court. As at present advised, we are inclined to think that, where a plaint is returned for presentation to the proper Court, any devolution of interest which took place while the proceedings were pending in the first Court must be taken to be a devolution in the course of the suit which was subsequently tried in the second Court. But the order of the District Judge can be supported on the ground that when the appellant applied to the District Judge there was no suit pending. Order XXII, rule 10, only governs applications made to continue a suit. Consequently the application presented after the termination of the suit was not within the rule. The recent decision of this Court in Subba Pillai v. Rangasami (2) takes that view, which is also supported by Collector of Muzaffarnagar v. Husaini Begam (3). We agree with the view taken in these decisions. Following them, we hold that the District Judge was right in rejecting the application and we dismiss the civil miscellaneous appeal with costs.

The District Judge is clearly wrong in holding that the appeal failed by reason of his rejection of the application. Apparently his attention was not drawn to the provisions of section 146 of the new Code of Civil Procedure. It is rather anomalous that if the person claiming under a party applied to continue the suit while it was pending, the Court had a discretion to permit him to do so or to refuse his application; the effect of section 146 is to grant such a person an undeniable right to prefer the appeal which his assignor could have preferred. But the language of the section is clear and we are not at liberty to go behind its plain terms. The proceeding contemplated by the section would include an appeal and the expression 'claiming under' is wide enough to cover cases of devolution, etc., mentioned in Order XXII, rule 10. We, therefore, hold that the appellant was entitled to prefer the appeal to the District Judge. That appeal must now be heard on the merits. We reverse the decree of the District Judge and remand the appeal to him for disposal.

Costs of the second appeal will abide the result.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are fully stated in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, which contains a pedigree table showing the relationship of the parties (page 5 of the paper-book). Fateh Din, son of Muhammad Yar, made a Will on the 5th December 1887 leaving his whole property to his son-in-law Shadi, who was also his sister's son. He died on the 1st January 1888, and on the 18th March 1888 mutation in respect of his land took place in the name of his widow Musammat Sultan Bibi. On the 2nd February 1892 this land was mutated in the name of Shadi at the instance of Musammat Sultan Bibi, who stated that her husband had left his property by Will to Shadi. Since that date Fateh Din's land has been shown in Shadi's name in the revenue papers. This land represented $\frac{1}{4}$ th share of the joint holding belonging to the descendants of Ashiq (see the pedigree table); the remaining $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the holding stood in the names of the sons of Dost Muhammad, who, however, had been absentees for a very long time. By order, dated the 1st December 1899, the names of the absentees, sons of Dost Muhammad, were struck out, and the name of Shadi was entered as owner of the $\frac{3}{4}$ ths share of the holding as well as of the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share which had been bequeathed to him by his father-in-law Fateh Din. The widow Musammat Sultan Bibi died in 1906.

The present suit was brought in March 1913 by the plaintiff Alia for possession of the entire family holding on two grounds; firstly, because as the sole surviving representative of Dost Muhammad's branch of the family he is entitled to the possession of $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the holding, inasmuch as Dost Muhammad's sons are not shown to have abandoned their share of the family land, and further as the heir of Fateh Din he is entitled to the $\frac{1}{4}$ th share left by him; secondly, because, assuming that Fateh Din became owner of the entire family holding by reason of the descendants of Dost Muhammad having abandoned their $\frac{3}{4}$ ths share in it, the plaintiff, as the sole heir of Fateh Din, is entitled to succeed to that holding by custom to the exclusion of Fateh Din's son-in-law Shadi.

Both the Courts below have decreed the plaintiff's claim conditional on payment by him of a sum of money found to be due to the defendant Shadi in respect of certain improvements and of certain payments made by him to the creditors of Fateh Din. The defendant has appealed to this Court, and on his behalf it has been contended (1) that the suit of the plaintiff is barred by limitation as regards $\frac{3}{4}$ ths share of the holding which belonged to the descendants of Dost Muhammad, because they had abandoned the said share in the lifetime of Fateh Din and also because their names were finally struck out of the revenue records in 1899 and the name of Shadi substituted in their place; (2) that, if the suit is not so barred by time, it is not maintainable, because by the custom applicable to the parties Fateh Din was empowered to bequeath the whole of the land in his possession, which included the $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the holding which stood in the names of the descendants of Dost Muhammad, in favour of his resident son-in-law, the present defendant. In the view that we take of the case it is unnecessary for us to consider and decide the question of limitation. We are, however, inclined to hold that the $\frac{3}{4}$ ths of the family holding had been abandoned by the descendants of Dost Muhammad long before the death of Fateh Din; that Fateh Din had by reason of this abandonment become the sole owner of the entire holding, including his own $\frac{1}{4}$ th share; that the defendant obtained possession of the whole of the holding as the sole legatee under Fateh Din's Will, dated the 5th December 1887, that this possession became adverse to the present plaintiff only in 1906, when Fateh Din's widow, Musammât Sultan Bibi, died, and that consequently the plaintiff's suit which was brought in 1913 was within time.

The crucial question in the case is as to whether by the custom applicable to the parties the plaintiff, as a collateral of Fateh Din in the 4th degree, has a right to succeed to the land in suit to the exclusion of the defendant. As we have said above, Fateh Din made a Will in favour of the defendant on the 5th December 1887, and we have no hesitation in holding the factum of the Will proved; the Subordinate Judge was of the same opinion, and though the Divisional Judge entertained some suspicion regarding the genuineness of the Will from the fact that it was not mentioned in the course of the mutation proceedings of March 1888 after the death of Fateh Din, his finding on the whole was the same as that of the Subordinate Judge. From March 1888 up to the date of the suit, a period of about 25 years, the plaintiff did not challenge the validity of the Will, and his silence is significant as showing that the alienation by Fateh Din was not considered as a flagrant departure from the rule of custom applicable to the parties, though we recognise that the plaintiff was within his rights in waiting till the widow Musammât Sultan Bibi died before bringing the suit for possession of the land. It is, however, noteworthy that since her death he has waited for seven years before instituting the present suit. The parties are Virak Jats of Manza Harar in Tahsil Gujranwala; and since Fateh Din's Will in favour of the defendant, who was his resident son-in-law, can be treated, so far as Fateh Din's power of disposition is concerned, as a gift for the benefit of his daughter and her issue, the question for decision is whether among the tribe of the parties a male proprietor is empowered to make a gift in favour of his daughter to the exclusion of his agnates in the 4th degree. The riwaj-i-am of the Gujranwala Tahsil compiled at the Settlements of 1868 and 1892 contains entries opposed to the validity of a gift in favour of a daughter in the presence of collaterals, but no instances are cited in support of those entries, nor have such instances been given by the plaintiff in the present suit. He has produced no oral evidence; and the only judicial precedent relied upon by him—the case of Hayat v. Gehna which was decided by Lala Atma Ram on the 15th August 1907, Exhibit P.-6—is hardly of any value. In that case a gift had been made by a Virak Jat of Tahsil Gujranwala in favour of his daughter's son in the presence of his own son, and after the death of the son, upon a suit brought by the donor's nephew, the gift was set aside on the strength of entries in the wajib-ul-arz of the village, the riwaj-i-am of the Tahsil and certain instances cited by the plaintiff's witnesses. In the present case not only are no instances cited by the plaintiff in support of his position; but on the contrary there is a distinct provision in the wajib-ul-arz, prepared at the Settlement of 1853, of village Harar to which the parties belong, and in which the land in dispute is situated, to the effect that a male proprietor has power to make a gift of his property by a written document in favour of his daughter's issue in the presence of his collaterals. This provision in the wajib-ul-arz is presumptive evidence of custom, and it is supported by a well-authenticated instance of a daughter's succession to the exclusion of collaterals in the family of the parties. Fazil, son of Ali Kuli, the founder of the family, was succeeded by his daughter Musammât Rahmat Bibi; and it appears from the settlement pedigree table, as proved by the Patwari, that her descendants are up to the present moment in possession of the land which once belonged to Fazil. Other instances of daughters' succession to the exclusion of collaterals have been given by some of the defendants' witnesses; they are not, however, of much evidential value as all the particulars relating to them have not been clearly brought out, and they may be disregarded for the purposes of this case. Taking it for granted that the initial burden of proof lay on the defendant as regards the power of Fateh Din to make a gift of his ancestral property in favour of his daughter, to the exclusion of the plaintiff, we are of opinion that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of the village above referred to, taken in conjunction with the instance of Musammât Rahmat Bibi's succession to the property of her father, was sufficient to shift the onus on to the plaintiff; and we have no hesitation in holding that he has failed to discharge that onus.

For the foregoing reasons we accept this appeal, and setting aside the decree of the Divisional Judge we dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Appeal accepted.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 8th of February 1918 and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs brought this suit against Government for a declaration that the sale of the villages of Poddipalun and Ankampalun in their Poddipalun

BHANIREDDI VENKAN DORAGARU V. SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mokhasa for arrears of revenue was illegal and to recover the property from the 2nd defendant, who purchased it at the revenue sale. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit because he found that the plaintiffs had no case on the merits and because the suit was, in his opinion, barred by limitation. The plaintiffs appeal.

There is no dispute about the fact that this Mokhasa was held by the grantees and their heirs upon a favourable jodi or quit rent on condition of rendering military service and that it was liable to be subjected to the payment of full assessment in case of any alienation of the land; that in December 1906 the Government imposed full assessment on the ground that there had been such alienation, and that in March 1907 these villages were sold by an officer of Government purporting to act under the sections of Madras Revenue Act II of 1864, which provide for sales of immoveable property for default in payment of the revenue on the due dates.

There can be no doubt that this suit, which was instituted in July 1914, is barred by section 59 of Act II of 1864, if that section which allows only 6 months' time for "parties deeming themselves aggrieved by proceedings under this Act" to institute suits in a Civil Court is applicable to it. Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Ayyar for the appellants argues that if the Government acted illegally in imposing the full assessment there were legally no arrears of revenue and that the revenue sale was consequently held without any jurisdiction and must be treated as void ab initio.

This question has recently been considered by this Court in Vadlur Chinna Nagi Reddi v. Devineni Venkatramaniah (1), where it was held, following the Full Bench decision Venkata v. Chengadu (2) and distinguishing Secretary of State v. Radha Kishore Munikya (3) and other decisions of the Judicial Committee, that if there are no arrears or if the land in respect of which the arrears are due is not included in the holding of the alleged defaulter, that constitutes a want of jurisdiction which will render section 59 inapplicable, but if the proceedings are intra vires though irregular, this section applies. This distinction between sales which though wrongful or irregular are substantially sales under the Act and sales which are ultra vires was observed in Raman v. Chandan (4) and in Raman Naidu v. Bhassoori Sanyasi (5), which were not considered in the case in Vadlur Chinna Nagi Reddi v. Devineni Venkatramaniah (1).

Now in this case, the Subordinate Judge has found that the arrears for which the revenue sale in 1907 was held "was for the non-payment of the usual jodi, not to speak of the enhanced amount levied by the Collector under the special circumstances." It is, in our opinion, unnecessary to consider the evidence upon which this conclusion is based because, if the plaintiffs' case was that the sale was without jurisdiction because there were no arrears at all due upon the land, it was their duty to allege and prove it.

If we refer to the pleadings, it does not appear from the plaint that the plaintiffs ever set up such a case. Their main contention was that the Government was not justified in treating, as a breach of the conditions as to alienation, a sale in invitum held in execution of the money-decree in Original Suit No. 29 of 1900, which was in a subsequent suit declared by a competent Court to be an invalid sale. In their written statement the Government admitted the allegation that they levied full assessment on the ground that the Court sale in Original Suit No. 29 of 1900 was a breach of the terms upon which the grant was made. At the trial in the lower Court the question was raised whether the Government were entitled to justify their action by relying upon the alienation made by the plaintiffs, which they had not mentioned in their written statement and as to which we cannot say on the evidence on record whether or not they were relied on when the enhanced assessment was imposed.

It is unnecessary to consider this question. The revenue sale purported to be one which was authorised by Act II of 1864 and it was conducted by an officer competent to conduct sales for arrears of revenue under the authority of that Act. If the plaintiffs intend to challenge the right of the Government to bring this property to sale by showing that the provisions of this Act, including section 59, could not be legally applied, they should have alleged and proved the necessary facts to take the case out of its scope. As they have failed in this respect we must agree with the lower Court in regarding the suit as barred.

The appeal is dismissed with costs (two sets).

Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Shamilat—Grazing rights, claim to, by tenants—Tenants, whether members of village community.

An entry in the wajib-ul-arz of a village provided that proprietors and non-proprietors could graze cattle on their respective pattis in the shamilat of the pattis. Plaintiffs, who were tenants cultivating land in the village, claimed the right of grazing cattle in the shamilat of their pattis:

Held, that the plaintiffs were members of the village community and were, therefore, entitled under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz to the right claimed by them. [p. 847, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decree of the Divisional Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 23rd July 1914.

The Hon'ble Mr. Fazl-i-Husain and Sheikh Umar Bakhsh, for the Appellants.

Bakshi Tek Ohand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties are residents of the village of Posi in the Hoshiarpur District. The plaintiffs sue the defendants, who are proprietors in the village, to establish their rights of grazing cattle in the shamilat land. The first Court held that plaintiffs were entitled to graze horned cattle capable for agricultural purposes in 302 kanals 16 marlas of shamilat land and granted an injunction accordingly. The learned District Judge on appeal has excluded Khasra Nos. 679 and 1629 from the area allowed for charand, thus reducing the area to 273 kanals 1 marla.

The defendants have filed a second appeal and the plaintiffs have put in cross-objections. The wajib-ul-arz of 1852 provides that proprietors and non-proprietors can graze cattle on the shamilat deh. In the wajib-ul-arz of 1884 it is stated that proprietors and non-proprietors can graze cattle on their respective pattis in the shamilat of the pattis. From this the learned District Judge infers that the shamilat deh had been divided into pattis between 1852 and 1884, and he holds that that does not affect the grazing rights of the non-proprietary body. It is now argued for the appellants that the partition of the shamilat deh had taken place before 1852. There is nothing on the record to support this, and we have declined to allow the learned Counsel for the appellants to support his argument by a document of 1852 which is not on the record. In any case the question when the partition took place does not seem very material.

It is next argued that the plaintiffs' claim relates to the shamilat deh, and that as there is no shamilat deh but only shamilat pattis, the suit should be dismissed. But the contention that the plaintiffs claim grazing rights in the shamilat deh does not seem to be correct. They distinctly refer in the plaint to the banjar land belonging to the several pattis in which they claim right of pasture. Moreover they refer in paragraph 3 of the plaint to the conditions of the wajib-ul-arz and have attached to the plaint a copy of the entry in the wajib-ul-arz of 1884 relating to the grazing rights in the shamilat pattis.

The third contention is that plaintiffs are not entitled to grazing rights under the wajib-ul-arz of 1834 because they were not parties to it, and Munshi Ram v. Rulia Ram (1) is relied on in support of this argument. But in that case the plaintiffs were mostly shopkeepers and were neither proprietors nor tenants, and it was found that they were in no way connected with the settlement of the land revenue, being outside the pale of the village community properly so called. It is on a consideration of these facts, taken along with the fact of the plaintiffs not having been parties to the agreement entered in the wajib-ul-arz that the Court held that the entry did not entitle the plaintiffs to the rights they claimed. The present case is clearly distinguishable, for here the plaintiffs are apparently members of the village community and are said to be tenants cultivating land in the village. Moreover, the finding of the first Court was that the plaintiffs had a right of grazing cattle in the shamilat by custom. This finding was not challenged in the appeal to the District Court, and it cannot be challenged in second appeal without a certificate.

Another contention is that certain land has been included in the decree in which the plaintiffs have not exercised grazing rights during the six years preceding the suit as there is Kharkana growing on it. As to this it is sufficient to say that the lower Appellate Court finds as a fact that the cattle have been grazing on that land, and this finding cannot be questioned in second appeal.

The remaining contention of Mr. Fazl-i-Husain is that the suit is bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action inasmuch as under the wajib-ul-arz of 1884, the plaintiffs have not got a right of grazing over the shamilat of all the pattis but the proprietors and non-proprietors can graze cattle only on their own pattis. In the suit as framed, however, there is no misjoinder, and there is no necessity to require the plaintiffs to split up their suit into three. The areas of the several pattis and of the different Khasra numbers in each patti are given in the judgment of the first Court, and the decree can, without the case being remanded, be modified so as to give the plaintiffs the relief to which they are entitled.

With regard to the cross-objections, the learned Counsel for the respondents presses only ground No. 4, in which he urges that certain numbers should not have been excluded from the charand. As to this the lower Appellate Court's finding is that the proprietors have been in effective possession of those numbers, and its finding on this point cannot be questioned. We see no reason, therefore, for allowing the plaintiffs a larger area for grazing than has been allowed by the lower Appellate Court.

We dismiss the cross-objections, and we accept the appeal and modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court to the extent only of directing that out of the area of 273 kanals, 1 marla allowed by that Court as a grazing ground, the plaintiffs belonging to Patti Kalian will be entitled to graze cattle only in 125 kanals 1 marla out of the shamilat in that patti; those of Patti Nabri only in 103 kanals 11 marlas out of the shamilat land in that patti, and those belonging to Patti Pakwerian only in 44 kanals 9 marlas out of the shamilat land in that patti. The decree of the lower Appellate Court having been upheld except for this slight modification, the appellants will pay the respondents' costs in this Court.

Appeal partly accepted.

Hindu Law—Alienation—Widow, gift made by, for spiritual benefit of husband, validity of.

There is no authority for the proposition that gifts for religious or charitable purposes made by a Hindu widow cannot be recognized under the Hindu Law as calculated to confer any benefit upon the soul of her deceased husband unless they be made in connection with a particular sraddh ceremony. [p. 850, col. 2; p. 854, col. 1.]

KUNJ BEHARI LAL V. LALTU SINGH.

A gift made by a Hindu widow of a reasonable portion of the property inherited by her from her husband, whether through her sons or not, for religious purposes with a view to the spiritual welfare of her deceased husband, is valid under the Hindu Law and is binding upon the reversioners. [p. 851, cols. 1 & 2; p. 854, col. 2.]

There are ceremonies and duties incumbent upon a Hindu widow, in the sense that their performance is regarded as indispensable to the spiritual welfare of her late husband. These duties she is under an obligation to perform and these ceremonies she must carry out, and for this purpose she has a power of alienation in respect of the corpus of the property in her hands, independent altogether of the proportion which the property alienated may bear to the whole. In the case of an alienation for a purpose regarded as indispensable to the spiritual welfare of the late husband, the question will not be, what proportion does the property alienated bear to the entire estate, but only was the alienation a reasonable one under the circumstances, in the sense that the expenditure incurred was such as might be regarded as suitable to the position of the family. [p. 851, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Moradabad.

Mr. B. E. O'Connor (with him Mr. Iqbal Ahmad), for the Appellant.

The Hon'ble Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru (with him Mr. Radha Kant Malaviya) for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

PRISORT, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought on the following state of facts:—One Raja Gur Sahai died in the year 1868 possessed of immoveable property of considerable value in the districts of Moradabad and Bulandshahr. He left him surviving two sons and a widow. The sons died in 1273, while still minors and leaving no issue. The widow Rani Kishori Kuar thereupon entered into possession of the estate, strictly speaking in succession to her sons, or rather to that one of her two sons who survived the other. For practical purposes it is sufficient to say that she took possession of the property with the estate of a Hindu widow. Shortly afterwards she went on a pilgrimage in the course of which she visited Allahabad, Benares, Gaya and Jagannath. At the last named place she made an oral gift, or I should perhaps say the promise of a gift, to certain priests of the temple of Jagannath, and this transfer of property was carried into effect by a deed of the 8th of January 1876, executed by Rani Kishori Kuar after her return to Moradabad and registered on the admission of her agent (general-attorney) Ajab Singh. The question whether the donees under this deed of gift had any right to transfer the property thus taken by them does not arise in the present suit. There have been transfers, and the contesting defendant in this case, Kunj Behari Lal, acquired so much of the gifted property as consisted of shares in four villages for good consideration, under a sale-deed of the 27th of September 1903. Prior to this Rani Kishori Kuar had died, namely, on the 15th of August 1907; and after much litigation the plaintiff Laltu Singh succeeded in establishing his claim to succeed as the nearest reversioner to the estate of the late Raja Gur Sahai. The object of the present suit is to obtain a decision that the transfer purporting to be effected by the deed of gift, dated the 8th of January 1876, either passed no title at all, or at any rate conveyed no estate lasting beyond the lifetime of Rani Kishori Kuar, and thereupon to recover possession of the gifted property. It is alleged in the plaint that the Pandas of Jagannath had colluded with Ajab Singh already mentioned and with other Karindas and servants of Rani Kishori Kuar and had obtained the execution of this document without the lady's understanding what she was assigning or even comprehending the contents of the deed or its effect upon her interests. Any one reading the plaint would be disposed to assume that this was the main point of the plaintiff's case. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has lumped the question raised by these pleadings into a single issue along with the wholly different question of the capacity of Rani Kishori Kuar, as a Hindu widow in possession of the property of her late husband, to make a gratuitous transfer of this sort. The result is that the evidence produced on what should have been the main question for trial in the case is scanty and unsatisfactory and that this issue has not been decided at all by the trial Court. The learned Subordinate Judge says that he will presume that the deed of gift was really executed by Rani Kishori Kuar after fully understanding its nature and effect; but he holds that she had no authority as a Hindu widow to make a gratuitous transfer of this property beyond her lifetime. We have had to consider the question of the intelligent execution of the document and it is necessary for us to come to a finding upon the point. The transaction is an old one, and such oral evidence as the parties endeavoured to produce amounts to little and does not seem worth discussion; but I am impressed with the evidence given by the witnesses Shiam Sarup and Nathu Ram as to Rani Kishori Kuar's business capacity and the manner in which she looked after her estate. The lady was illiterate, but she seems to have possessed a considerable degree of intelligence and business capacity. She did not remain shut up in her residence in Moradabad but went about visiting different portions of her property and personally superintending the management of the same. Under such circumstances the mere fact that she never challenged this alienation in her lifetime would warrant the presumption that she fully understood the transaction at the time when she executed the deed of gift. Fortunately the defendant-appellant has been able to bring on the record in this Court a piece of documentary evidence which carries the matter a good deal further. In the year 1893 Rani Kishori Kuar was examined on commission in connection with another litigation. She there stated that she had a distinct recollection of having made the gift now in question to the Pandas or officiating priests of the temple of Jagannathji. She mentioned from memory the most essential portions of the contents of this document, naming the village of Sherpur which formed the principal item of property transferred. Under all the circumstances, and in view of the manner in which this particular point was litigated in the Court below, I think we need have no hesitation in coming to the finding that Rani Kishori Kuar executed this deed of gift with full knowledge and adequate understanding of its contents and of its effect upon her interests.

In the Court below various alternative lines of defence were relied on by the present appellant, but most of the pleas embodied in the memorandum of appeal before us have not been pressed. Now that we have already found in favour of the defendant upon the question of the intelligent execution of the document, the only further point for our consideration is the authority of Rani Kishori Kuar to make this transfer. The question of law thus raised is discussed at considerable length in the judgment under appeal and has been very completely argued out before us with reference to a large number of authorities. I think I may say that very little attempt has been made before us to support the decision of the Court below on the line of argument on which it proceeds. The learned Subordinate Judge would seem to have misunderstood the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council which forms the foundation of the subsequent case-law on the subject, and he has throughout discussed the question of the validity of this gift as if it were in some way connected with the question whether Rani Kishori Kuar would have been entitled to alienate any portion of her late husband's estate in order to meet the expenses of her pilgrimage to the holy places of northern India. The latter question does not arise at all. The lady would seem to have met the expenses of this pilgrimage out of the income of her husband's estate over which income she had full disposing power. We have simply to consider whether she had or had not a right to make this particular gift in favour of the idol worshipped in the temple of Jagannath and the attendant priests. The foundation of the case law on the subject is the decision referred to and misrepresented by the learned Subordinate Judge, namely, the case of Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavalry Vencata Narrainapah (1). The important passage frequently quoted in subsequent decisions is to be found at page 551 and may be quoted once more in this place: "For religious or charitable purposes or those which are supposed to conduce to the spiritual welfare of her husband she (i.e., the Hindu widow) has a larger power of disposition than that which she possesses for purely worldly purposes." In the present case the gift to the temple and to the attendant priests appears on the face of it to be an alienation for religious and charitable purposes. The immediate object of the alienation as cited in the deed itself is "for the salvation of my husband and his family members and for my own salvation." In a recent case before the Calcutta High Court, Khub Lal Singh v. Ajoahya Misser (2), the question of law now under consideration was discussed at great length. Previous authorities were reviewed and a decision was pronounced by a Bench which included one of the most distinguished Hindu Judges who adorned the Bench of that Court. The important principles laid down by him I take to be the following: "There is a distinction between legal necessity for worldly purposes on the one hand and the promotion of the spiritual welfare of the deceased on the other hand. A gift of a moderate portion of the property of her husband by the widow with a view to his spiritual benefit is valid. Whether an alienation covers a 'reasonable portion of the property of her husband is a question which must be determined with reference to the circumstances of each particular disposition." The point which has been pressed upon us with great learning and ingenuity on behalf of the respondent to this appeal turns upon the meaning to be attached to the words "with a view to his spiritual benefit" in the principle above laid down. It was contended that those proceedings by means of which a Hindu widow may seek to promote the spiritual welfare of her late husband can be ascertained with certainty from authoritative text books accepted by Hindus generally and that the question whether a particular gift, made under certain circumstances, would or would not be accepted by Hindu opinion as conferring a spiritual benefit upon the deceased husband of the donor was a pure question of law which could be settled upon authority, independently altogether of the question whether the object of the gift was or was not one which any ordinary persons would accept as fulfilling a religious or charitable purpose. When this argument came to be further pressed, with reference to the particular authorities and texts on which it proceeded, it proved to amount to this:—that it is only by means of those rites and ceremonies connected with the funeral of the deceased or with the subsequent commemoration of his death, generally known under the name of Sradh, that the spiritual welfare of a deceased Hindu can be promoted. Consequently it was contended that the only gifts made for religious or charitable purposes by which a Hindu widow could be regarded as promoting the spiritual welfare of her late husband would be gifts made in connection with some Sradh ceremony. The argument is an ingenious one; but the question can scarcely be regarded as coming before us at this stage of its history as purely res integra. There is a mass of case-law on the subject, a great deal of which has been expounded to us on behalf of the parties to the present appeal. It is impossible to point to a single case in which an alienation by a Hindu widow has been set aside only on the ground that it was not made in connection with a Sradh ceremony of the deceased. It is quite true that there are at least two decisions of the Madras High Court in Lakshminarayana v. Dasu (3) and in Vappuluri Tatayya v. Gattinalla Ramakrishnamma (4); in which the fact that the alienation was made in connection with a Sradh ceremony is insisted upon in such a fashion as to show that it was of considerable importance in the minds of the learned Judges. The question whether this is an indispensable condition to the validity of a gift can be tested by examining a few cases in which such alienations have been set aside. Take for instance the case of Rama v. Ranga (5). The learned Judges set forth the objects for which the particular alienation which they were considering had been made. Now that alienation, on the face of it, had nothing to do with a Sradh ceremony of the deceased; but it was not set aside on that ground. It was pointed out that the ceremonies for the sake of which the widow in that case had sold a portion of her late husband's estate were not of the kind regarded by the Hindu religion as indispensable for the spiritual benefit of her late husband, such as funeral obsequies and ceremonies incident to those obsequies. They then proceeded to hold that they could not justify the alienation, "unless such sale is reasonable in the circumstances of the family and the property alienated is but a small portion of the property inherited from her husband." The principle underlying the decision appears to be that there are ceremonies and, I may add, duties incumbent upon a Hindu widow, in the sense that their performance is regarded as indispensable to the spiritual welfare of her late husband. These duties she is under an obligation to perform and these ceremonies she must carry out, and for this purpose she has a power of alienation in respect of the corpus of the property in her hands, independent altogether of the proportion which the property alienated may bear to the whole. In the case of an alienation for a purpose regarded as indispensable to the spiritual welfare of the late husband, the question will not be, what proportion does the property alienated bear to the entire estate, but only, was the alienation a reasonable one under the circumstances, in the sense that the expenditure incurred was such as might be regarded as suitable to the position of the family. The learned Judges, however, recognised the possibility of alienations made by a Hindu widow for the purpose of doing pious acts for the benefit of her late husband which are not in the nature of spiritual necessities; and with regard to alienations made for such a purpose as this, they say that they would be prepared to take into consideration such questions as the proportion borne by the property alienated to the value of the entire estate. The same sort of principle seems to be implied in Ram Kaval Singh v. Ram Kishore Das (6), where the learned Judges finally came to the conclusion that the alienation which they were considering could not be supported, either on the ground that it was a religious necessity (that is to say indispensable to the spiritual welfare of the husband) or that, being for a pious purpose, the property alienated was small in value and represented only a very small portion of the estate inherited. The same may be said of the latest pronouncement of the Bombay High Court in Panachand Ohhotalal v. Manoharlal Nandlal, (7). We have been referred to two decisions of this Court, (1) in Puran Dai v. Jai Narain (8). There stress was laid upon the fact that the alienation which the Court had to consider had been made without any reference whatever to the idea of conferring spiritual benefit upon the deceased husband, but apparently for the spiritual benefit of the widow alone. The other case of this Court is that of Balkishan Bharthi v. Sat Ram Singh (9). This case is of considerable importance as containing a review of the previous case-law by the learned Hindu Judge of this Court who is still with us. The principle he desired to affirm is to be found in the Tagore Law Lectures, 1879 at page, 309: "A gift by a widow of the whole of her husband's estate is invalid; but a gift of a moderate portion of the property made by the widow for the spiritual benefit of her husband may be valid." In the case then before him the learned Judge found that the gift which he had to consider, comprising as it did practically the whole of her late husband's estate, was one which the widow was not justified in making. On the line of reasoning which he followed it seems clear that he would have affirmed the gift, if it had affected property forming only a small fraction of the entire estate.

In this connection we were also asked on behalf of the respondent to attach considerable importance to the fact that Rani Kishori Kuar had taken the estate in succession to her son, and not immediately on "the death of her husband." Under the circumstances of the case, I do not think this fact is of serious importance. To begin with, the recital in the deed of gift itself, setting forth that the donor desired to confer spiritual benefit upon her late husband and upon his family members, is quite sufficient to include the spiritual welfare of these two boys who died before attaining majority. Apart from this I do not think it would be just to take too rigid and technical view of the position of a Hindu widow who had entered into possession of her late husband's estate after a short interval, during which her two minor sons died. She naturally treated the estate as that of her husband and regarded herself as being in possession in virtue of her rights as his widow. It could scarcely be suggested that her power of alienation for the spiritual benefit of the former owner of the estate is so rigidly limited that in all circumstances the person whose spiritual benefit is sought must have been the last male owner. In the present case for instance, it could scarcely be contended that no alienation of property by way of gift would be valid unless expressly made for the benefit of that particular one of the two sons of Raja Gur Sahai who survived the other and who was, therefore, for a brief interval the sole owner of the estate.

Leaving this question for the present, we have to go on to consider what was after all the value of the property transferred under this gift in comparison with the entire value of the Raja's estate. That gentleman executed a Will in the year 1864 to which he appended a specification of his property, showing that he had Zemindari rights in more than 80 villages and a great deal of house property in Moradabad and in Amroha. Two years later, that is to say in 1863, he received from the Government a formal Sanad granting him Zemindari property bringing in a total revenue of Rs. 10,195 13-4 for his mutiny services. I think this must have been to some extent a confirmation of a grant previously made; for I find some of the properties included in this Sanad, at page A23, also included in the specification given at the foot of the Will, at pages 19A and 20A. It is clear, however, that the grant received under the Sanad was much less in value than the property dealt with under the Will. Taking the land revenue assessment as a rough test, it would seem that the proprietary rights in the four villages affected by the deed of gift in suit amounted to little more than 1/40 of the property granted to Raja Gur Sahai under the Sanad. Taking the house property into consideration, and forming such rough estimate as seems reasonably possible, I should feel no hesitation in holding that the value of the property in suit cannot have amounted to more than 1/80th part of the entire estate. There is another line of reasoning leading to very much the same conclusion. There was evidence given that the income enjoyed by Rani Kishori Kuar from the entire estate was at least Rs. 6,000 a year. The income derivable from the Zemindari property included in the deed of gift would seem to have varied considerably from time to time, if we are to judge from different leases which have been produced in evidence by the two parties. The Government land revenue assessed upon this particular property has apparently risen from Rs. 280 in 1862 to Rs. 545. The plaintiff has proved two leases of the years 1862 and 1865. Under the former the property in question was leased out at a net profit of Rs. 635 a year. Under the latter the net profit must have been Rs. 870. There is certainly no evidence on the record which would justify us in putting the net annual profits derivable from the villages in question at more than Rs. 800. Taking it at that figure, it amounts to about 1/75 of the annual income enjoyed by Rani Kishori Kuar. I think we may come without serious hesitation to a finding that the value of the property dealt with by this deed of gift was not more than 1/75th of the entire estate of Raja Gur Sahai as it passed into the hands of Rani Kishori Kuar. There has been something said in argument about that lady's management of the estate during the entire period covered by her possession. On the one hand the appellant relied upon an admission made by the principal plaintiff, to the effect that the income of the property had gone up by something like 25 per cent. since the death of the Raja; and I was disposed at first to assume that this increase represented the result of purchases made by the lady out of the surplus income of the estate. That such purchases were made by her seems to be true, as there is a statement to that effect by the lady in her deposition of the year 1893, which does not seem to have been challenged at the time. On the other hand something has been said on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that this is not the only alienation by the lady which he has been compelled to challenge. It was no part of the case set up in the plaint that there had been other alienations. As a matter of fact, the only evidence is to the effect that the lady, not long before she died, tried to dedicate permanently for the benefit of a temple built by her husband in Moradabad two shops the income of which had always been spent on the temple by the orders of her husband. On the whole this lady's management of the estate does not seem to have been in any way extravagant, and on the evidence as it stands the finding seems to be justified that, even allowing for the alienation contested in the present suit, the lady must have passed on to the reversionary heir an estate certainly not less in value than that which she had received on the death of the survivor of her two sons, while the probability is that it had increased in value. Under these circumstances I think we need have no hesitation in holding that the gift now in question was a gift of a moderate portion only of the property of her late husband, that it was a gift for religious and pious purposes, and that it was made by the lady, not solely with a view to her own spiritual benefit, but in order that the spiritual merit likely to accrue from the same might benefit herself, her late husband, and her sons. It is obviously impossible to ask a Court of justice to record a finding that any particular act done by the surviving widow either did or did not benefit her late husband in that changed environment to which he may be presumed to have passed after that episode in life which men call death; nor can we accept the contention on behalf of the respondent that gifts for religious or charitable purposes made by a Hindu widow cannot be recognized under the Hindu Law as calculated to confer any benefit upon the soul of her deceased husband unless they be made in connection with particular funeral ceremonies. I think the present alienation should be affirmed as a gift for religious and charitable purposes, reasonable under the circumstances, and effected by the donor in good faith for the spiritual benefit of the late owners of the property as well as for her own. These findings are sufficient to dispose of the appeal, which I would allow accordingly; and setting aside the decree and order of the Court below, would dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout, including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

WALSH, J.—Three questions arise for decision in this case, one, a question of law, whether a gift by a Hindu widow of property, inherited from her husband, whether through her sons or not, made for religious purposes, whether with a view to the welfare of her deceased husband's soul or not, is binding upon the reversioner. Secondly, the question of fact whether under the circumstances of this case the gift which is attacked was in excess of what has been regarded by the law as a reasonable proportion of the whole estate. Thirdly, whether the deceased lady understood and intended to carry out the terms of the deed.

It is clearly established that in or about 1876 when she made this gift she was a Pardanashin and illiterate lady possessed of "great managing power." It is proved that she managed her affairs with great ability. She took tours to the various villages which comprised the substantial estate which her husband had left. She received and considered applications from her tenants. She met their wishes and endeavoured to remove their grievances. She made purchases by way of accretion to the estate out of the savings at her disposal. She gave on oath in 1893 a fairly clear account of this part of her business, saying that her agents were acquainted with the details. No lease of the estate was made without her sanction, and the plaintiff in this case admitted on oath that the property while in her hands in one way or another increased in value by at least 25 per cent. The evidence clearly shows her to have been, in spite of lack of education, a woman of character and capacity.

The terms of the deed attacked are remarkably simple and clear. They have all the appearance of genuineness. She declared in the only way possible that she, as an honest and religious woman, executed this deed of transfer in performance of a promise she had previously given to the Pandas when on a pilgrimage of her own and that she was doing so for the salvation of her husband, his family and herself. She seems to have taken every precaution that there should be no possibility of doubt as to the reality and legality of the transaction and as to the value of the property of which she was so disposing. This deed, according to the first argument presented to us on behalf of the successful plaintiff, is one which the Hindu Law does not permit under any circumstances. I am bound to say that nothing surprises me more than the contrast between the veneration with which these pious acts for the welfare of a departed soul are regarded by the Hindu community and the vehemence and determination with which they are attacked by individual members of that community. The plaintiff in this case is himself a Hindu and would presumably suggest to, if not inculcate upon, the members of his own family the very conduct which he asks us as a matter of general Hindu Law to declare to be invalid. If he cares to know my opinion, conduct of this kind seems to me more calculated than anything else to discourage the carrying out in practice of the precepts which the Hindu community teaches. The attempt has hopelessly failed. To my mind the law is well-settled, and if it had not been so earnestly argued by Dr. Sapru for the respondent, I should have said it was absolutely unarguable. Whether it is necessary to establish that the intention of the donor was to confer spiritual benefit upon the soul of the departed, or whether it is sufficient in given circumstances that the object of the deed itself is shown to be religious (the latter proposition seems to have been laid down by the Privy Council when they used the word "or" in the passage which has already been referred to) does not matter in this case, because the lady clearly put the benefit to her husband's soul and the salvation of the other members of his family before her own. In my opinion the matter is as clearly settled as anything can be by a consistent course of authority from 1861 when the case already referred to was decided by the Privy Council and reported in 8 Moore Indian Appeals [Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavaly Vencata Narterramaph (1)] down to the recent decision in 1915 by Mr. Justice Mookerji, reported as Khub Lal Singh v. Ayodhya Misser (2). It so happens that the last decision was delivered
